4. A winning throw. [niche, Fr. a ludicrous trick.]

Come, seven's the main,
Cries Ganymede; the usual trick
Seven, slur a six, eleven a nick. Prior.

NICK.* n. s. An evil spirit of the waters, in the northern mythology of elder times; and in later transferred to the devil himself, by the English, with the addition of old. Butler, Spence, and others have pretended that Old Nick is derived from Nicholas Machiavel, the Florentine politician of infamous memory; and that "as cunning or as wicked as Old Nick," first referring to his character, afterwards was applied to the father of evil. But the evil being was called Old Nick long before Machiavel was born. Nocca or Nicken was a deity of the waters, which the ancient Danes and Germans worshipped; whom they represented as appearing in a monstrous shape, presaging shipwreck and death, and strangling persons that were drowning. See Keysler's Antiq. Septentr. p. 261. where Keysler suggests the Germ. neigen, signifying, as the Latin necare, to kill; and also mentions, as cited in a Belg. Gall. Dictionary, neccer, a spirit of the waters, and necce, to kill. "Neccus, numen malignum aquarium." Verelius, Epit. Hist. Su. Goth. p. 13. "Nikur, bellua aquatica." Dict. Island. Hickes.

Mr. Warburton is of opinion, that this is a blunder of the editors, to suppose the devil was called Old Nick, from Nick Machiavel, who lived in the sixteenth century; whereas they could not but know, that our English writers, before Machiavel's time, used the word Old Nick very commonly to signify the devil; and that it came from our Saxon ancestors who called him old Nicka. The Goths, I will add, called the devil Nidhog, and the Danes the god of the sea Nocka, and some Nicken. Sheringham de Gentis Angl. Orig. cap. xiv.
Dr. Grey, Notes on Hudibras.

To NICK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hit, to touch luckily; to perform by some slight artifice used at the lucky moment.

Is not the winding up of witness
A nicking more than half the bus'ness? Hudibras.

The just season of doing things must be nick'd, and all accidents improved. L'Estrange.

Take any passion of the soul of man, while it is predominant and afloat, and just in the critical height of it, nick it with some lucky or unlucky word, and you may certainly over-rule it.
South, Serm. ii. 333.

2. To cut in nicks or notches.

His beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire;
And ever as it blaz'd they threw on him
Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair.
My master preaches patience, and the while
His man with scissars nicks him like a fool. Shakspeare.

Breaks watchmen's heads, and chairmen's glasses,
And thence proceeds to nicking sashes. Prior.

3. To suit, as tallies cut in nicks.

Words, nicking and resembling one another, are appliable to different significations. Camden, Rem. Allusions.

4. To defeat or cozen, as at dice; to disappoint by some trick or unexpected turn.

Why should he follow you?
The itch of his affection should not then
Have nick'd his captainship at such a point. Shakspeare.

NI'CKEL.* n. s. A semi-metal, first described by Mr. Cronstadt in the Swedish Memoirs for the years 1751 and 1754. Chambers.

NI'CKER.* n. s. [from nick.] One who watches an opportunity to pilfer, or practise some knavish artifice. A low word.

Did not Pythagoras stop a company of drunken bullies from storming a civil house, by changing the strain of the pipe to the sober spondæus? And yet your modern musicians want art to defend their windows from common nickers.
Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart Scrib.

NI'CKNAME. n. s. [nom de nique, French.] A name given in scoff or contempt; a term of derision; an opprobrious or contemptuous appellation.

The time was when men were had in price for learning; now letters only make men vile. He is upbraidingly called a poet, as if it were a contemptible nickname. B. Jonson.

My mortal enemy hath not only falsely surmised me to be a feigned person, giving me nicknames, but also hath offered large sums of money to corrupt the princes with whom I have been retained. Bacon, Hen. VII.

So long as her tongue was at liberty, there was not a word got from her, but the same nickname in derison. L'Estrange.

To NI'CKNAME. v. a. To call by an opprobrious appellation.

You nickname virtue vice;
For virtue's office never breaks men's troth. Shakspeare.

Less seem these facts which treasons nickname force,
Than such a fear'd ability for more. Denham.

NICOLA'ITAN.* n. s. One of a sect, who, according to ancient writers, taught the lawfulness of lewdness and idolatrous sacrifices; so called from one Nicolas, their founder. By Nicolaitans in Scripture are thought to be meant, in general, lewd and profligate persons, who aim at nothing but their own secular advantage. Bp. Percy.

Thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitans. Rev. ii. 6.

That vile and impure sect of the Nicolaitans.
South, Serm. ix. 168.

*NICO'TIAN. n. s. [French.] Tobacco; first sent into France by Nicot, the maker of the great French dictionary, in the year 1560, when he was embassador leger in Portugal. Cotgrave, Bullokar, and Sherwood. Not now in use.

Your Nicotian is good too.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

NICO'TIAN.* adj. Denoting tobacco.

This gourmand sacrifices whole hecatombs to his paunch, and whiffs himself away in Nicotian incense to the idol of his vain intemperance. Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

To NI'CTATE. v. a. [nicto, Latin.] To wink.

There are several parts peculiar to brutes, which are wanting in man; as the seventh or suspensory muscle of the eye, the nictating membrane, and the strong aponeuroses on the sides of the neck. Ray.

Nicta'tion.* n. s. [nictatio, Lat.] A twinkling of the eye. Cockeram.

Ni'ctitating *Membrane. In anatomy, a thin membrane which covers the eyes of several creatures; defending them without a total obstruction of vision.

The observation may be repeated of the muscle which draws the nictitating membrane over the eye. Its office is in the front of the eye; but its body is lodged in the back part of the globe, where it lies safe, and where it incumbers nothing. Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 9.

Nide. n. s. [nidus, Lat.] A brood: as, a nide of pheasants.

Ni'dget.† n. s. [corrupted from nithing or niding; the opprobrious term with which the man was anciently branded who refused to come to the royal standard in times of exigency. Dr. Johnson. — In colloquial language a nidget is a trifler; and so the old Fr. nigeur, which Cotgrave renders "a fop, a nidget, a trifler;" and we had formerly the substantive nidgeries for fooleries.] A coward; a dastard.

There was one true English word of as great, if not greater force than them all, now out of all use; — it signifieth no more than abject, base-minded, false-hearted, coward, or nidget. Camden, Rem.

Nidi[illegible]ion. n. s. [nidificatio, Lat.] The act of buil[illegible] nests.

Th[illegible], and that method of nidification, doth abundantly answer the creature's occasions. Derham.

Ni'ding.† n. s. [nıðınᵹ, Sax. niding, Su. Goth. a worthless person; from nıð, vileness.] A coward; a dastard; a base fellow.

There was one true English word of as great, if not greater force than them all: — it is niding. For when there was a dangerous rebellion against king William Rufus; and Rochester castle, then the most important and strongest fort of this realm, was stoutly kept against him; after that he had but proclaimed that his subjects should repair thither to his camp, upon no other penalty, but that whoever refused to come should be reputed a niding; they swarmed to him immediately from all sides. Camden, Rem.

He is worthy to be called a niding, one, the pulse of whose soul beats but faintly towards heaven, as having taken but weak impressions of the image of his Maker, who will not run and reach his hand to bear up his temple. Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. p. 229.

Ni'dour.* n. s. [nidor, Lat. nideur, Fr.] Scent; savour.

When the flesh-pots reek, and the uncovered dishes send forth a nidor and hungry smells. Bp. Taylor, Serm. p. 211.

And again, οἱ περὶ τὴν ὕλην δαίμονες — the material demons do strangely gluttonize upon the nidours and blood of sacrifices. Hallywell, Melampron. (1681,) p. 102.

Ni'dorous. adj. [nidoreux, from nidor, Lat.] Resembling the smell or taste of roasted fat.

Incense and nidorous smells, such as of sacrifices, were thought to intoxicate the brain, and to dispose men to devotion; which they may do by a kind of contristation of the spirits, and partly also by heating and exalting them. Bacon.

The signs of the functions of the stomach being depraved, are eructations with the taste of the aliment, acid, nidorose, or fœtid, resembling the taste of rotten eggs. Arbuthnot.

Nidoro'sity. n. s. [from nidorous.] Eructation with the taste of undigested roast-meat.

The cure of this nidorosity is, by vomiting and purging. Floyer on the Humours.

To Ni'dulate. v. n. [nidulor, Lat.] To build a nest. Not in use. Cockeram.

Nidula'tion. n. s. [nidulor, Lat.] The time of remaining in the nest.

The ground of this popular practice might be the common opinion concerning the virtue prognostick of these birds; as also, the natural regard they have unto the winds, and they unto them again; more especially remarking in the time of their nidulation, and bringing forth their young. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Niece. n. s. [niece, niepce, French; neptis, Latin.] The daughter of a brother or sister.

My niece Plantagenet,
Led in the hand of her kind aunt of Gloster.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

While he thus his niece bestows,
About our isle he builds a wall. Waller.

Ni'fle.* n. s. [nifle, Norm. Fr. a thing of no value.] A trifle. Yet used in Lancashire.

He served them with nifles and with fables. Chaucer, Sompn. Tale.

Ni'ggard. n. s. [niuggr, Icelandick.] A miser; a curmudgeon; a sordid, avaricious, parsimonious fellow.

Then let thy bed be turned from fine gravel to weeds or mud.
Let some unjust niggards make weres to spoil thy beauty.
Sidney.

Be not a niggard of your speech, Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Serve him as a grudging master,
As a penurious niggard of his wealth. Milton.

Be niggards of advice on no pretence;
For the worst avarice is that of sense. Pope.

Ni'ggard. adj.

1. Sordid; avaricious; parsimonious.

One she found
With all the gifts of bounteous nature crown'd,
Of gentle blood; but one whose niggard fate
Had set him far below her high estate. Dryden.

2. Sparing; wary.

Most free of question, but to our demands
Niggard in his reply. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

To Ni'ggard. v. a. [from the noun.] To stint; to supply sparingly.

The deep of night is crept upon our talk,
And nature must obey necessity;
Which we will niggard with a little rest. Shakspeare.

Ni'ggardise.* n. s. [from niggard.] Niggardliness; avarice.

For he, whose daies in wilfull woe are worne,
The grace of his Creator doth despise,
That will not use his gifts for thanklesse nigardise.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. viii. 15.

The niggardise and miserable wretchedness of the stewards will not afford it. Favour, Antiq. Tr. over Novelty, (1619,) p. 516.

'Twere pity thou by niggardise should'st thrive,
Whose wealth by waxing craveth to be spent;
For which thou of the wisest shall be shent,
Like to some rich churl hoarding up his pelf,
Both to wrong others, and to starve himself.
Drayton, Legend of Matilda.

Ni'ggardish.† adj. [from niggard.] Having some disposition to avarice. Barret, Alv. 1580.

Ni'ggardliness.† n. s. [from niggardly.] Avarice; sordid parsimony.

Oh damnable niggardliness of vain men, that shames the Gospel, and loses Heaven! Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

Ni'ggardly. adj. [from niggard.]

1. Avaricious; sordidly parsimonious.

Where the owner of the house will be bountiful, it is not for the steward to be niggardly. Bp. Hall.

Love a penurious god, very niggardly of his opportunities, must be watched like a hard-hearted treasurer. Dryden.

Why are we so niggardly to stop at one fifth? Why do we not raise it one full moiety, and double our money; Locke.

Providence, not niggardly but wise,
Here lavishly bestows, and there denies,
That by each other's virtues we may rise. Granville.

Tiberius was noted for his niggardly temper; he used only to give to his attendants their diet. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Sparing; wary.

I know your mind, and I will satisfy it; neither will I do it like a niggardly answerer, going no farther than the bounds of the question. Sidney.

NI'GGARDLY. adv. Sparingly; parsimoniously.

I have long loved her, followed her, ingross'd opportunities to meet her, feed every slight occasion that could but niggardly give me sight of her. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

NI'GGARDNESS.† n. s. [from niggard.] Avarice; sordid parsimony.

All preparations, both for food and lodging, such as would make one detest niggardness, it is so sluttish a vice. Sidney.

Against him that is a niggard of his meat the whole city shall murmur; and the testimonies of his niggardness shall not be doubted of. Ecclus. xxi 24

NI'GGARDSHIP.* n. s. [from niggard.] Avarice. Not in use. Huloet, and Barret.

This was but misery and wretched niggardship in a man of such honour. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 193.

NI'GGARDY.* n. s. Niggardness. Obsolete.

Disdeigneth all covetise,
And hateth all nigardie. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

To NI'GGLE.* v. n. [probably from the Fr. niger, to trifle, to play the fool. Cotgrave.] To play with; to trifle with.

Take heed, daughter,
You niggle not with your conscience, and religion,
In styling him an innocent, from your fear
And shame to accuse yourself. Massinger, Emp. of the East.

NIGH.† prep. [newha, Goth. neah, neh, Sax. And so nee in old Eng.] At no great distance from.

They shone
Stars distant, but nigh hand seem'd other worlds.
Milton, P. L.

Nigh this recess, with terrour they survey,
Where death maintains his dread tyrannick sway. Garth.

NIGH. adv.

There be a sort of birds that fly only in the night, called from thence nightbirds and nightravens, which are afraid of light, as an enemy to spy, to assault, or betray them.
Hammond, Works, iv. 658.

NI'GHTBORN.* adj. [night and born.] Produced in darkness.

And in his mercy did his power oppose
'Gainst Errour's night-born children. Mir. for Mag. p. 784.

My solemn nightborn adjuration hear;
Hear, and I'll raise thy spirit from the dust,
While the stars gaze on this enchantment new.
Young, Night Th. 9.

NIGHTBRA'WLER. n. s. [night and brawler.] One who raises disturbances in the night.

You unlace your reputation,
And spend your rich opinion for the name
Of a nightbrawler. Shakspeare, Othello.

NI'GHTCAP. n. s. [night and cap.] A cap worn in bed, or in undress.

The rabblement houted, and clapt their chopt hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

Great mountains have a perception of the disposition of the air to tempests sooner than the vallies below; and therefore they say in Wales, when certain hills have their night-cap on, they mean mischief. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

How did the humbled swain detest
His prickly beard and hairy breast!
His night-cap border'd round with lace,
Could give no softness to his face. Swift.

NI'GHTCROW. n. s. [night and crow, nycticorax, Lat.] A bird that cries in the night.

The owl shriek'd at thy birth, an evil sign;
The night-crow cry'd, a boding luckless time. Shakspeare.

NI'GHTDEW. n. s. [night and dew.] Dew that wets the ground in the night.

All things are hush'd, as nature's self lay dead,
The mountains seem to nod their drowsy head;
The little birds in dreams their songs repeat,
And sleeping flowers beneath the night-dew sweat;
E'en lust and envy sleep. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

NI'GHTDOG. n. s. [night and dog.] A dog that hunts in the night. Used by deer-stealers.

When night-dogs run, all sorts of deer are chased. Shakspeare.

In a dun night-gown of his own loose skin. Pope.

NI'GHTHAG. n. s. [night and hag.] Witch supposed to wander in the night.

Nor uglier follows the night-hag, when called
In secret, riding through the air she comes
Lur'd with the smell of infant-blood, to dance
With Lapland witches. Milton, P. L.

NI'GHTINGALE.† n. s. [Sax. nihtegale; from night, and galan, to sing. In Chaucer, this bird is said to crie and gale. See the second sense of To GALE.]

1. A small bird that sings in the night with remarkable melody; philomel.

I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren. Shakspeare.

Although the wezon, throttle, and tongue, be the instruments of voice, and by their agitations concur in those delightful modulations, yet cannot we assign the cause unto any particular formation, and I perceive the nightingale hath some disadvantage in the tongue. Brown.

Thus the wise nightingale that leaves her home,
Pursuing constantly the chearful spring,
To foreign groves does her old musick bring. Waller.

2. A word of endearment.

My nightingale!
We'll beat them to their beds. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

NI'GHTISH.* adj. [from night.] Belonging to the night; attached to the night.

When hawks shall dread the silly fowl,
And men esteem the nightish owl. Turberville, Sonn. (1567)

NI'GHTLY.† adj. [from night. Sax. nihtlic.] Done by night; acting by night; happening by night.

May the stars and shining moon attend
Your nightly sports, as you vouchsafe to tell
What nymphs they were who mortal forms excel. Dryden.

Soon as the flocks shook off the nightly dews,
Two swains, whom love kept wakeful and the muse,
Pour'd o'er the whit'ning vale their fleecy care. Pope.

NI'GHTLY. adv. [from night.]

1. By night.

Let all things suffer,
Ere we will eat our meal in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of those terrible dreams
That shake us nightly. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Thee, Sion! and the flowers brooks beneath,
That wash thy hallow'd feet, and warbling flow,
Nightly I visit. Milton, P. L.

2. Every night.

Soon as the evening shades prevail,
The moon takes up the wondrous tale,
And nightly to the list'ning earth
Repeats the story of her birth. Addison, Spect.

NI'GHTMAN. n. s. [night and man.] One who carries away ordure in the night.

NI'GHTMARE.† n. s. [night, and according to Temple, mara, a spirit that, in the northern mythology, was related to torment or suffocate sleepers. Su. Goth. mara, a spectre of the night; maere, Germ. one of the fates; from marren, to disturb. Serenius. Ihre is very doubtful as to the origin of this word. Some consider it as the plural of mai, a maid; an appellation of the fates. Our common people call the night-mare, witch-riding: the French coquemare, with a similar allusion.] A morbid oppression in the night, resembling the pressure or weight upon the breast.

Saint Withold footed thrice the would,
He met the nightmare, and her name he told;
Bid her alight, and her troth plight. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The forerunners of an apoplexy are, dulness, drowsiness, vertigoes, tremblings, oppressions in sleep, and night-mares, Arbuthnot on Aliments.

NI'GHTPIECE. n. s. [night and piece.] A picture so coloured as to be supposed seen by candle light; not by the light of the day.

He hung a great part of the wall with night-pieces, that seemed to show themselves by the candles which were lighted up; and were so inflamed by the sun-shine which fell upon them, that I could scarce forbear crying out fire. Addison.

NI'GHTRAIL.† n. s. [night and reȝl, Saxon, a gown or robe.] A loose cover thrown over the dress at night.

To survey
Embroider'd petticoats; and, sickness feign'd,
That your nightrails of forty pounds a-piece
Might be seen with envy of the visitants.
Massinger, City Madam.

An antiquary will scorn to mention a pinner or night-rail; but will talk as gravely as a father of the church on the vitta and peplus. Addison on Medals.

NIGHTRA'VEN. n. s. [night and raven; nycticorax.] A bird supposed of ill omen, that cries loud in the night.

The ill-fac'd owl, death's dreadful messenger,
The hoarse night-raven, trump of doleful drere. Spenser.
I pray his bad voice bode no mischief:
I had as lief have heard the night-raven,
Come what plague would have come after it. Shakspeare.

To NILL. v. a. [from ne will; nillan, Saxon.] Not to will; to refuse; to reject.

Certes, said he, I nill thine offer'd grace,
Ne to be made so happy do intend;
Another bliss before mine eyes I place,
Another happiness, another end. Spenser.
In all affections she concurreth still;
If now, with man and wife to will and nill
The self same things, a note of concord be,
I know no couple better can agree. B. Jonson, Epigram.

To NILL.* v. n. To be unwilling; not to agree.

Your father hath consented
That you shall be my wife; your dowry 'greed on;
And will you, nill you, I will marry you.
Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames
Into her scornful eyes. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
You have dancing shoes
With nimble soles. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.
His offering soon propitious fire from heaven,
Consum'd with nimble glance and grateful steam;
The others not, for his was not sincere. Milton, P. L.
Through the mid seas the nimble pinnace sails
Aloof from Crete before the northern gales. Pope.

NI'MBLENESS. n. s. [from nimble.] Quickness; activity; speed; agility; readiness; dexterity; celerity; expedition; swiftness.

The hounds were straight uncoupled, and ere long the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.

Himself shewing at one instant both steadiness and nimbleness. Sidney.

All things are therefore partakers of God; they are his offspring, his influence is in them, and the personal wisdom of God is for that very cause said to excel in nimbleness or agility, to pierce into all intellectual, pure, and subtile spirits, to go through all, and to reach unto every thing. Hooker.

We, lying still,
Are full of rest, defence, and nimbleness. Shakspeare.

Ovid ranged over all Parnassus with great nimbleness and agility; but as he did not much care for the toil requisite to climb the upper part of the hill, he was generally roving about the bottom. Addison, Guardian.

NI'MBLESS.† n. s. Nimbleness.

Seemed those little angels did uphold
The cloth of state, and on their purpled wings
Did beare the pendants through their nimblesse bold.
Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 29.

NI'MBLE-WITTED. adj. [nimble and wit.] Quick; eager to speak.

Sir Nicholas Bacon, when a certain nimble-witted counsellor at the bar, who was forward to speak, did interrupt him often, said unto him, There is a great difference betwixt you and me; a pain to me to speak, and a pain to you to hold your peace. Bacon.

The dean was so shabby and look'd like a ninny,
That the captain suppos'd he was curate. Swift.

NI'NNYHAMMER. n. s. [from ninny.] A simpleton.

Have you no more manners than to rail at Hocus, that has saved that clod-pated, numskulled, ninny hammer of yours from ruin, and all his family? Arbuthnot, John Bull.

To NIP. v. a. [nijpen, Teut.]

1. To pinch off with the nails, to bite with the teeth.

In oranges and lemons, the nipping of their rind giveth out their smell more. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. To cut off by any slight means.

The small shoots that extract the sap of the most leading branches, must be nipt off. Mortimer.

3. To blast; to destroy before full growth.

This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls as I do. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

A flower doth spread and die,
Thou would'st extend me to some good,
Before I were by frost's extremity nipt in the bud. Herbert.

His delivery now proves,
Abortive, as the first born bloom of spring,
Nipt with the lagging rear of winter's frost. Milton, S. A.

Had he not been nipped in the bud, he might have made a formidable figure in his own works among posterity. Addison.

From such encouragement it is easy to guess to what perfection I might have brought this work, had it not been nipt in the bud. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

4. To pinch as frost.

The air bites shrewdly, it is very cold.—
It is a nipping and an eager air. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

When isicles hang by the wall,
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail,
When blood is nipt, and ways be foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl. Shakspeare, Love's L. Lost.

5. To vex, to bite.

And sharp remorse his heart did prick and nip,
That drops of blood thence like a well did play. Spenser.

6. To satirise; to ridicule; to taunt sarcastically.

But the right gentle mind would bite his lip
To hear the javel so good men to nip. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Quick wits commonly be in desire new-fangled; in purpose unconstant; bold with any person; busy in every matter; soothing such as be present, nipping any that is absent. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

NIP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A pinch with the nails or teeth.

I am sharply taunted, yea, sometimes with pinches, nips, and bobs. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

2. A small cut.

What this a sleeve? 'tis like a demicannon;
What up and down carv'd like an apple-tart?
Here's snip, and nip, and cut, and slish, and slash,
Like to a censer in a barber's shop. Shakspeare.

3. A blast.

So hasty fruits and too ambitious flowers,
Scorning the midwifry of ripening show'rs,
In spite of frosts, spring from the unwilling earth,
But find a nip untimely as their birth. Stepney.

4. A taunt, a sarcasm.

NI'PPER. n. s. [from nip.] A satirist. Out of use.

Ready backbiters, sore nippers, and spiteful reporters privily of good men. Ascham.

In most other birds there is only one gland, in which are divers little cells ending in two or three larger cells, lying under the nipple of the oil bag. Derham Physico-Theol.

NI'PPLEWORT. n. s. [Lampsana.] A weed.

NIS.* [ne is, Sax. nis.] Is not. Obsolete.

Leave me those hills, where harbrough nis to see. Spenser, Shep. Cal. June.

NISI PRIUS. n. s. [In law.] A judicial writ, which lieth in case where the inquest is panelled and returned before the justices of the bank; the one party or the other making petition to have this writ for the ease of the country. It is directed to the sheriff, commanding that he cause the men impanelled to come before the justices in the same county, for the determining of the cause there, except it be so difficult that it need great deliberation: in which case, it is sent again to the bank. It is so called from the first words of the writ nisi apud talem locum prius venerint, whereby it appeareth, that justices of assizes and justices of nisi prius differ. So that justices of nisi prius must be one of them before whom the cause is depending in the bench, with some other good men of the county associated to him. Cowel.

NIT. n. s. [hnitu, Saxon.] The egg of a louse, or small animal.

The whame, or burrel-fly, is vexatious to horses in summer, not by stinging them, but only by their bombylious noise, or tickling them in sticking their nits, or eggs, on the hair. Derham, Physico-Theol.

NI'TENCY. n. s. [nitentia, Latin.]

1. Lustre; clear brightness.

2. [From the Latin, nitor.] Endeavour; spring to expand itself.

The atoms of fire accelerate the motion of these particles; from which acceleration their spring, or endeavour outward, will be augmented; that is, those zones will have a strong nitency to fly wider open. Boyle.

NI'THING. n. s. [or niding; see NIDING.] A coward, dastard, poltroon.

NI'TID.† adj. [nitidus, Latin.]

1. Bright; shining; lustrous.

We restore old pieces of dirty gold to a clean and nitid yellow, by putting them into fire and aqua fortis, which take off the adventitious filth. Boyle on Colours.

2. Applied to persons, gay, spruce, fine.

Amongst these doth the nitid spark spend out his time: this is the gallant's day! Reeve, God's Plea for Nineveh, (1657.)

NI'TRE. n. s. [nitre, Fr. nitrum, Latin.]

The salt which we know at this time, under the name of nitre or salt-petre, is a crystalline pellucid, but somewhat whitish substance, of an acrid and bitterish taste, impressing a peculiar sense of coldness upon the tongue. This salt, though it affords, by means of fire, an acid spirit capable of dissolving almost every thing, yet manifests no sign of its containing any acid at all in its crude state. Nitre is of the number of those salts which are naturally blended in imperceptible particles in earths, stones, and other fossil substances, as the particles of metals are in their ores: it is sometimes however found pure, in form of an efflorescence, either on its ores or on the surface of old walls; these efflorescences dissolved in proper water, shooting into regular and proper crystals of nitre. The earth from which nitre is made, both in Persia and the East-Indies, is a kind of yellowish marl found in the bare cliffs of the sides of hills exposed to the northern and eastern winds, and never in any other situation. The natrum or nitre of the ancients, is a genuine, native, and pure salt, extremely different from our nitre, and from all other native salts; being a fixed alkali plainly of the nature of those made by fire from vegetables, yet being capable of a regular crystallization, which those salts are not. It is found on or very near the surface of the earth, in thin flat cakes, spungy, light, and friable; and when pure, of a pale brownish white colour. In Scripture we find that the salt called nitre would ferment with vinegar, and had an abstersive quality, properties which perfectly agree with this salt, but not with saltpetre, as do many different qualities ascribed to it by the ancients. Hill on Fossils.

Some tumultuous cloud,
Instinct with fire and nitre, hurried him. Milton, P. L.
Some steep their seed, and some in cauldrons boil,
With vigorous nitre and with lees of oil. Dryden.

NITRO'SITY.* n. s. [nitrosité, Fr.] Quality of nitre. Not in use. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

NI'TROUS. adj. [nitreux, Fr. from nitre.] Impregnated with nitre; consisting of nitre.

Earth and water, mingled by the heat of the sun, gather nitrous fatness more than either of them have severally. Bacon.

The northern air being more fully charged with those particles supposed nitrous, which are the aliment of fire, is fittest to maintain the vital heat in that activity which is sufficient to move such an unwieldy bulk with due celerity. Ray.

He to quench his drought so much inclin'd,
May snowy fields and nitrous pastures find,
Meet stores of cold so greedily pursu'd,
And be refresh'd with never-wasting food. Blackmore.

NI'TRY. adj. [from nitre.] Nitrous.

Winter my theme confines; whose nitry wind
Shall crust the slabby mire, and kennels bind. Gay.

NI'TTILY. adv. [from nitty.] Lousily.

One Bell was put to death at Tyburn for moving a new rebellion; he was a man nittily needy, and therefore adventrous. Hayward.

NI'TTY.† adj. [from nit.]

1. Abounding with the eggs of lice. Huloet.

I'll know the poor, egregious nitty rascal. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

2. An epithet of contempt, perhaps from nitid.

O dapper, rare, compleat, sweet nittie youth! Marston, Sat. iii. (1598.)

NI'VAL. adj. [nivalis, Latin.] Abounding with snow. Dict.

NI'VEOUS. adj. [niveus, Latin.] Snowy; resembling snow.

Cinabar becomes red by the acid exhalation of sulphur, which otherways presents a pure and niveous white. Brown.

NI'ZY.† n. s. [from niais. Dr. Johnson. — Whence the Fr. nice, in a contemptuous sense. Kelham mentions the Norm. Fr. nessi, an idiot. A learned writer notices the Heb. nibzeh, a word of reproach, to express the utmost contempt of any man's person; and he says, "if it be considered, that the b of the ancients had a very soft pronunciation in some cases, in all probability the word still lives in our language, and is the same with nisey." Harris on the 53. Chap. of Isaiah, p. 102. It may be, however, of the same origin with zany. See ZANY.] A dunce; a simpleton. A low word.

True critics laugh, and bid the trifling nizy
Go read Quintilian. Anon.

NO. adv. [na, Saxon.]

1. The word of refusal: contrary to yea or yes.

Our courteous Antony,
Whom ne'er the word of no, woman heard speak,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast. Shakspeare.
Henceforth my wooing mind shall be exprest,
In russet yeas and honest kersy noes. Shakspeare.

If you will not consider these things now, the time will shortly come when you shall consider them whether you will or no. Calamy, Serm.

2. The word of denial, opposite to concession or affirmation.

I think it would not sort amiss, to handle the question, whether a war for the propagation of the Christian faith, without another cause of hostility, be lawful or no, and in what cases? Bacon.

3. It sometimes confirms a foregoing negative.

My name's Macbeth: —
— The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear. —
— No, nor more fearful. Shakspeare.
Never more
This hand shall combat on the crooked shore:
No; let the Grecian powers, opprest in fight,
Unpity'd perish in their tyrant's sight. Dryden, Homer.

4. It sometimes strengthens a following negative; no not, not even.

No not the bow which so adorns the skies,
So glorious is, or boasts so many dies. Waller.

No. adj.

1. Not any; none.

Let there be no strife between me and thee. Gen. xiii. 8.

Some dire misfortune to portend,
No enemy can match a friend. Swift.

Woman and fool are two hard things to hit,
For true no meaning puzzles more than wit. Pope.

No wit to flatter left of all his store
No fool to laugh at, which he valued more. Pope.

No weeping orphan saw his father's stores,
Our shrines irradiate, or imblaze the floors. Pope.

Our bard
No common object to your sight displays. Pope.

Poor Edwin was no vulgar boy. Beattie.

2. It seems an adjective in these phrases, no longer, no more, no where; though sometimes it may be so commodiously changed to not, that it seems an adverb; as, the days are yet no shorter.

When we saw that they were no where, we came to Samuel. 1 Sam. x. 14.

In vain I reach my feeble hands to join
In sweet embraces; ah! no longer thine. Dryden.

3. No one: none; not any one.

No one who doeth good to those only from whom he expects to receive good, can ever be fully satisfied of his own sincerity. Smalridge.

To NOBI'LITATE.† v. a. [nobilito, Lat.] To ennoble: to make noble. Bullokar, and Sherwood.

NOBILITA'TION.* n. s. [from nobilitate.] The act of ennobling.

Both the prerogatives and rights of the Divine Majesty are concerned, and also the perfection, nobilitation, and salvation of the souls of men. More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 2.

NOBI'LITY. n. s. [nobilitas, Lat.]

1. Antiquity of family joined with splendour.

When I took up Boccace unawares, I fell on the same argument of preferring virtue to nobility of blood, and titles, in the story of Sigismunda. Dryden.

Long galleries of ancestors
Challenge nor wonder, or esteem from me:
Virtue alone is true nobility. Dryden.

2. Rank or dignity of several degrees, conferred by sovereigns. Nobility in England is extended to five ranks; duke, marquis, earl, viscount, baron.

3. The persons of high rank; the persons who are exalted above the commons.

It is a purpos'd thing,
To curb the will of the nobility. Shakspeare, Coriol.

4. Dignity; grandeur; greatness.

Though she hated Amphialus, yet the nobility of her courage prevailed over it; and she desired he might be pardoned that youthful errour; considering the reputation he had to be the best knight in the world; so as hereafter he governed himself, as one remembering his fault. Sidney.

But ah, my muse, I would thou hadst facility
To work my goddess so by thy invention,
On me to cast those eyes where shine nobility. Sidney.

Base men, being in love, have then a nobility in their natures more than is native to them. Shakspeare, Othello.

They thought it great their sovereign to controul,
And nam'd their pride, nobility of soul. Dryden.

NO'BLE.† adj. [noble, French; nobilis, Latin.]

No'bly. adv. [from noble.]

1. Of ancient and splendid extraction.

Only a second laurel did adorn
His collegue Catulus, though nobly born:
He shar'd the pride of the triumphal bay,
But Marius won the glory of the day. Dryden.

2. Greatly; illustriously; magnanimously.

Did he not straight the two delinquents tear,
That were the slaves of drink and thralls of sleep?
Was not that nobly done? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

This fate he could have 'scap'd, but would not lose
Honour for life, but rather nobly chose
Death from their fears, than safety from his own. Denham.

3. Grandly; splendidly.

There could not have been a more magnificent design than that of Trajan's pillar. Where could an emperor's ashes have been so nobly lodged, as in the midst of his metropolis, and on the top of so exalted a monument? Addison on Italy.

No'body. n. s. [no and body.] No one; not any one.

This is the tune of our catch played by the picture of nobody. Shakspeare, Tempest.

It fell to Coke's turn, for whom nobody cared, to be made the sacrifice; and he was out of his office. Clarendon.

If in company you offer something for a jest, and nobody seconds you on your own laughter, you may condemn their taste, and appeal to better judgements; but in the mean time you make a very indifferent figure. Swift, Miscell.

No'cent.✝ adj. [nocens, Latin.]

1. Guilty; criminal.

The earl of Devonshire being interested in the blood of York, that was rather feared than nocent; yet as one, that might be the object of other plots, remained prisoner in the Tower during the king's life. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Secretly Catesby resorts to you — to enquire whether it were lawful, considering the necessity of the time, to undertake an enterprise for the advancement of the Catholick religion, though it were likely that, among many that were nocent, some should perish that were innocent.
Ld. Northampton, Proceed. against Garnet, (1606,) A a. 2.

God made us naked and innocent, yet we presently made ourselves nocent. Hewyt, Serm. Chr. Day, p. 74. (1658.)

A great scruple arose even in the minds of the most confident assassinates, whether the nocent and the innocent might be destroyed and perish together.
Bp. Pearson, Serm. (Nov. 5. 1673,) p. 21.

2. Hurtful; mischievous.

His head the midst, well-stor'd with subtile wiles:
Not yet in horrid shade, or dismal den,
Nor nocent yet; but on the grassy herb,

Noli me tangere may be planted among your flowers for the rarity of it. Mortimer.

NOLI'TION. n. s. [nolitio, Latin.] Unwillingness opposed to volition.

Proper acts of the will are, volition, nolition, choice, resolution, and command, in relation to subordinate faculties. Hale.

NO'MAD ✱ } NO'MADICK. } adj. [nomade, French; νομὰς, νομαδικὸς, Greek, from νέμω, to feed.] Rude; savage; having no fixed abode, and shifting it for the convenience of pasturage.

We are glad to find these last and most authentick observations on this nomad tribe, thus brought together into one view. On the Journal for Russia, Brit. Crit. (1798.)

NO'MANCY. n. s. [nomance, nomancie, Fr. nomen, Latin, and μαντεία, Greek.] The art of divining the fates of persons by the letters that form their names. Dict.

NO'MBLES. n. s. The entrails of a deer. See NUMBLES.

NOME. ✱ n. s. [νομὸς, Greek, from νέμω, to feed, and to distribute.]

1. Province; tract of country, an Egyptian government or division.

He told his brethren, that they and his aged father should dwell near him, and he placed them with Pharaoh's own shepherds in the Heliopolitan nome, which bordered on the Red Sea, and of which the metropolis was On, or Heliopolis.— This country, being situated some leagues distant from the bank of the Nile, was not subject to the annual inundations of that river, and therefore was a more proper place of residence for shepherds and the pasturage of flocks, than any other of the Egyptian nomes. Maurice, Hist. of Hindostan, vol. ii. (1798.)

2. [from nomen, Lat.] In algebra, a simple quantity affixed to some other quantity by its proper sign.

NOMENCLA'TOR.✝ n. s. [Lat. nomenclateur, Fr.] One who calls things or persons by their proper names.

They were driven to have their nomenclators, controllers, or remembrancers, to tell them the names of their servants, and people about them, so many they were. Hakewill on Providence, p. 421.

What, will Cupid turn nomenclator, and cry them? B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

There were a set of men in old Rome, called by the name of nomenclators, that is, in English, men who could call every one by his name. Addison, Guardian, No. 107.

Are envy, pride, avarice, and ambition, such ill nomenclators that they cannot furnish appellations for their owners? Swift.

NOMENCLA'TRESS.✱ n. s. A female nomenclator.

I have a wife who is a nomenclatress, and will be ready on any occasion to attend the ladies. Addison, Guard. No. 107.

NOMENCLA'TURE. n. s. [nomenclature, Fr. nomenclatura, Latin.]

1. The act of naming.

To say where notions cannot fitly be reconciled, that there wanteth a term or nomenclature for it, is but a shift of ignorance. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. A vocabulary; a dictionary.

The watry plantations fall not under that nomenclature of Adam, which unto terrestrious animals assigned a name appropriate unto their natures. Brown.

NO'MINAL. adj. [nominalis, Lat.] Referring to names rather than to things; not real; titular.

Profound in all the nominal
And real ways beyond them all. Hudibras.

The nominal definition, or derivation of the word is not sufficient to describe the nature of it. Pearson.

The nominal essence of gold is that complex idea the word gold stands for, as a body yellow, of a certain weight, malleable, fusible, and fixed. But the real essence is the constitution of the insensible parts of that body on which those qualities depend. Locke.

Were these people as anxious for the doctrines essential to the church of England, as they are for the nominal distinction of adhering to its interests. Addison.

NO'MINAL. ✱ } NO'MINALIST. } n. s. One of the scholastical philosophers, who maintained that words or names only were to be attended to in all logical disquisitions. "They were called nominals, because they held universals to be not res, but nomina." Bp. Morton's Discharge, &c. 1633, p. 121.

Commentators on Peter Lombard, Scotists, Thomists, Reals, Nominals. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 677.

Superficial men, who cannot get beyond the title of nominals. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

The faction now of the nominalists and realists being very rife and frequent in the university. A. Wood, Ann. Univ. Ox. under the year 1341.

To NO'MINALIZE.✻ v. a. [nominalis, Lat.] To convert into a noun.

Verbs, (where else circumlocution must be used,) nominalized, do admit one termination familiarly. Instruct. for Orat. (1682,) p. 32.

NO'MINALLY.✝ adv. [from nominal.] By name; with regard to a name; titularly.

This, nominally no tax, in reality comprehends all taxes. Burke, Observ. on the State of the Nation, (1769)

To NO'MINATE. v. a. [nomino, Lat.]

1. To name; to mention by name.

Suddenly to nominate them all,
It is impossible. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

One lady, I may civilly spare to nominate, for her sex's sake, whom he termed the spider of the court. Wotton.

2. To entitle; to call.

Aread, old father, why of late
Didst thou behight me, born of English blood,
Whom all a fairy's son doen nominate. Spenser.

3. To set down; to appoint by name.

If you repay me not on such a day, let the forfeit
Be nominated for an equal pound
Of your fair flesh to be cut off. Shakspeare.

Never having intended, never designed any heir in that sense, we cannot expect he should nominate or appoint any person to it. Locke.

NO'MINATELY.✻ adv. [from nominate.] Particularly.

Locus religiosus is that which is assigned to some offices of religion, and nominately where the body of a dead person hath been buried. Spelman.

NOMINA'TION.✝ n. s. [nomination, French; from nominate.]

1. The act of mentioning by name.

The forty-one immediate electors of the duke must be all of several families, and of them twenty-five at least concur to this nomination. Wotton.

Hammond was named to be of the assembly of divines; his invincible loyalty to his prince, and obedience to his mother, the church, not being so valid arguments against his nomination, as the repute of his learning and virtue were on the other part, to have some title to him. Fell, Life of Hammond.

2. The power of appointing.

The nomination of persons to places being so principal and inseparable a flower of his crown, he would reserve to himself. Clarendon.

In England the king has the nomination of an archbishop; and after nomination, he sends a congé d' elire to the dean and chapter, to elect the person elected by him. Ayliffe.

3. Denomination.

First, shew your nominacion. —
Of my name to make declaracion,
Without any dissimulacion,
I am called Friendship. Wever, Morality of Lusty Juventus.

Divers characters are given to several persons, by which they are distinguished from all others of the same common nomination. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 3.

NO'MINATIVE.✝ adj. [in grammar, nominatif, Fr.] The epithet of the case that primarily designates the name of any thing, and is called right, in opposition to the other cases called oblique.

The nominative case cometh before the verb. Lilly.

He dares not thinke a thought that the nominative case governes not the verb. Overbury.

NO'MINATOR.✻ n. s. [nominator, Lat.] One that names or appoints to a place.

While Tiberius Gracchus was creating new consuls, one of the nominators suddenly fell down dead: however, Gracchus proceeded and finished the creation. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 52.

NOMINE'E.✻ n. s. A person nominated to any place or office.

NOMOTHE'TICAL.✻ adj. [νομοθέτης, Gr. a legislator; from νόμος, a law, and τίθημι, to establish.] Legislative.

Suppose a monarch, who hath a supreme nomothetical power to make a law, and when it is made and written, should lay it up in "archivis imperii," so that it be not known nor published to his subjects; it is manifest that such a law neither is nor can be obliging till he takes care for the publishing of it. Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 126.

NON. adv. [Latin.] Not. It is never used separately, but sometimes prefixed to words with a negative power.

Since you to non-regardance cast my faith,
Live you the marble-breasted tyrant still. Shakspeare.

Behold also there a lay non-residency of the rich, which in times of peace, too much neglecting their habitations, may seem to have provoked God to neglect them. Holyday.

A mere inclination to matters of duty, men reckon a willing of that thing; when they are justly charged with an actual non-performance of what the law requires. South.

For an account at large of bishop Sanderson's last judgement concerning God's concurrence or non-concurrence with the actions of men, and the positive entity of sins of commission, I refer you to his letters. Pierce.

The third sort of agreement or disagreement in our ideas, which the perception of the mind is employed about, is co-existence, or non-existence in the same subject. Locke.

It is not a non-act which introduces a custom, a custom being a common usage. Ayliffe, Parergon.

In the imperial chamber this answer is not admitted, viz. I do not belive it as the matter is alleged. And the reason of this non-admission is, its great uncertainty. Ayliffe.

An apparitor came to the church, and informed the parson, that he must pay the tenths to such a man; and the bishop certified the ecclesiastical court under his seal on the non-payment of them, that he refused to pay them. Ayliffe.

The non-appearance of persons to support the united sense of both houses of parliament, can never be construed as a general diffidence of being able to support the charge against the patent and patentee. Swift.

This may be accounted for by the turbulence of passions upon the various and surprising turns of good and evil fortune, in a long evening at play; the mind being wholly taken up, and the consequence of non-attention so fatal. Swift.

NO'NAGE.✝ n. s. [non and age; nonage, old Fr. "minorité," used in the eleventh century, according to Lacombe.] Minority; time of life before legal maturity.

In him there is a hope of government;
Which in his nonage, counsel under him,
And in his full and ripen'd years, himself
Shall govern well. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Be love but there, let poor six years
Be pos'd with the maturest fears
Man trembles at, we straight shall find
Love knows no nonage nor the mind. Crashaw.

We have a mistaken apprehension of antiquity, calling that so which in truth is the world's nonage. Glanville.

'Tis necessary that men should first be out of their nonage, before they can attain to an actual use of this principle: and withal, that they should be ready to exert and exercise their faculties. Wilkins.

Those charters were not avoidable for the king's nonage; and if there could have been any such pretence, that alone would not avoid them. Hale.

After Chaucer there was a Spenser, a Harrington, a Fairfax, before Waller and Denham were in being; and our numbers were in their nonage till these last appeared. Dryden.

In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves, and lift their infant head,
Indulge their childhood, and the nursling spare. Dryden.

NO'NAGED.✻ adj. [from nonage.] Not arrived at due maturity; being in nonage.

Shade not that dial night will blind too soon;
My nonag'd day already points to noon;
How simple is my suit, how small my boon!
Quarles, Embl. iii. 13.

The muse's love appears
In nonag'd youth, as in the length of years.
Browne, Brit. Past. i. 5.

NONATTE'NDANCE.* n. s. [non and attendance.] The not giving personal attendance.

Nonattendance in former parliaments ought to be a bar against the choice of men who have been guilty of it.
Ld. Halifax.

NONCE.† n. s. [The original of this word is uncertain; Skinner imagines it to come from own or once; or from nutz, German, need or use: Junius derives it less probably from noiance; to do for the nonce being, according to him, to do it merely for mischief. Dr. Johnson. — Tyrwhitt and Ritson suppose it to be from the Latin pro-nunc; viz. for the nunc, i. e. for the now, the occasion; the Lat. nunc being corrupted into nonce; and Mr. Tyrwhitt adds that "so anon came from the Latin ad-nunc." But anon has a very different origin. The etymology, which Serenius gives of nonce, seems most probable: "Icel. nenna, nenning, arbitrium, will, inclination; Su. Goth nenna, nennas, à se impetrare posse;" i. e. to prevail with one's self to do a thing, to have a mind to do it: an etymology, to which Dr. Jamieson had also inclined before he saw the observation of Serenius. Our word was formerly written nones and nanes; as nones by R. of Gloucester and Chaucer, and nanes in the old Romance of Ywaine and Gawin. This is in favour of the northern etymon. Mr. Chalmers, however, has supposed it to be from the Fr. nonce, a nuncio, the prelate whom the pope used to send for his special purposes, for the nonce; noncier, in the Rom. de la Rose, for annoncer.] Purpose; intent; design. Not now in use.

I saw a wolf
Nursing two whelps; I saw her little ones
In wanton dalliance the teat to crave,
While she her neck wreath'd from them for the nonce.
Spenser.

They used at first to fume the fish in a house built for the nonce.
Carew.

When in your motion you are hot,
And that he calls for drink, I'll have prepar'd him
A chalice for the nonce. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Such a light and metall'd dance,
Saw you never;
And they lead men for the nonce,
That turn round like grindle-stones. B. Jonson.

A voider for the nonce,
I wrong the devil should I pick their bones. Cleaveland.

Coming ten times for the nonce,
I never yet could see it flow but once. Cotton.

NONCOMPLI'ANCE.* n. s. [non and compliance.] Refusal to comply with any request.

The first act of non-compliance sendeth you to gaol again.
Ld. Halifax.

NONCONFO'RMING.* adj. [non and conform.] Not joining in the established religion.

A non-conforming minister of eminence. Burke.

NONCONFO'RMIST.† n. s. [non and conformist.]

1. One who refuses to comply with others.

Is it just, is it handsome, that I should be a non-conformist either in the publick sorrow or joy? Barrow, vol. iii. S. 9.

2. One who refuses to join in the established worship.

On his death-bed he declared himself a non-conformist, and had a fanatick preacher to be his spiritual guide. Swift.

NONCONFO'RMITY. n. s. [non and conformity.]

1. Refusal of compliance.

The will of our Maker, whether discovered by reason or revelation, carries the highest authority with it; a conformity or nonconformity to it, determines their actions to be morally good or evil. Watts, Logick.

2. Refusal to join in the established religion.

Since the liturgy, rites, and ceremonies of our church, are so much struck at, and all upon a plea of conscience, it will concern us to examine the force of this plea, which our adversaries are still setting up as the grand pillar and butteress of nonconformity. South, Serm.

The lady will plead the toleration which allows her nonconformity in this particular. Addison, Spect.

NONDESCRI'PT.* adj. [non and descript, old Fr.] Undescribed: used also as a substantive for any natural production that has not been described. A modern word.

NONE. adj. [ne one; nan, ne ane, Saxon.]

1. Not one: used both of persons and things.

Ye shall flee when none pursueth you. Lev. xxvi. 17.

That killing power is none of thine,
I gave it to thy voice and eyes:
Thy sweets, thy graces, all are mine;
Thou art my star, shin'st in my skies. Carew.

That fowl which is none of the lightest, can easily move itself up and down in the air without stirring its wings. Wilkins.

Another, which is none of the least advantages of hope is, its great efficacy in preserving us from setting too high a value on present enjoyments. Addison, Spect.

2. Not any: no was in this sense used anciently before a consonant, and none before a vowel.

Six days shall ye gather it, but on the sabbath there shall be none. Exod. xvi. 26.

Thy life shall hang in doubt, and thou shalt have none assurance of this life. Deut. xxviii. 66.

Before the deluge, the air was calm; none of those tumultuary motions of vapours, which the mountains and winds cause in ours. Burnet, Theory.

The most glaring and notorious passages, are none of the finest. Felton on the Classicks.

3. Not other.

This is none other but the house of God, and the gate of heaven. Gen. xxviii. 17.

4. None of sometimes signifies only emphatically nothing.

My people would not hearken to my voice: and Israel would none of me. Ps. lxxxi. 11.

5. None is always used when it relates to a substantive going before; as, we shall have no wine: wine we shall have none.

6. None seems originally to have signified according to its derivation, not one, and therefore to have had no plural, but it is now used plurally.

Terms of peace were none

In at this gate none pass
The vigilance here plac'd, but such as come
Well known from Heav'n. Milton, P. L.

Nor think though men were none
That heaven would want spectators, God want praise.
Milton, P. L.

NONE'NTITY. n. s. [non and entity.]

1. Nonexistence; the negation of being.

When they say nothing from nothing, they must understand it as excluding all causes. In which sense it is most evidently true; being equivalent to this proposition, that nothing can make itself, or, nothing cannot bring its no-self out of nonentity into something. Bentley.

2. A thing not existing.

There was no such thing as rendering evil for evil, when evil was truly a nonentity, and no where to be found. South.

We have heard, and think it pity that your inquisitive genius should not be better employed, than in looking after that theological nonentity. Arbuthnot and Pope.

NONES.* n. s. [from nonus, Lat.]

1. Certain days in each month of the old Roman calendar.

The nones were so called, because they reckoned nine days from them to the ides. Kennet, Rom. Antiq.

2. Prayers formerly so called. See the etymology of NOON.

NO'NESUCH.* n. s. The name of an apple.

NONEXI'STENCE.† n. s. [non and existence.]

1. Inexistence; negation of being.

How uncomfortable would it be to lie down in a temporary state of non-existence! How delightful is it to think that there is a world of spirits; that we are surrounded with intelligent living beings, rather than in a lonely, unconscious universe, a wilderness of matter! A. Baxter on the Soul, ii. 189.

2. The thing not existing.

A method of many writers, which depreciates the esteem of miracles is, to salve not only real verities, but also non-existences. Brown, Vulg. Err.

NONJU'RING. adj. [non and juro, Latin.] Belonging to those who will not swear allegiance to the Hanoverian family.

This objection was offered me by a very pious, learned, and worthy gentleman of the nonjuring party. Swift.

NONJU'ROR.† n. s. [from non and juror.] One who, conceiving James II. unjustly deposed, refuses to swear allegiance to those who have succeeded him.

The nonconformists were then exactly upon the same foot with our nonjurors now, whom we double-tax, forbid their conventicles, and keep under hatches, without thinking ourselves possessed with a persecuting spirit, because we know they want nothing but the power to ruin us. Swift, Exam No. 36.

NONNA'TURALS. n. s. [non naturalia.] Physicians reckon these to be six, viz. air, meat and drink, sleep and watching, motion and rest, retention and excretion, and the passions of the mind.

The six nonnaturals are such as neither naturally constitutive, nor merely destructive, do preserve or destroy according unto circumstances. Brown.

NON-OBSTA'NTE.* [Latin; non-obstant, old French.] Notwithstanding any thing to the contrary: a law phrase.

I ask no dispensation now
To falsify a tear, or sigh, or vow;
I do not sue from thee to draw
A non-obstante on nature's law. Donne, Poems, p. 28.

If in any one point, never so small, we may set aside, or supersede, the rule delivered down to us from the beginning with our non-obstantes and notwithstandings. Biblioth. Bibl. i. 264.

NONPARE'IL. n. s. [non and pareil, French.]

1. Excellence unequalled.

My lord and master loves you: O such love
Could be but recompens'd tho' you were crown'd
The nonpareil of beauty. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

2. A kind of apple.

3. Printers' letter of a small size, on which small Bibles and Common Prayers are printed.

NONPARE'IL.* adj. Peerless. Bullokar.

In the mean time the most nonpareil beauty of the world, beauteous knowledge, standeth unregarded, or cloistered up in mere speculation. Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. (1654,) p. 204.

NO'NPLUS. n. s. [non and plus, Latin.] Puzzle; inability to say or do more. A low word.

Let it seem never so strange and impossible, the nonplus of my reason will yield a fairer opportunity to my faith. South.

One or two rules, on which their conclusions depend, in most men have governed all their thoughts: take these from them and they are at a loss, and their understanding is perfectly at a nonplus. Locke.

Such an artist did not begin the matter at a venture, and when put to a nonplus, pause and hesitate which way he should proceed; but he had first in his comprehensive intellect a compleat idea of the whole organical body. Bentley.

To NO'NPLUS. v. a. [from the noun.] To confound; to puzzle; to put to a stand; to stop.

Nor is the composition of our own bodies the only wonder; we are as much nonplust by the most contemptible worm and plant. Glanville, Scepsis.

His parts were so accomplisht,
That right or wrong he ne'er was nonplust. Hudibras.

That sin that is a pitch beyond all those, must needs be such an one as must nonplus the devil himself to proceed farther. South.

What, you are confounded, and stand mute?
Somewhat nonplust to hear you deny your name. Dryden.

Tom has been eloquent for half an hour together, when he has been nonplused by Mr. Dry's desiring him to tell what it was that he endeavoured to prove. Spectator.

NONPROFI'CIENT.* n. s. [non and proficient.] One who has made no progress in the art or study in which he is engaged.

God hath in nature given every man inclination to some one particular calling; which if he follow, he excells; if he cross, he proves a non-proficient. Bp. Hall, Holy Observ.

NONRE'SIDENCE. n. s. [non and residence.] Failure of residence.

If the character of persons chosen into the church had been regarded, there would be fewer complaints of nonresidence. Swift.

NONRE'SIDENT. n. s. [non and resident.] One who neglects to live at the proper place.

As to nonresidents, there are not ten clergymen in the kingdom who can be termed nonresidents. Swift.

NONRE'SIDENT.* adj. Not residing in the proper place.

Her household is her charge; her care to that makes her seldom non-resident. Overbury, Charact.

NONRESI'STANCE.† n. s. [non and resistance.] The principle of not opposing the king; ready obedience to a superiour.

If the doctor had pretended to have stated the particular bounds and limits of non-resistance, he would have been much to blame. Sir Joseph Jekyll at Sacheverel's Trial.

NONRESI'STANT.* adj. Not resisting; unopposing.

This is that Œdipus, whose wisdom can reconcile inconsistent opposites, and teach passive obedience, and non-resistant principles to despise government, and to fly in the face of sovereign authority. Arbuthnot.

NO'NSENSE.† n. s. [non and sense. This word is said by P. Heylin, in 1656, to be new and uncouth. But Mr. Malone observes that Anthony Stafford, in his Meditations printed in 1611, uses it; writing it, however, non-sense, apparently as a new word. It continued to be so written, I may add, long after; and had the accent on sense; as in an Elegy on the death of Donne, at the end of his Poems. This word is not in Shakspeare.]

1. Unmeaning or ungrammatical language.

Till understood, all tales,
Like nonsense are not true nor false. Hudibras.

Many copies dispersed gathering new faults, I saw more nonsense than I could have crammed into it. Dryden.

This nonsense got into all the following editions by a mistake of the stage editors. Pope on Shakspeare.

2. Trifles; things of no importance. A low word.

What's the world to him?
'Tis nonsense all. Thomson.

NONSE'NSICAL. adj. [from nonsense.] Unmeaning; foolish.

They had produced many other inept combinations, or aggregate forms of particular things, and nonsensical systems of the whole. Ray on the Creation.

Nonse'nsically.* adv. [from nonsensical.] Foolishly; ridiculously.

Never was any thing more nonsensically pleasant. L'Estrange, Tr. of Quevedo.

Nonse'nsicalness. n. s. [from nonsensical.] Ungrammatical jargon; foolish absurdity.

Nonse'nsitive.* n. s. [non and sensitive.] One that wants sense or perception.

Whatsoever we preach of contentedness in want, no precepts can so gain upon nature as to make her a nonsensitive. Feltham. Res. i. 18.

Nonso'lvency.* n. s. [non and solvency.] Inability to pay.

Probably some of the purchasers may be content to live cheap in a worse country, rather than be at the charge of exchange, and agencies, and perhaps of nonsolvencies in absence, if they let their lands too high. Swift, Proposal for paying the National Debt.

Nonso'lvent. adj. [non and solvent.] Who cannot pay his debts.

Nonsolu'tion. n. s. [non and solution.] Failure of solution.

Athenæus instances enigmatical propositions, and the forfeitures and rewards upon their solution and nonsolution. Broome.

Nonspa'ring. adj. [non and sparing.] Merciless; all destroying.

Is't I expose
Those tender limbs of thine to the event
Of the nonsparing war. Shakspeare, All's Well.

No'nsuit.* n. s. [non and suit.] Stoppage of a suit at law; a renouncing of the suit by the plaintiff, most commonly upon the discovery of some errour or defect, when the matter is so far proceeded in, as the jury is ready at the bar to deliver their verdict. Cowel.

If the plaintiff is guilty of delays against the rules of law in any stage of the action, a nonsuit is entered. Blackstone.

To No'nsuit. v. a. [non and suit.] To deprive of the benefit of a legal process, for some failure in the management.

The addresses of both houses of parliament, the council, and the declarations of most counties and corporations, are laid aside as of no weight, and the whole kingdom of Ireland nonsuited, in default of appearance. Swift.

Noo'dle. n. s. [from noddle or noddy.] A fool; a simpleton.

Nook.† n. s. [from een hoeck, Teut. angulus. In some parts of the north of England, this word is pronounced newk. Nook-shotten, which Shakspeare uses for shooting out into nooks, is, in some places, according to Mr. Pegge, a modern application to a wall in a bevel, and not at right angles with another wall.] A corner; a covert made by an angle or intersection.

Safely in harbour,
Is the king's ship, in the deep nook, where once
Thou call'dst me up. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Buy a foggy and a dirty farm,
In that nook-shotten isle of Albion. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Thus entred she the light-excluding cave,
And through it sought some inmost nooke to save
The gold. Chapman.

The savages were driven out of their great Ards, into a little nook of land near the river of Strangford; where they now possess a little territory. Davies.

Meander, who is said so intricate to be,
Hath not so many turns, nor crankling nooks as she. Drayton.

Unsphere
The spirit of Plato, to unfold
What worlds or what vast regions hold
The immortal mind, that hath forsook
Her mansion in this fleshly nook. Milton, Il Pens.

Ithuriel and Zephon,
Search through this garden, leave unsearch'd no nook. Milton, P. L.

A third form'd within the ground
A various mold; and from the boiling cells,
By strange conveyance fill'd each hollow nook. Milton, P. L.

NOON.† n. s. [non, Saxon; nawn, Welsh; none, Erse; supposed to be derived from nona, Latin, the ninth hour, at which their cœna or chief meal was eaten: whence the other nations called the time of their dinner or chief meal, though earlier in the day, by the same name. Dr. Johnson. — The ninth hour, or noon, (Sax. non,) was three o'clock in the afternoon. Thus the nones, a name given to certain prayers, began at twelve, and ended at three in the afternoon, which was called high noon. See Gloss. to Wicliffe, edit. Baber. Serenius says that the ancient Icelanders divided the day into four intervals, of which noon, so called, was that from twelve till three; "quo durante," he adds, "post sesquihoram nimirùm à meridie elapsam prandium sumebant."]

1. The middle hour of the day; twelve; the time when the sun is in the meridian; midday.

Fetch forth the stocks, there shall he sit till noon. —
Till noon! till night, my lord. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The day already half his race had run,
And summon'd him to due repast at noon. Dryden.

If I turn my eyes at noon towards the sun, I cannot avoid the ideas which the light or sun produces in me. Locke.

In days of poverty his heart was light:
He sung his hymns at morning, noon, and night. Harte.

2. It is taken for midnight.

Full before him at the noon of night,
He saw a quire of ladies. Dryden.

Noon. adj. Meridional.

How oft the noon, how oft the midnight bell,
That iron tongue of death! with solemn knell,
On folly's errands, as we vainly roam,
Knocks at our hearts, and finds our thoughts from home. Young.

Noo'nday. n. s. [noon and day.] Midday.

The bird of night did sit,
Ev'n at noonday, upon the market place,
Hooting and shrieking. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

The dimness of our intellectual eyes, Aristotle fitly compares to those of an owl at noonday. Boyle.

Noo'nday. adj. Meridional.

The scorching sun was mounted high,
In all its lustre to the noonday sky. Addison, Ovid.

Noo'ning.† n. s. [from noon.]

1. Repose at noon; noon-rest; sleeping in the daytime. Huloet.

2. Repast at noon.

If he be disposed to take a whet, a nooning, an evening's draught, or a bottle after midnight, he goes to the club, and finds a knot of friends to his mind. Addison, Spect. No. 72.

Noo'nstead.* n. s. [noon and stead.] The station of the sun at noon.

The free sun,
That tow'rds the noonstead half his course had run.
Drayton, David and Goliah.

Dew which there had tarried long,
And on the ranker grass till past the noonsted hong.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

Whilst the main tree, still found
Upright and sound,
By this sun's noonsteds made
So great, his body now alone projects the shade.
B. Jonson, Underwoods.

NOO'NTIDE. n. s. [noon and tide.] Midday; time of noon.

Sorrow breaks seasons and reposing hours,
Makes the night morning, and the noontide night. Shakspeare.

NOO'NTIDE. adj. Meridional.

Phaeton hath tumbled from his car,
And made an evening at the noontide prick. Shakspeare.
All things in best order to invite Noontide repast, or afternoon's repose. Milton, P. L.
We expect the morning red in vain;
'Tis hid in vapours, or obscur'd in rain.
The noontide yellow we in vain require;
'Tis black in storm, or red in lightning fire. Prior.

NOOSE. n. s. [nosada, entangled; a word found in the glosses of Lipsius. Lye.] A running knot, which the more it is drawn binds the closer.

Can'st thou with a weak angle strike the whale?
Catch with a hook, or with a noose inthral? Sandys.
Where the hangman does dispose,
To special friend the knot of noose. Hudibras.
They run their necks into a noose,
They'd break 'em after, to break loose. Hudibras.
Falsely he falls into some dangerous noose,
And then as meanly labours to get loose. Dryden.
A rope and a noose are no jesting matters. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

To NOOSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To tie in a noose; to catch; to entrap.

The sin is woven with threads of different sizes, yet the least of them strong enough to noose and entrap us.
Gov. of the Tongue, p. 40.

NOPE.✝ n. s. [rubicilla.] A kind of bird called a bulfinch or redtail.

By that warbling bird the woodlark place we then,
The redsparrow, the nope, the redbreast, and the wren.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

NOR. conjunct. [ne or.]

1. A particle marking the second or subsequent branch of a negative proposition: correlative to neither or not.

I neither love, nor fear thee. Shakspeare.
Neither love will twine, nor hay. Marvel.

2. Two negatives are sometimes joined, but not according to the propriety of our present language, though rightly in the Saxon.

Mine eyes,
Which I have darted at thee, hurt thee not;
Nor, I am sure there is no force in eyes
That can do hurt. Shakspeare, As you like it.

3. Neither is sometimes included in nor, but not elegantly.

Before her gates hill wolves and lions lay;
Which with her virtuous drugs so tame she made,
That wolfe, nor lion would one man invade. Chapman.
Pow'r, disgrace, nor death could ought divert
Thy glorious tongue, thus to reveal thy heart. Daniel.
Simois nor Xanthus shall be wanting there;
A new Achilles shall in arms appear. Dryden.

4. Nor is in poetry used in the first branch for neither.

Idle nymph, I pray thee, be
Modest, and not follow me,
I nor love myself nor thee. B. Jonson.
Nor did they not perceive their evil plight, —
Or the fierce pains not feel. Milton, P. L.
But how perplext, alas! is human fate!
I whom nor avarice, nor pleasures move;
Yet must myself be made a slave to love. Walsh.

NO'RMAL.* adj. [norma, Lat.] In geometry, perpendicular.

NO'RMAN.* n. s. [old French; low Lat. Normanus; from the Sax. noɲð and man.] At first, a Norwegian; then, a native of Normandy.

This people, as before I have said of the Danes, are not otherwise to be accompted of, than most anciently to have been of the German nation. Their habitation was in Norway, so called from the northern situation thereof; and themselves Northmen, now vulgarly Normans, upon like reason.
Verstegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 6.
The Normans had been a late colony from Norway and Denmark, where the Scalds had arrived to the highest pitch of credit before Rollo's expedition into France.
Bp. Percy, Ess. on the Anc. Minstrels.

NO'RMAN.* adj. Denoting persons, customs, or the language of Normandy.

Great verily was the glory of our tongue, before the Norman conquest, in this; that the old English could express most aptly all the conceits of the mind in their own tongue, without borrowing from any. Camden, Rem. Languages.
A monk of very little eloquence, but who had a smattering of the Norman language.
Tyrrwhit, Ess. on the Lang. of Chaucer.

NO'RROY.* n. s. [nord and roy, Fr.] The title of the third of the three kings at arms, or provincial heralds.

She that from Naples
Can have no note; unless the sun were post,
The man i' th' moon's too slow. Shakspeare, Tempest.

In suits of favour, the first coming ought to take little place; so far forth consideration may be had of his trust, that if intelligence of the matter could not otherwise have been had but by him, advantage be not taken of the note, but the party left to his other means, and in some sort recompensed for his discovery. Bacon.

6. State of being observed.

Small matters come with great commendation, because they are continually in use and in note: whereas the occasion of any great virtue cometh but on festivals. Bacon.

7. Tune; voice; harmonick or melodious sound.

These are the notes wherewith are drawn from the hearts of the multitude so many sighs; with these tunes their minds are exasperated against the lawful guides and governors of their souls. Hooker.

I now must change those notes to tragick. Milton, P. L.

You that can tune your sounding string so well,
Of ladies' beauties and of love to tell;
Once change your note, and let your lute report
The justest grief that ever touch'd the court. Waller.
One common note on either lyre did strike,
And knaves and fools we both abhorr'd alike. Dryden.

8. Single sound in musick.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony!
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony,
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

9. Short hint; small paper; memorial register.

He will'd me
In heedfull'st reservation to bestow them,
As notes whose faculties inclusive were,
More than they were in note. Shakspeare.
In the body's prison so she lies,
As through the body's windows she must look,
Her divers pow'rs of sense to exercise,
By gath'ring notes out of the world's great book. Davies.

10. Abbreviation; symbol; musical character.

Contract it into a narrow compass by short notes and abbreviations. Baker on Learning.

11. A small letter.

A hollow cane within her hand she brought,
But in the concave had inclos'd a note. Dryden.

12. A written paper.

I cannot get over the prejudice of taking some little offence at the clergy, for perpetually reading their sermons; perhaps my frequent hearing of foreigners, who never make use of notes, may have added to my disgust. Swift.

13. A paper given in confession of a debt.

His note will go farther than my bond. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

14. Explanatory annotation.

The best writers have been perplexed with notes, and obscured with illustrations. Felton on the Classicks.

This put him upon a close application to his studies. He kept much at home, and writ notes upon Homer and Plautus. Law.

To NOTE. ✝ v. a. [noto, Latin; noter, French.]

1. To mark; to distinguish. This is the primary meaning, but is overpassed by Dr. Johnson.

Can we once imagine that Christ's body so miraculously made, now clad with incorruption and inriched with glory, was ever afflicted with malady, or enfeebled with infirmity, or noted with deformity? Walsall, Life of Christ, (1615,) sign. B. 2.

2. To observe; to remark; to heed; to attend; to take notice of.

The fool hath much pined away. —
No more of that, I have noted it well. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
If much you note him,
You shall offend him. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
Some things may in passing be fitly noted. Hammond.
I began to note
The stormy Hyades, the rainy goat. Addison, Ovid.
Wandring from clime to clime, observant stray'd,
Their manners noted, and their states survey'd. Pope.

3. To deliver; to set down.

Saint Augustin speaking of devout men, noteth how they daily frequented the church, how attentive ear they gave unto the lessons and chapters read. Hooker.

Note it in a book, that it may be for ever and ever. Is. xxx. 8.

4. To charge with a crime: with of or for.

Sine veste Dianam, agrees better with Livia, who had the fame of chastity, than with either of the Julia's, who were both noted of incontinency. Dryden.

5. [In musick.] To set down the notes of a tune.

To NOTE.* v. a. [hnitan, Sax. hniota, Icel.] To push, or strike, with the horns, as a bull or ram. North. Ray, and Grose.

NO'TEBOOK. n. s. [note and book.] A book in which notes and memorandums are set down.

Cassius all his faults observ'd;
Set in a notebook, learn'd, and conn'd by rote,
To cast into my teeth. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

NO'TED. part. adj. [from note.] Remarkable; eminent; celebrated.

A noted chymist procured a privilege, that none but he should vend a spirit. Boyle.

Justinian's laws, if we may believe a noted author, have not the force of laws in France or Holland. Baker.

NO'TEDLY.* adv. [from noted.] With observation; with notice.

Do you remember what you said of the duke? — Most notedly, sir. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

NO'TEDNESS.* n. s. [from noted.] Conspicuousness; state of being remarkable.

To attain the so criminally courted notedness.
Boyle, Style of H. Script. p. 186.

NO'TELESS.* adj. [note and less.] Not attracting notice.

A courtezan,
Let her walk saintlike, noteless, and unknown,
Yet she's betray'd by some trick of her own.
Decker, Hon Whore, P. ii.

NO'TER.† n. s. [from note.]

1. He who takes notice.

2. An annotator.

Postellus, and the noter upon him, Severtius, have much admired this manner of section.
Gregory, Posthum. (1650,) p. 308.

NOTEWO'RTHY.* adj. [note and worthy.] Deserving notice.

Think on thy Protheus, when thou haply seest
Some rare note-worthy object in thy travel.
Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Verona.

Two are especially note-worthy in their steeples, being small but exceeding high towers. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 129.

NO'THING. n. s. [no and thing; nathing, Scottish.]

1. Negation of being; nonentity; universal negation: opposed to something.

It is most certain, that there never could be nothing. For, if there could have been an instant, wherein there was nothing, then either nothing made something, or something made itself; and so was, and acted, before it was. But if there never could be nothing; then there is, and was, a being of necessity, without any beginning. Grew.

We do not create the world from nothing and by nothing; we assert an eternal God to have been the efficient cause of it. Bentley.

This nothing is taken either in a vulgar or philosophical sense; so we say there is nothing in the cup in a vulgar sense, when we mean there is no liquor in it; but we cannot say there is nothing in the cup, in a strict philosophical sense, while there is air in it. Watts, Logick.

2. Nonexistence.

Mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

3. Not any thing; no particular thing.

There shall nothing die. Exod. ix. 4.

Yet had his aspect nothing of severe,
But such a face as promis'd him sincere. Dryden.

Philosophy wholly speculative, is barren and produces nothing but vain ideas. Dryden, Don Seb.

Nothing at all was done, while any thing remained undone.
Addison on the War.

4. No other thing.

Nothing but a steady resolution brought to practice; God's grace used, his commandments obeyed, and his pardon begged; nothing but this will intitle you to God's acceptance.
Wake, Prep. for Death.

Words are made to declare something; where they are, by those who pretend to instruct, otherwise used, they conceal indeed something; but that which they conceal, is nothing but the ignorance, error, or sophistry of the talker, for there is, in truth, nothing else under them. Locke.

5. No quantity or degree.

The report which the troops of horse make, would add nothing of courage to their fellows. Clarendon.

6. No importance; no use; no value.

The outward shew of churches, draws the rude people to the reverencing and frequenting thereof, whatever some of our late too nice fools say, there is nothing in the seemly form of the church. Spenser on Ireland.

Behold, ye are of nothing, and your work of naught. Isaiah.

7. No possession or fortune.

A most homely shepherd; a man that from very nothing is grown into an unspeakable estate. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

8. No difficulty; no trouble.

We are industrious to preserve our bodies from slavery, but we make nothing of suffering our souls to be slaves to our lusts.
Ray on the Creation.

9. A thing of no proportion.

The charge of making the ground, and otherwise is great, but nothing to the profit. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

10. Trifle; something of no consideration or importance.

I had rather have one scratch my head i' th' sun,
When the alarum were struck, than idly sit
To hear my nothings monster'd. Shakspeare.

My dear nothings, take your leave,
No longer must you me deceive. Crashaw.

'Tis nothing, says the fool; but says the friend,
This nothing, Sir, will bring you to your end.
Do I not see your dropsy-belly swell? Dryden.

That period includes more than a hundred sentences that might be writ to express multiplication of nothings, and all the fatiguing perpetual business of having no business to do.
Pope, Lett.

Narcissus is the glory of his race;
For who does nothing with a better grace? Young.

11. Nothing has a kind of adverbial signification. In no degree; not at all.

Who will make me a liar, and make my speech nothing worth? Job, xxiv. 25.

Auria, nothing dismayed with the greatness of the Turk's fleet, still kept on his course. Knolles, Hist.

NO'THINGNESS.† n. s. [from nothing.]

1. Nihility; nonexistence.

His art did express
A quintessence even from nothingness,
From dull privations, and lean emptiness.
Donne, Poems, p. 36.

Being demolished as to themselves, and turned into a chaos or dark nothingness. More, Conj. Cabb. p. 241.

2. Nothing; thing of no value.

Other stars may have their several virtues and effects; but their marvellous remoteness, and my undiscernible nothingness, may seem to forbid any certain intelligence of their distinct workings upon me. Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 22.

I that am
A nothingness in deed and name,
Did scorn to hurt his forfeit carcass. Hudibras, i. ii.

NO'TICE. n. s. [notice, old French; notitia, Latin.]

1. Remark; heed; observation; regard.

The thing to be regarded in taking notice of a child's miscarriage is, what root it springs from. Locke.

This is done with little notice: very quick the actions of the mind are performed. Locke.

How ready is envy to mingle with the notices which we take of other persons! Watts.

2. Information; intelligence given or received.

I have given him notice, that the duke of Cornwal and his duchess will be here. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

To No'tice.* v. a. [from the noun. Mr. Mason has pretended, that this is a word imported into English conversation from Ireland. So far from its being such an innovation, it is, as Mr. Malone has observed, of great age in our language.] To note; to need; to observe; to regard.

As some do perceive, yea and like it well, they should be so noticed. T. Howard, in Harrington's Nugæ Ant. (about 1608.)

These pieces contain several curious circumstances of Milton's early life, situations, friendships, and connections; which are often so transiently, or implicitly noticed, as to need examination and enlargement. Warton, Pref. to Milton's Sm. Poems.

It is impossible not to notice a strange comment of Mr. Lindsey's. Bp. Horne, Lett. to Dr. Priestley, p. 41.

Notifica'tion. n. s. [notification, Fr. from notify.] Act of making known; representation by marks or symbols.

Four or five torches elevated or depressed out of their order, either in breadth or longways, may, by agreement, give great variety of notifications. Holder on Speech.

To No'tify. v. a. [notifier, Fr. notifico, Latin.] To declare; to make known; to publish.

There are other kind of laws, which notify the will of God. Hooker.

Good and evil operate upon the mind of man, by those respective appellations by which they are notified and conveyed to the mind. South.

This solar month is by civil sanction notified in authentic calendars the chief measure of the year: a kind of standard by which we measure time. Holder.

NO'TION. n. s. [notion, Fr. notio, Latin.]

1. Thought; representation of any thing formed by the mind; idea; image; conception.

Being we are at this time to speak of the proper notion of the church, therefore I shall not look upon it as comprehending any more than the sons of men. Pearson.

The fiction of some beings which are not in nature; second notions, as the logicians call them, has been founded on the conjunction of two natures, which have a real separate being. Dryden, St. of Innocence.

Many actions are punished by law, that are acts of ingratitude; but this is merely accidental to them, as they are such acts; for if they were punished properly under that notion, and upon that account, the punishment would equally reach all actions of the same kind. South.

What hath been generally agreed on, I content myself to assume under the notion of principles, in order to what I have farther to write. Newton, Opticks.

There is nothing made a more common subject of discourse than nature and its laws; and yet few agree in their notions about these words. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

That notion of hunger, cold, sound, colour, thought, wish, or fear, which is in the mind, is called the idea of hunger, cold, sound, wish, &c. Watts, Logick.

2. Sentiment; opinion.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves
Seek them with wandering thoughts and notions vain.
Milton, P. L.

It would be incredible to a man who has never been in France, should one relate the extravagant notion they entertain of themselves, and the mean opinion they have of their neighbours. Addison, Freeholder.

Sensual wits they were, who, it is probable, took pleasure in ridiculing the notion of a life to come. Atterbury.

3. Sense; understanding; intellectual power. This sense is frequent in Shakspeare, but not in use.

His notion weakens, his discernings
Are lethargied. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
So told, as earthly notion can receive. Milton, P. L.

No'tional. adj. [from notion.]

1. Imaginary; ideal; intellectual; subsisting only in idea; visionary; fantastical.

The general and indefinite contemplations and notions, of the elements and their conjugations, of the influences of heaven, are to be set aside, being but notional and ill-limited; and definite axioms are to be drawn out of measured instances. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Happiness, object of that waking dream
Which we call life, mistaking; fugitive theme
Of my pursuing verse, ideal shade,
Notional good, by fancy only made. Prior.

We must be wary, least we ascribe any real subsistence or personality to this nature or chance; for it is merely a notional and imaginary thing; an abstract universal, which is properly nothing; a conception of our own making, occasioned by our reflecting upon the settled course of things; denoting only thus much, that all those bodies move and act according to their essential properties, without any consciousness or intention of so doing. Bentley.

2. Dealing in ideas, not realities.

The most forward notional dictators sit down in a contented ignorance. Glanville, Scepsis.

Notiona'lity.† n. s. [from notional.] Empty, ungrounded opinion. Not now in use.

I aimed at the advance of science, by discrediting empty and talkative notionality. Glanville.

True and manly religion is no cold and comfortless thing; it is not a lukewarm notionality, not a formal and bayardly round of duties, not a dull "temperamentum ad pondus," as they call it; but is lively, vigorous, and sparkling. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

No'tionally. adv. [from notional.] In idea; mentally; in our conception, though not in reality.

The whole rational nature of man consists of two faculties, understanding and will, whether really or notionally distinct, I shall not dispute. Norris, Miscell.

No'tionist.* n. s. [from notion.] One who holds an ungrounded opinion. Not in use.

Content not yourselves with some part of it, that you read, the Gospel, or New Testament, but neglect the Old, as is the practice of some flush notionists. Bp. Hopkins, Expos. of the Lord's Prayer, p. 297.

Notori'ety. n. s. [notorieté, French; from notorious.] Publick knowledge; publick exposure.

We see what a multitude of pagan testimonies may be produced for all those remarkable passages: and indeed of several that more than answer your expectation, as they were not subjects in their own nature so exposed to publick notoriety. Addison on the Chr. Religion.

NOTO'RIOUS. adj. [notorius, Latin; notoire, Fr.] Publickly known; evident to the world; apparent; not hidden. It is commonly used of things known to their disadvantage; whence by those who do not know the true signification of the word, an atrocious crime is called a notorious crime, whether publick or secret.

What need you make such ado in cloaking a matter too notorious. Whitgift.

The goodness of your intercepted packets
You writ to the pope against the king; your goodness,
Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious. Shakspeare.

I shall have law in Ephesus,
To your notorious shame. Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

In the time of king Edward III. the impediments of the conquest of Ireland are notorious. Davies.

This presbyterian man of war congratulates a certain notorious murther, committed by a zealot of his own devotion. White.

We think not fit to condemn the most notorious malefactor before he hath had licence to propose his plea. Fell.

What notorious vice is there that doth not blemish a man's reputation? Tillotson.

The inhabitants of Naples have been always very notorious for leading a life of laziness and pleasure, which arises partly out of the plenty of their country, and partly out of the temper of their climate. Addison on Italy.

The bishops have procured some small advancement of rents; although it be notorious that they do not receive the third penny of the real value. Swift, Miscell.

NOTO'RIOUSLY. adv. [from notorious.] Publickly; evidently; openly.

The exposing himself notoriously, did sometimes change the fortune of the day. Clarendon.

This is notoriously discoverable in some differences of brake or fern. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Ovid tells us, that the cause was notoriously known at Rome, though it be left so obscure to after ages. Dryden.

Should the genius of a nation be more fixed in government, than in morals, learning, and complexion; which do all notoriously vary in every age. Swift.

NOTO'RIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from notorious.] Publick fame; notoriety.

His actions are strong encounters, and for their notoriousness always upon record. Overbury, Charact.

NOTT.* adj. [hnot, Saxon.] Smooth; shorn. Nott sheep, i. e. sheep without horns: Essex. That field is nott, i. e. well tilled: Berkshire. Grose. Hence the adjectives, now obsolete, nott-headed, nott-pated, having the hair cut short; from the "head being like a nut," according to Mr. Tyrwhitt and others. But the Saxon word hnot, is smooth, cropped, shorn.

A notte head hadde he, with a broune visage. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

To NOTT.† v. a. To shear. Dr. Johnson cites this verb on the authority of Ainsworth. It is in the dictionary of Barret in 1580.

He caused — from thenceforth his beard to be notted, and no more shaven, Stowe, Ann. under the Year 1535.

NO'TWHEAT. n. s. [not and wheat.]

Of wheat there are two sorts; French, which is bearded, and requireth the best soil, and notwheat, so termed because it is unbearded, being contented with a meaner earth. Carew.

NOTWITHSTA'NDING. conj. [This word, though in conformity to other writers called here a conjunction, is properly a participial adjective, as it is compounded of not and withstanding, and answers exactly to the Latin non obstante. It is most properly and analogically used in the ablative case absolute with a noun; as, he is rich notwithstanding his loss; it is not so proper to say, he is rich notwithstanding he has lost much; yet this mode of writing is too frequent; Addison has used it: but when a sentence follows, it is more grammatical to insert that; as, he is rich notwithstanding that he has lost much. When notwithstanding is used absolutely, the expression is elliptical, this, or that being understood, as in the following passages of Hooker.]

1. Without hindrance or obstruction from.

Those on whom Christ bestowed miraculous cures, were so transported that their gratitude made them, notwithstanding his prohibition, proclaim the wonders he had done for them. Decay of Chr. Piety.

2. Although. This use is not proper.

A person languishing under an ill habit of body, may lose several ounces of blood, notwithstanding it will weaken him for a time, in order to put a new ferment into the remaining mass, and draw into it fresh supplies. Addison.

3. Nevertheless; however.

They which honour the law as an image of the wisdom of God himself, are notwithstanding to know that the same had an end in Christ. Hooker.

The knowledge is small, which we have on earth concerning things that are done in heaven: notwithstanding this much we know even of saints in heaven, that they pray. Hooker.

He hath a tear for pity, and a hand
Open as day, for melting charity:
Yet notwithstanding, being incens'd, he's flint;
As humourous as winter. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

NO'TUS. n. s. [Latin.] The southwind.

With adverse blast upturns them from the south
Notus, and Afer black with thunderous clouds
From Serraliona. Milton, P. L.

NOVA'TIAN.* n. s. One of a sect, which arose in the third century; so called from Novatus, or Novatianus, contemporaries, who united in asserting that the lapsed, upon no condition whatever, might be received again into the peace and communion of the church; and that second marriages were unlawful. They were great pretenders to sanctity; a sort of puritans.

Novatus, having raised a faction at Carthage, sails to Rome; and there joins with Novatianus, a man after his own heart as well as almost after his own name; (for they are frequently confounded by the Greek writers;) when having jointly spread the infection, their followers were commonly styled Novatians. Christian Antiq. Ind. Hæret.

NOVA'TIANISM.* n. s. The opinions of the Novatians.

I do not tell you, that this author is wont to be impeached of Novatianism. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 303.

NOVA'TION.† n. s. [novation, old French; novatio, Latin.] The introduction of something new.

I shall easily grant, that novations in religion are a main cause of distempers in commonwealths. Abp. Laud, Hist. of his Troubles, ch. 3.

NOVA'TOR. n. s. [Latin.] The introducer of something new.

NO'VEL.† adj. [novel, old French; nouvelle, modern; novellus, Latin.]

1. New; not ancient; not used of old; unusual.

The Presbyterians are exacters of submission to their novel injunctions, before they are stamped with the authority of laws. King Charles.

It is no novel usurpation, but though void of other title, has the prescription of many ages. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Such is the constant strain of this blessed saint, who every where brands the Arian doctrine, as the new, novel, upstart heresy, folly and madness. Waterland.

2. [In the civil law.] Appendant to the code, and of later enaction.

By the novel constitutions, burial may not be denied to any one. Ayliffe, Parergon.

NO'VEL.† n. s. [nouvelle, French.]

1. Novelty.

[They] loving novels, full of affectation,
Receive the manners of each other nation.
Sylvester, Du Bart. 1621.

It is the condition of common people to press into the view of such novels. Comment on Chaucer, (1665,) p. 56.

2. A small tale, generally of love.

To nought more, Thenot, my mind is bent,
Than to hear novels of his devise;
They ben so well thewed, and so wise,
Whatever that good old man bespake.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

Such as the old woman told Psyche in Apuleius, Boccace's novels, and the rest. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 271.

Nothing of a foreign nature; like the trifling novels which Ariosto inserted in his poems. Dryden.

Her mangled fame in barbarous pastime lost,
The coxcomb's novel and the drunkard's toast. Prior.

3. A law annexed to the code.

By the civil law, no one was to be ordained a presbyter till he was thirty-five years of age: though by a later novel it was sufficient, if he was above thirty. Ayliffe.

NO'VELISM.* n. s. [from novel.] Innovation.

The other three [positions] are disciplinarian in the present way of novellism. Sir E. Dering's Speeches, p. 44.

No'velist.† n. s. [from novel.]

1. Innovator; assertor of novelty. In this sense the word was also written noveller.

Telesius, who hath renewed the philosophy of Parmenides, is the best of novelists. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The fathers of this synod were not schismatical, or novelists in the matter of the sabbath. White.

They ought to keep that day, which these novellers teach us to contemn. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 303.

Aristotle rose,
Who nature's secrets to the world did teach,
Yet that great soul our novelists impeach. Denham.

The fooleries of some affected novelist have discredited new discoveries. Glanville, Scepsis.

The abettors and favourers of them he ranks with the Abonites, Argemonites, and Samosaterians, condemn'd hereticks, brands them as novellists of late appearing. Waterland.

2. A writer of news. Not now in use.

My contemporaries the novelists have, for the better spinning out paragraphs, and working down to the end of their columns, a most happy art in saying and unsaying, giving hints of intelligence, and interpretations of indifferent actions, to the great disturbance of the brains of ordinary readers. Tatler, No. 178.

3. A writer of novels, or tales. This is a modern usage of the word.

The best stories of the early and original Italian novelists,— appeared in an English dress, before the close of the reign of Elizabeth. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 487.

Our novelists, like Sam Foote in his farces, often touch upon real characters. Pegge, Anonym. vii. 21.

To No'velize. v. a. [from novel.] To innovate; to change by introducing novelties.

The novelizing spirit of man lives by variety, and the new faces of things. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 25.

M. Wilkinson, not taken out of the depth of divinity, but fitly chosen to discover how affections do stand to be novellized by the mutability of the present times.
Sir E. Dering's Speeches, p. 44.

The Holy Scriptures should be interpreted not by novelizing humourists, but by the primitive fathers and councils.
Archd. Arnway, Tablet of Mod. (1661,) p. 54.

No'velty.† n. s. nouvelté, old French.]

1. Newness; state of being unknown to former times.

They which do that which men of account did before them, are, although they do amiss, yet the less faulty, because they are not the authors of harm: and doing well, their actions are freed from prejudice or novelty. Hooker.

2. Freshness; recentness; newness with respect to a particular person.

Novelty is only in request; and it is dangerous to be aged in any kind of course. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

As religion entertains our speculations with great objects, so it entertains them with new; and novelty is the great parent of pleasure; upon which account it is that men are so much pleased with variety. South.

NOVE'MBER. n. s. [Latin.] The eleventh month of the year, or the ninth reckoned from March, which was, when the Romans named the months, accounted the first.

November is drawn in a garment of changeable green, and black upon his head. Peacham on Drawing.

No'venary. n. s. [novenarius, Lat.] Number of nine; nine collectively.

Ptolemy by parts and numbers implieth climacterical years; is, septenaries and novenaries. Brown.

Looking upon them as in their original differences and combinations, and as selected out of a natural stock of nine quaternions, four novenaries, their nature and differences lie most obvious to be understood. Holder.

Nove'nnial.* adj. [novenus, Lat.] Done every ninth year. Bullokar.

A novennial festival, celebrated by the Bœotians, in honour of Apollo. Potter, Antiq. of Greece, ii. ch. 20.

Nove'rcal. adj. [novercalis, from noverca, Latin.] Having the manner of a stepmother; beseeming a stepmother.

When the whole tribe of birds by incubation, produce their young, it is a wonderful deviation, that some few families should do it in a more novercal way. Derham.

Nought.† n. s. [ne auht, not any thing, Saxon; as therefore we write aught not ought for any thing, we should, according to analogy, write naught not nought for nothing; but a custom has irreversibly prevailed of using naught for bad, and nought for nothing. Dr. Johnson. — This custom originated in the desire of distinguishing, injudiciously conducted. There is indeed no real ground for a distinction; the word naught, in the sense of wicked, being only a figurative signification of naught, nothing; meaning worthless or nothing worth, nothing in point of value or goodness. Nares, Elem. of Orthoepy, p. 300. — The regular deduction of this word, from its original, will warrant the writing it either naught or nought: M. Goth. niwaiht, from ni, the negative particle, and waiht, the smallest thing possible, our whit; and thus the Sax. naþiht, and also noþiht; nauht, and noht. See also Whit.]

1. Not any thing; nothing.

Who cannot see this palpable device?
Yet who so bold, but says he sees it not?
Bad is the world, and it will come to nought,
When such ill dealings must be seen in thought. Shakspeare.

Such smiling rogues as these sooth ev'ry passion:
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With every gale and vary of their masters,
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following. Shakspeare.

We are of nothing, and your work of nought. Is. xli. 24.

Be frustrate all ye stratagems of hell,
And devilish machinations come to nought. Milton, P. R.

2. In no degree. A kind of adverbial signification, which nothing has sometimes.

In young Rinaldo fierce desires he spy'd,
And noble heart, of rest impatient,
To wealth or sovereign power he nought apply'd. Fairfax.

3. To set at Nought. Not to value; to slight; to scorn; to disregard.

Ye have set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof. Prov. i. 25.

No'vice.† n. s. [novice, French; novitius, Latin.] Dr. Johnson. — The word is very old in the French language. Huloet gives our word in the form of nophice, with the Lat. neophitus, a neophyte.]

1. One not acquainted with any thing; a fresh man; one in the rudiments of any knowledge.

Triple-twin'd whore! 'tis thou
Has sold me to this novice. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

You are novices; 'tis a world to see
How tame, when men and women are alone,
A meacock wretch can make the curstest shrew. Shakspeare.

We have novices and apprentices, that the succession of the former employed men do not fail. Bacon.

If any unexperienced young novice happens into the fatal neighbourhood of such pests, presently they are plying his full purse and his empty pate. South.

I am young, a novice in the trade,
The fool of love, unpractis'd to persuade;
And want the soothing arts that catch the fair,
But caught myself lie struggling in the snare.
And she I love, or laughs at all my pain,
Or knows her worth too well, and pays me with disdain. Dryden.

In these experiments I have set down such circumstances by which either the phenomenon might be rendered more conspigueus, or a novice might more easily try them, or by which I did try them only. Newton, Opticks.

2. One who has entered a religious house, but not yet taken the vow; a probationer.

Fran. When you have vow'd, you must not speak with men
But in the presence of the prioress. ——
Luc. Hail, virgin, if you be; as those cheek-roses
Proclaim you are no less! Can you so stead me,
As bring me to the sight of Isabella,
A novice of this place. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Novi'tiate.† n. s. [noviciat, French.]

1. The state of a novice; the time in which the rudiments are learned.

This is so great a masterpiece in sin, that he must have passed his tyrocinium or novitiate in sinning, before he come to this, be he never so quick a proficient. South.

2. The time spent in a religious house, by way of trial, before the vow is taken.

None were admitted into this order, but after a long and laborious noviciate. Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist. i. 1.

3. Once used by Addison, improperly, for a novice.

The abbess had been informed the night before of all that had passed between her noviciate and father Francis. Spectator, No. 164.

Novi'tious.* adj. [novitius, Lat.] Newly invented.

What is now taught by the church of Rome, is, as unwarrantable, so a novitious interpretation. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 9.

No'vity.† n. s. [novitas, Lat.] Newness; novelty.

Some conceive she might not yet be certain, that only man was privileged with speech, and being in the novity of the creation and unexperience of all things, might not be affrighted to hear a serpent speak. Brown.

It remaineth that we stedfastly believe, not only that the heavens and earth and all the host of them were made, and so acknowledge a creation, or an actual and immediate dependence of all things on God; but also that all things were created by the hand of God, in the same manner, and at the same time, which are delivered unto us in the books of Moses by the Spirit of God, and so acknowledge a novity, or no long existence of the creature. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

Noul.† n. s. [hnol, Sax. a top, a head; nol, Germ.] The crown or top of the head; the head itself. See Noddle, and Noll.

Softly, quoth the steward, it lieth all in thy noll,
Both wit and wysdom. Hist. of Beryn, (1524.)
Then came October full of merry glee;
For yet his noule was totty of the must.
Spenser, F. Q. vii. vii. 39.

Nould.† Ne would; would not.

His enemie
Had kindled such coles of displeasure,
That the goodman nould stay his leasure,
But home him hasted with furious heate.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

Noun. n. s. [noun, old French; nomen, Lat.] The name of any thing in grammar.

A noun is the name of a thing, whether substance, mode or relation, which in speech is used to signify the same when there is occasion to affirm or deny any thing about it, or to express any relation it has to any other thing. Clarke.

Thou hast men about thee, that usually talk of a noun and a verb, and such abominable words as no christian ear can endure to hear. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

The boy, who scarce has paid his entrance down,
To his proud pedant, or declin'd a noun. Dryden.

Nou'rice.* n. s. [French, nourrice.] A nurse.

It shall be expedient, that a noble man's son, in his infancye, have with him continuallye onely such as may accustome him, by little and little, to speake pure and elegant Latin: the nourises and other women about him, if it be possible, to do the same. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 16. b.

Cambden! the nourice of antiquitie,
And lanterne unto late succeeding age. Spenser, Ruins of Time.

To Nou'rish. v. a. [nourrir, French; nutrio, Lat.]

1. To encrease or support by food, or aliment of any kind.

He planteth an ash, and the rain doth nourish it. Is. xliv. 14.

Thro' her nourish'd powers enlarg'd by thee,
She springs aloft. Thomson, Summer.

You are to honour, improve, and perfect the spirit that is within you: you are to prepare it for the kingdom of heaven, to nourish it with the love of God, and of virtue, to adorn it with good works, and to make it as holy and heavenly as you can. Law.

2. To support; to maintain.

Whilst I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
I will stir up in England some black storm. Shakspeare.
Him will I follow, and this house forgo
That nourisht me a maid. Chapman.

Pharaoh's daughter took him up, and nourished him for her own son. Acts, vii. 21.

3. To encourage; to foment. Out of use.

What madness was it with such proofs to nourish their contentions, when there were such effectual means to end all controversy? Hooker.

In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion. Shakspeare.

Yet to nourish and advance the early virtue of young persons was his more chosen desire. Fell.

Gorgias hired soldiers, and nourished war continually with the Jews. 2 Mac. x. 14.

4. To train, or educate.

Thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up in the words of faith. 1 Tim. iv. 6.

I travel not, neither do I nourish up young men, nor bring up virgins. Is. xxiii. 4.

5 To promote growth or strength, as food.

In vegetables there is one part more nourishing than another; as grains and roots nourish more than their leaves. Bacon.

To Nou'rish. v. n. To gain nourishment. Unusual.

Fruit trees grow full of moss, which is caused partly by the coldness of the ground, whereby the parts nourish less. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Nou'rish.* n. s. [from the verb.] A nurse. The word, however, in the following passage of Shakspeare has been doubted. Pope, and Warburton, and Ritson, would have it to be marish. Steevens and Malone defend the old reading. Now certainly obsolete.

Athens ——
Was called nourish of philosophers wise.
Lydgate, Trag. of J. Bochas, B. i. c. xii
Our isle be made a nourish of salt tears,
And none but women left to wail the dead.
Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. I.

Nou'rishable.† adj. [from nourish.] Susceptive of nourishment.

These are the bitter herbs, wherewith if we shall eat this passover, we shall find it most wholesome and nourishable unto us to eternal life. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 197.

The chyle is mixed herewith, partly for its better conversion into blood, and partly for its more ready adhesion to all the nourishable parts. Grew, Cosmol.

Nou'risher. n. s. [from nourish.] The person or thing that nourishes.

Sleep, chief nourisher in life's feast. Shakspeare.

A restorer of thy life, and a nourisher of thine old age. Ruth.

Milk warm from the cow is a great nourisher, and a good remedy in consumptions. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Bran and swine's dung laid up together to rot, is a very great nourisher and comforter to a fruit tree. Bacon.

Please to taste
These bounties, which our nourisher hath caus'd
The earth to yield. Milton, P. L.

Nou'rishment. n. s. [nourissement, Fr.]

1. That which is given or received, in order to the support or encrease of growth or strength; food; sustenance; nutriment.

When the nourishment grows unfit to be assimilated, or the central heat grows too feeble to assimilate it, the motion ends in confusion, putrefaction, and death. Newton, Opticks.

2. Nutrition; support of strength.

By temperance taught,
In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence Due nourishment, no gluttonous delight. Milton, P. L.

The limbs are exhausted by what is called an atrophy, and grow lean and thin by a defect of nourishment, occasioned by an inordinate scorbutick or erratick heat. Blackmore.

3. Sustentation; supply of things needful.

He instructeth them, that as in the one place they use to refresh their bodies, so they may in the other learn to seek the nourishment of their souls. Hooker.

NOU'RITURE.† n. s. [nourriture, French: this was afterwards contracted to nurture.] Education; institution.

Thither the great magician Merlin came,
As was his use, oftimes to visit me;
For he had charge my discipline to frame,
And tutors nouriture to oversee. Spenser.

Repaying thankfully the nouriture, which themselves received whiles they were young.
Bryskett, Disc. of Civ. Life, (1606,) p. 75.

This trade also, connected at the root, deriving its nouriture from the same sources, — must have come within the sphere of the same attraction. Pownall on Antiq. (1782,) p. 94.

To NOU'RSLE.* v. a. [nourir, French. See also To NOUSLE.] To nurse up.

Whether ye list him traine in chivalry,
Or noursle up in lore of learn'd philosophy.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. iv. 35.

NOU'RSLING.† n. s. The creature nursed, nursling.

A little noursling of the humid air. Spenser, Virgil's Gnat.

To NOU'SLE.† v. a. [The same I believe with nuzzle, and both, in their original import, corrupted from nursle.] To nurse up.

Bald friars and knavish shavelings — sought to nousel the common people in ignorance, lest, being once acquainted with the truth of things, they would in time smell out the untruth of their packed pelt and masse-penny religion.
E. K. on Spenser's Shep. Cal. June.

Mothers, who, to nousle up their babes,
Thought nought too curious. Shakspeare, Pericles.

To NOU'SLE. v. a. [nuzzle, noozle, noose, or nosel; from nose.] To entrap; to ensnare; as in a noose or trap. They nuzzle hogs to prevent their digging, that is, put a ring in their noses.

NOW.† adv. [nauh, nu, M. Gothick; nu, Su. Goth. and Sax.]

1. At this time; at the time present.

Thy servants' trade hath been about cattle, from our youth even until now. Gen. xlvi. 34.

Refer all the actions of this short and dying life to that state which will shortly begin, but never have an end; and this will approve itself to be wisdom at last, whatever the world judge of it now. Tillotson.

Now that languages abound with words standing for such combinations, an usual way of getting these complex ideas, is by the explication of those terms that stand for them. Locke.

A patient of mine is now living, in an advanced age, that thirty years ago did, at several times, cast up from the lungs a large quantity of blood. Blackmore.

2. A little while ago; almost at the present time.

Now the blood of twenty thousand men
Did triumph in my face, and they are fled. Shakspeare.

How frail our passions!
They that but now for honour and for plate,
Made the sea blush, with blood resign their hate. Waller.

3. At one time; at another time.

Now high, now low, now master up, now miss. Pope.

4. It is sometimes a particle of connection, like the French or, and Latin autem: as, if this be true, he is guilty; now this is true, therefore he is guilty.

Now whatsoever he did or suffered, the end thereof was to open the doors of the kingdom of heaven, which our iniquities had shut up. Hooker.

He seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him. Now to affect the malice of the people, is as bad as that which he dislikes, to flatter them. Shakspeare.

Then cried they all again, saying, Not this man, but Barabbas; now Barabbas was a robber. St. John.

Natural reason persuades man to love his neighbour, because of similitude of kind: because mutual love is necessary for man's welfare and preservation, and every one desires another should love him. Now it is a maxim of Nature, that one do to others, according as he would himself be done to. White.

Pheasants which are granivorous birds, the young live mostly upon ants' eggs. Now birds, being of a hot nature, are very voracious, therefore there had need be an infinite number of insects produced for their sustenance. Ray.

The other great and undoing mischief which befals men, is by their being misrepresented. Now by calling evil good, a man is misrepresented to others in the way of slander and detraction. South.

Helim bethought himself, that the first day of the full moon of the month Tizpa, was near at hand. Now it is a received tradition among the Persians, that the souls of the royal family, who are in a state of bliss, do, on the first full moon after their decease, pass through the eastern gate of the black palace. Addison, Guardian.

The praise of doing well
Is to the ear, as ointment to the smell.
Now if some flies, perchance, however small,
Into the alabaster urn should fall,
The odours die. Prior.

The only motives that can be imagined of obedience to laws, are either the value and certainty of rewards, or an apprehension of justice and severity. Now neither of these, exclusive of the other, is the true principle of our obedience to God. Rogers.

A human body a forming in such a fluid in any imaginable posture, will never be reconcilable to this hydrostatical law. There will be always something lighter beneath, and something heavier above. Now what can make the heavier particles of bone ascend above the lighter ones of flesh, or depress these below those, against the tendency of nature. Bentley.

5. After this; since things are so, in familiar speech.

How shall any man distinguish now betwixt a parasite and a man of honour, where hypocrisy and interest look so like duty and affection? L'Estrange.

6. Now and then; at one time and another uncertainly. This word means, with regard to time, what is meant by here and there, with respect to place.

Now and then they ground themselves on human authority, even when they most pretend divine. Hooker.

Now and then something of extraordinary, that is any thing of your production, is requisite to refresh your character. Dryden.

A most effectual argument against spontaneous generation is, that there is no new species produced, which would now and then happen, were there any such thing. Ray.

He who resolves to walk by the gospel rule of forbearing all revenge, will have opportunities every now and then to exercise his forgiving temper. Atterbury.

They now and then appear in the offices of religion, and avoid some scandalous enormities. Rogers.

7. Now and then are applied to places considered as they rise to notice and succession.

A mead here, there a heath, and now and then a wood. Drayton.

Now. n. s. Present moment. A poetical use.

Nothing is there to come, and nothing past,
But an eternal now does ever last. Cowley.

She vanish'd, we can scarcely say she dy'd,
For but a now did heaven and earth divide:
This moment perfect health, the next was death. Dryden.
Not less ev'n in this despicable now
Than when my name fill'd Africk with affrights. Dryden.

No'WADAYS.† adv. [now and adays, i. e. on days. So Gower, "Now on days." Conf. Am. B. 5. See ADAYS. This word, though common and used by the best writers, is perhaps barbarous.] In the present age.

Not so great as it was wont of yore,
It's nowadays, ne half so straight and sore. Spenser.

Reason and love keep little company together nowadays. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

It was a vestal and a virgin fire, and differed as much from that which passes by this name nowadays, as the vital heat from the burning of a fever. South.

Such are those principles, which by reason of the bold cavils of perverse and unreasonable men, we are nowadays put to defend. Tillotson.

What men of spirit nowadays,
Come to give sober judgement of new plays. Garrick.

No'WAY.* } No'WAYS. } adv. [no and ways. Dr. Johnson has hastily condemned this expression, under nowise. See NOWISE.] Not in any manner or degree.

Wherever a considerable number of authorities can be produced in support of two different though resembling modes of expression for the same thing, there is always a divided use, and one cannot be said to speak barbarously, or to oppose the usage of the language, who conforms to either side. Of this divided use the words nowise, noway, and noways, afford a proper instance. Yet our learned lexicographer hath denominated all those, who either write or pronounce the word noways, ignorant barbarians. These ignorant barbarians (but he surely hath not adverted to this circumstance) are only Pope, and Swift, and Addison, and Locke, and several others of our most eminent writers. This censure is the more astonishing, that, even in this form which he has thought fit to repudiate, the meaning assigned to it is strictly conformable to that which etymology, according to his own explication, would suggest. See the senses of the word way marked with these numbers, 15, 16, 18, and 19. Campbell, Philos. of Rhetorick.

No'WED. adj. [noué, Fr] Knotted; inwreathed.

Reuben is conceived to bear three barres waved, Judah a lion rampant, Dan a serpent nowed. Brown.

No'WEL.* n. s. [Fr. noel, noüel: which Menage derives from the Lat. natalis; and Borel from the Lat. novus, being a corruption of the Fr. nouvel. "From gnoul, signifying a child in Hebrew, comes the French word noel, signifying the child's day, (by way of distinction,) or Christmas-day; of which word the French criticks give but a very slender and imperfect account, as may be seen in the dictionary of Trevoux, and Monsieur Menage." Harris on the 53d Ch. of Isaiah, 2d edit. 1739. Pref. p. 34.] A cry of joy; originally a shout of joy at Christmas. Obsolete.

And nowel crieth every lusty man. Chaucer, Frankl. Tale.

NOWES. n. s. [from nou, old French.] The marriage knot. Out of use.

Thou shalt look round about and see
Thousands of crown'd souls throng to be Themselves thy crown, sons of thy nowes;
The virgin births with which they spouse
Made fruitful thy fair soul. Crashaw.

No'WHERE. adv. [no and where.] Not in any place.

Some men of whom we think very reverendly, have in their books and writings nowhere mentioned or taught that such things should be in the church. Hooker.

True pleasure and perfect freedom are nowhere to be found but in the practice of virtue. Tillotson.

No'WISE.† adv. [no and wise: this is commonly spoken and written by ignorant barbarians, noways. Dr. Johnson. — The censure is not just. See NOWAY. The noun wise, signifying manner, is quite obsolete. It remains now only in composition, in which along with an adjective, or other substantive, it forms an adverb or conjunction. Such are lengthwise, coastwise, likewise, &c. These always preserve the compound form; and never admit a preposition; consequently nowise, which is an adverb of the same order, ought analogically to be written in one word, and not to be preceded by it. Campbell, Phil. of Rhet. — Dr. Johnson's solitary example from Bentley gives this word with the preposition: but I add from Barrow, one of our finest writers, an example which confirms the judicious reasoning of Campbell.] Not in any manner or degree.

No, God was so to prosecute his designs of goodness and mercy, as thereby nowise to impair or obscure, but rather to advance and illustrate, the glories of his sovereign dignity, of his severe justice, of his immaculate holiness, of his unchangeable steadiness in word and purpose. Barrow, Serm. on G. Friday, (1677.)

A power of natural gravitation, without contact or impulse, can in nowise be attributed to mere matter. Bentley.

NOWL.* See NOUL.

NO'XIOUS. adj. [noxius, Lat.]

1. Hurtful; harmful; baneful; mischievous; destructive; pernicious; unwholesome.

Preparation and correction, is not only by addition of other bodies, but separation of noxious parts from their own. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Kill noxious creatures, where 'tis sin to save,
This only just prerogative we have. Dryden.

See pale Orion sheds unwholsome dews,
Arise, the pines a noxious shade diffuse;
Sharp Boreas blows, and nature feels decay,
Time conquers all, and we must time obey. Pope.

Noxious seeds of the disease are contained in a smaller quantity in the blood. Blackmore.

2. Guilty; criminal.

Those who are noxious in the eye of the law, are justly punished by them to whom the execution of the law is committed. Bramhall against Hobbes.

3. Unfavourable; unkindly.

Too frequent an appearance in places of much resort, is noxious to spiritual promotions. Swift, Mucell.

No'XIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from noxious. Pronounced new and uncouth, in 1656, by P. Heylin.] Hurtfulness; insalubrity.

The writers of politicks have warned us of the noxiousness of this doctrine to all civil governments, which the christian religion is very far from disturbing. Hammond.

No'XIOUSLY. adv. [from noxious.] Hurtfully; perniciously.

To NOY.† v. a. [noyen, Teut.] To annoy. Not now in use. Dr. Johnson has printed this word noie, and its derivatives noiance, noious, &c. But our best old writers, and our old lexicography, are in favour of the orthography before us.

He noyede him nothing, [hurt him not, present version.] Wicliffe, St. Luke, iv. 35.

The heat whereof, and harmefull pestilence,
So sore him noy'd, that forc'd him to retire. Spenser, F. Q.

Let servant be ready with mattock in hand,
To stub out the bushes that noieth the land. Tusser.

Noy.* n. s. Annoy. Not in use.

He shall sustain no noy. Hist. of Sir Clyomon, (1599,) sign. G. i. b.

No'yance.† n. s. Mischief; inconvenience. See Annoyance.

A cloud of cumbrous gnatts doe him molest,
All striving to infixe their feeble stinges,
That from their noyance he no where can rest;
But with his clownish hands their tender wings
He brusheth oft, and oft doth mar their murmurings. Spenser, F. Q.

To borrow to-day, and to-morrow to mis,
For lender and borrower noiance it is. Tusser.

The single and peculiar life is bound,
With all the strength and armour of the mind,
To keep itself from noyance. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

No'yer.† n. s. [from noy.] One who annoys. Not in use.

The north is a noier to grass of all suits,
The east a destroyer to herbs and all fruits. Tusser.

No'yful.* adj. [noy and full.] Noisome; hurtful. Obsolete. Huloet.

Very execrable and noyfull to them that shall receive them. Bale, Yet a Course, &c. fol. 88.

No'yous.† adj. [from noy; Ital. noioso.] Hurtful; troublesome; inconvenient. Obsolete.

We be delivered fro noyouse and yvele men. Wicliffe, 2 Thess. iii. 2.

Being bred in a hot country, they found much hair on their faces to be noyous unto them. Spenser.

The false Duessa leaving noyous night,
Return'd to stately palace of dame Pride. Spenser, F. Q.

No'ysance.* n. s. Offence; trespass; nuisance. The word is now nuisance.

Or suffer that may be noysance
Againe our old accustomance. Chaucer's Dream. ver. 255.

No'zle.† n. s. [nazal, old Fr. from naz, the nose.] The nose; the snout; the end.

It is nothing but a paultry old sconce, with the nozle broke off. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

To Nu'bble.† v. a. [properly to knubble, or knobble, from knob, for a clenched fist. Dr. Johnson. — Skinner derives knubble, to beat, from knipler, Danish.] To bruise with handy cuffs. Ainsworth.

Nubi'ferous. adj. [nubifer, Lat.] Bringing clouds. Dict.

To Nu'bilate. v. a. [nubilo, Lat.] To cloud. Dict.

Nu'bile. adj. [nubile, Fr. nubilis, Lat.] Marriageable; fit for marriage.

The cowslip smiles, in brighter yellow drest,
Than that which veils the nubile virgin's breast. Prior.

Nu'bilous.* adj. [nubilus, Lat.] Cloudy. Bailey.

Nuci'ferous. adj. [nuces and fero, Lat.] Nutbearing. Dict.

NUCLEUS. n. s. [Lat.] A kernel; any thing about which matter is gathered or conglobated.

The crusts are each in all parts nearly of the same thickness, their figure suited to the nucleus, and the outer surface of the stone exactly of the same form with that of the nucleus. Woodward on Fossils.

Nu'dation. n. s. [nudation, Fr. nudo, Lat.] The act of making bare or naked.

NUDE.* adj. [nud, Fr. nudus, Lat.] Bare; naked. Bullokar.

Contract by nude paroles, i. e. by bare words. Huloet, in V. Contracte.

Nu'dity.† n. s. [nudité, Fr. nudus, Lat.] Naked parts; naked ness; poverty. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

There are no such licences permitted in poetry any more than in painting, to design and colour obscene nudities. Dryden.

The man who shews his heart,
Is hooted for his nudities, and scorn'd. Young, Night Th. 8.

Nu'el. See Newel.

Nuga'city.† n. s. [nugax, nugacis, Lat.] Futility; trifling talk or behaviour.

Such arithmetical nugacities as are ordinarily recorded for his. More, Conj. Cabb. (1653,) p. 155.

NUGA'TION. n. s. [nugor, Latin.] The act or practice of trifling.

The opinion that putrefaction is caused either by cold or peregrine and preternatural heat, is but nugation. Bacon.

Nu'gatory. adj. [nugatorius, Lat.] Trifling; futile; insignificant.

Some great men of the last age, before the mechanical philosophy was revived, were too much addicted to this nugatory art: when occult quality, and sympathy and antipathy were admitted for satisfactory explications of things. Bentley.

Nui'sance. n. s. [nuisance, French.]

1. Something noxious or offensive.

This is the liar's lot, he is accounted a pest and a nuisance; a person marked out for infamy and scorn. South.

A wise man who does not assist with his counsels, a rich man with his charity, and a poor man with his labour, are perfect nusances in a commonwealth. Swift, Miscell.

2. [In law.] Something that incommodes the neighbourhood.

Nusances, as necessary to be swept away, as dirt out of the streets. Kettlewell.

To NULL. v. a. [nullus, Lat.] To annul; to annihilate; to deprive of efficacy or existence.

Thy fair enchanted cup, and warbling charms,
No more on me have power, their force is null'd. Milton, S. A.

Reason hath the power of nulling or governing all other operations of bodies. Grew, Cosmol.

Null. adj. [nullus, Lat.] Void; of no force; ineffectual.

With what impatience must the muse behold
The wife, by her procuring husband sold?
For though the law makes null the adulterous deed
Of lands to her, the cuckold may succeed. Dryden.

Their orders are accounted to be null and invalid by many. Lesley.

The pope's confirmation of the church lands to those who hold them by King Henry's donation, was null and fraudulent. Swift, Miscell.

Null. n. s. Something of no power or no meaning. Marks in ciphered writing, which stand for nothing, and are inserted only to puzzle, are called nulls.

If part of the people be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or ciphers in the privation or translation. Bacon, War with Spain.

Nullibi'ety. n. s. [from nullibi, Lat.] The state of being nowhere.

Nullifi'dian.* adj. [Lat. nullus, none, and fides, faith.] Of no honesty; of no religion; of no faith. Bullokar.

A solifidian Christian is a nullifidian Pagan, and confutes his tongue with his hand. Feltham, Res. ii. 47.

To Nu'llify.† v. a. [from nullus, Lat.] To annul; to make void.

You will say, that this nullifies all exhortations to piety; since a man, in this case, cannot totally come up to the thing he is exhorted to. But to this I answer, that the consequence does not hold: for an exhortation is not frustrate, if a man be but able to come up to it partially, though not entirely and perfectly. South, Serm. vii. 95.

Nu'llity. n. s. [nullité, French.]

1. Want of force or efficacy.

It can be no part of my business to overthrow this distinction, and to shew the nullity of it; which has been solidly done by most of our polemick writers. South.

The jurisdiction is opened by the party, in default of justice from the ordinary, as by appeals or nullities. Ayliffe.

2. Want of existence.

A hard body struck against another hard body, will yield an exteriour sound, in so much as if the percussion be over soft, it may induce a nullity of sound; but never an interior sound. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

NUMB.† adj. [benumen, benumeb, Saxon. This word was formerly written num, as Mr. H. Tooke has also observed, How, or why, or when the b was added to it, he says, he knows not. Certain it is, I may add, that Milton omitted the b, and in later times Bentley. Nay, Dr. Johnson himself, in all the editions of his Dictionary, has given benum, not benumb. The etymon which Mr. Tooke gives of this word is from the Sax. niman, capere, eripere, to nim, to take away; that is, as Skinner also explains it by the Lat. membris captus, deprived of the use of the limbs.]

1. Torpid; deprived in a great measure of the power of motion and sensation; chill; motionless.

Like a stony statue, cold and numb. Shakspeare.

Leaning long upon any part maketh it numb and asleep; for that the compression of the part suffereth not the spirits to have free access; and therefore when we come out of it, we feel a stinging or pricking, which is the re-entrance of the spirits. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Producing chilness; benumbing.

When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me
Even in his garments, and did give himself
All thin and naked to the numb cold night. Shakspeare.

To NUMB. v. a. To make torpid; to make dull of motion or sensation; to deaden; to stupify.

Bedlam beggars with roaring voices
Strike in their numb'd and mortify'd bare arms,
Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary;
And with this horrible object from low farms,
Inforce their charity. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

She can unlock
The clasping charm, and thaw the numming spell. Milton, Comus.

Plough naked, swain, and naked sow the land,
For lazy winter numbs the lab'ring hand. Dryden.

Nought shall avail
The pleasing song, or well repeated tale,
When the quick spirits their warm march forbear,
And numbing coldness has unbrac'd the ear. Prior.

NU'MBEDNESS. n. s. [from numbed.] Torpor; interruption of sensation.

If the nerve be quite divided, the pain is little, only a kind of stupor or numbedness. Wiseman, Surgery.

To NU'MBER. v. a. [nombrer, French: numero, Latin.]

1. To count; to tell; to reckon how many.

If a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered. Gen. xiii. 16.

I will number you to the sword. Is. xlv. 12.

The gold, the vest, the tripods number'd o'er,
All these he found. Pope, Odyss.

2. To reckon as one of the same kind.

He was numbered with the transgressors, and bare the sin of many. Is. liii. 12.

NU'MBER.† n. s. [number, old French of the tenth century; nombre, modern; numerus, Latin.]

1. The species of quantity by which it is computed how many; either unity, or a multitude of units.

Hie thee from this slaughter-house,
Lest thou increase the number of the dead. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

The silver, the gold, and the vessels, were weighed and by weight. Ezra, viii. 34.

There is but one gate for strangers to enter at, that it may be known what numbers of them are in the town. Addison.

2. Any particular aggregate of units, as even or odd.

This is the third time; I hope good luck lies in odd numbers: they say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

3. Many; more than one.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hooker.

Water lily hath a root in the ground; and so have a number of other herbs that grow in ponds. Bacon.

Ladies are always of great use to the party they espouse, and never fail to win over numbers. Addison.

4. Multitude that may be counted.

Of him came nations and tribes out of number. 2 Esd. iii. 7.

Loud as from numbers without number. Milton, P. L.

5. Comparative multitude.

Number itself importeth not much in armies, where the people are of weak courage: for, as Virgil says, it never troubles a wolf how many the sheep be. Bacon.

6. Aggregated multitude.

If you will, some few of you shall see the place; and then you may send for your sick, and the rest of your number, which ye will bring on land. Bacon, New Atlantis.

Sir George Summers, sent thither with nine ships and five hundred men, lost a great part of their numbers in the isle of Bermudaz. Heylin.

7. Harmony; proportions calculated by number.

They, as they move
Their starry dance in numbers that compute
Days, months, and years tow'rds his all-chearing lamp,

8. Verses; poetry.

Then feed on thoughts that voluntary move,
Harmonious numbers, as the wakeful bird
Sings darkling, Milton, P. L.

Yet should the muses bid my numbers roll
Strong as their charms, and gentle as their soul. Pope.

9. [In grammar.]

In the noun is the variation or change of termination to signify a number more than one. When men first invented names, their application was to single things; but soon finding it necessary to speak of several things of the same kind together, they found it likewise necessary to vary or alter the noun. Clark, Latin Grammar.

How many numbers is in nouns? —
— Two. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

NU'MBERER.† n. s. [from number.] He who numbers. Sherwood.

NU'MBERFUL.* adj. [number and full.] Many in number. Not in use.

About the year 700 great was the company of learned men of the English race; yea, so numberfull, that they upon the point excelled all nations in learning, piety, and zeal. Waterhouse, Apol. for Learning, (1653,) p. 50.

NU'MBERLESS. adj. [from number.] Innumerable; more than can be reckoned.

I forgive all;
There cannot be those numberless offences
'Gainst me. Shakspeare.

About his chariot numberless were pour'd
Cherub and seraph. Milton, P. L.

Deserts so great,
Though numberless, I never shall forget. Denham.

The soul converses with numberless beings of her own creation. Addison, Spectator.

Travels he then a hundred leagues,
And suffers numberless fatigues, Swift, Miscell.

NU'MBERS.* n. s. pl. The title of the fourth book in the Old Testament.

This book is called by the name of Numbers in our language, because it begins with an account of the numbering of the people in the beginning of the second year after they came out of Egypt: though it contain a great many things besides that; particularly another numbering of them (ch. 26.) towards the conclusion of their travels in the wilderness. Bp. Patrick on Numbers.

NU'MBLES.† n. s. [nombles, Fr.] The entrails of a deer. Bailey.

His glorious heart, as it were numbles, chopped in pieces. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 161.

NU'MBNESS. n. s. [from numb.] Torpor; interruption of action or sensation; deadness: stupefaction.

Stir, nay, come away;
Bequeath to death your numbness, for from him
Dear life redeems you. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.
Till length of years,
And sedentary numbness craze my limbs
To a contemptible old age obscure. Milton, S. A.
Cold numbness strait bereaves
Her corpse of sense, and th' air her soul receives. Denham.

Silence is worse than the fiercest and loudest accusations; since it may proceed from a kind of numbness or stupidity of conscience, and an absolute dominion obtained by sin over the soul, so that it shall not so much as dare to complain, or make a stir. South.

NU'MERABLE.† adj. [numerabilis, Latin.] Capable to be numbered. Huloet.

So numerous in islands as they are scarce numerable. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 58.

NU'MERAL. adj. [numeral, Fr. from numerus, Lat.] Relating to number; consisting of number.

Some who cannot retain the several combinations of numbers in their distinct orders, and the dependance of so long a train of numeral progressions, are not able all their life-time regularly to go over any moderate series of numbers. Locke.

NU'MERAL.* n. s. A numeral character or letter.

The learned Dr. Wallis, of Oxford, delivers it as his opinion, that the Indian or Arabick numerals were brought into Europe together with other Arabick learning, about the middle of the tenth century, if not sooner. Astle, Orig. and Progr. of Writing, ch. 7.

NU'MERALLY. adv. [from numeral.] According to number.

2. A small kind of pigeon.

NU'NCHION.† n. s. [corrupted from noon-shun, a meal eaten about noon, when country labourers usually retire from the heat of the sun, as Mr. Malone also has observed; citing the following passage from Browne, which Mr. Mason in his Supplement to Dr. Johnson's Dictionary has also given, with the definition of "a shady place to retire to at noon." But it is the meal, and not the place, which the poet means. Sherwood, in his Dict. 1632, calls it "a nuncions or nuncheon, an afternoones repast."] A piece of victuals eaten between meals.

That harvest folkes (with curds and clouted cream,
With cheese and butter, cakes and cates ynow
That are the yoeman's from the yoake or cowe)
On sheafes of corne, were at their noonshuns close.
Browne, Brit. Past. (1616.)

Bp. Bramhall, Schism Guarded, p. 149.

NU'NNERY. n. s. [from nun.] A house of nuns; of women under a vow of chastity, dedicated to the severer duties of religion.

I put your sister into a nunnery, with a strict command not to see you, for fear you should have wrought upon her to have taken the habit. Dryden, Span. Friar.

NU'PTIAL. adj. [nuptial, French; nuptialis, Latin.] Pertaining to marriage; constituting marriage; used or done in marriage.

Confirm that amity
With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant
Bona to England's king. Shakspeare.

Because propagation of families proceedeth from the nuptial copulation, I desired to know of him what laws and customs they had concerning marriage. Bacon.

Then all in heat
They light the nuptial torch. Milton, P. L.

Whoever will partake of God's secrets, must pare off whatsoever is amiss, not eat of this sacrifice with a defiled head, nor come to this feast without a nuptial garment. Bp. Taylor.

Fir'd with her love, and with ambition led,
The neighb'ring princes court her nuptial bed. Dryden.

Let our eternal peace be seal'd by this,
With the first ardor of a nuptial kiss. Dryden, Aurengz.

NU'PTIALS.† n. s. like the Latin without singular. [nuptiæ, Lat. Dr. Johnson. — From nubo. "It has been an opinion long received, and almost as universally admitted, that "nuptiæ dictæ, quia flammeo caput nubentis obvolvatur, quod antiqui obnubere vocârunt." But this is a custom evidently posterior to civil society, when ceremonies were instituted to give sanction and permanency to a rite, on which so much depended the good order and happiness of civil life. The union, which was the origin of society, must have been antecedent to the rites ordained to make it legal. We must therefore search higher for the primitive signification of nubo. Dr. Taylor on the Civil Law, p. 287, mentions an Hebrew radix, consisting of the same elements, which signifies procreation, birth, &c. which he thinks bids fairer for the etymon than any other that can be assigned. But, with deference to so excellent a writer, I think that even this does not satisfy. To effect this union, there must have been something prior to the liberis procreandis. For though the stipulation of the political contract was liberorum quærendorum causa, yet it is expressly mentioned in a law which Taylor quotes before, and afterwards enlarges upon, that "nuptias non concubitus sed consensus facit" a law founded on the very essence, and natural principles, of marriage. And this signification, if we can discover it in nubo, will perhaps have the fairest claim to our preference: which I think we may be able to do, by shewing that nubo originally signified to assent, and is really the same as nuo. It is well known that the Eolic, the parent, or perhaps rather the sister, dialect of the Latin, made use of the digamma F, (which, as well as the Latin V, was pronounced like our W,) between two vowels and thus nuo, nufo, i. e. nuvo: as from pluo came plui, pluvi, in the old Latin writers, in the same manner as they said fuvisti for fuisti, luvit for luit, &c. But the digamma, from the affinity of its sound, often became B: thus nuvo, nubo, as vado, βαδω, uro, (pronounced furo,) buro, πυρ: with which may be compared our burn, and fire, anciently written fuyr. Though nuo does not exist by itself at present in the Latin language, it remains in its compounds annuo, renuo, &c. as buro in amburo, comburo, and bustum. It has been given as a reason for nubo being not spoken of the man, because it was the virgin only who veiled her head. But if there is any probability in what has been before proposed, this reason will fall to the ground. We may account for it otherwise, and consistently with the signification attributed to nubo. Viri est petere, virginis est assentari, annuere, nubere. This privilege, allowed to the delicacy of the sex, is expressed by Milton, P. L. B. 8.

"Her virtue, and the conscience of her worth,
"That would be woo'd, and not unsought be won."

If we add, that connubium implies the ratification of the union in the consent of both, it will confirm the observation, that nubo properly and originally signifies annuo, assentior: and therefore that connubium is consensus." Bp. Burgess, Ess. on the Study of Antiq. 2d. ed. p. 80.]

1. Marriage.

This is the triumph of the nuptial day,
My better nuptials, which in spite of fate,
For ever join me to my dear Morat. Dryden, Aurengz.

2. It is in Shakspeare singular, but contrarily to use.

Lift up your countenance, as 'twere the day
Of celebration of that nuptial, which
We two have sworn shall come. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

NURSE.† n. s. [nouɼice, Saxon; nourrice, French; nource, old Eng. as in Barret's Alv. 1580. See also Nourice.]

1. A woman that has the care of another's child.

Unnatural curiosity has taught all women, but the beggar, to find out nurses, which necessity only ought to commend. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

2. A woman that has care of a sick person.

Never master had
A page so kind, so duteous, diligent,
So feat, so nurse-like. Shakspeare, Cymb.

One Mrs. Quickly, which is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry nurse, or his cook. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

3. One who breeds, educates, or protects.

Rome, the nurse of judgement,
Invited by your noble self, hath sent,
One general tongue unto us. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.
We must lose
The country, our dear nurse, or else thy person
Our comfort in the country. Shakspeare, Coriol.

4. An old woman in contempt.

Can tales more senseless, ludicrous, and vain,
By winter fires old nurses entertain? Blackmore.

5. The state of being nursed.

Can wedlock know so great a curse,
As putting husbands out to nurse? Cleaveland.

6. In composition, any thing that supplies food. Dr. Johnson.—And also what is supplied by food or nursing.

Sweet nurse-child of the spring's young hours. Davies, Hymn 7. To the Rose, (1622.)

Put into your breeding pond three melters for one spawner; but if into a nurse-pond or feeding pond, then no care is to be taken. Walton, Angler.

To Nurse. v. a. [from the noun, or by contraction from nourish; nourrir, Fr.]

1. To bring up a child or any thing young.

I was nursed in swaddling cloaths with cares. Wisd. vii. 7.

Him in Egerian groves Aricia bore,
And nurs'd his youth along the marshy shore. Dryden.

2. To bring up a child not one's own.

Shall I call a nurse of the Hebrew women, that she may nurse the child? Exod. ii. 7.

3. To feed, to keep, to maintain.

Thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side. Is. lx. 4.

Our monarchs were acknowledg'd here,
That they their churches nursing fathers were. Denham.
The Nymphs in their dark abode,
Nurs'd secretly with milk the thriving God. Addison.

4. To tend the sick.

5. To pamper, to foment; to encourage; to soften; to cherish.

And what is strength, but an effect of youth, which if time nurse, how can it ever cease? Davies.

By what fate has vice so thriven amongst us, and by what hands been nursed up into so uncontrouled a dominion? Locke.

Nu'rser. n. s. [from nurse.]

1. One that nurses. Not used.

See where he lies, inhearsed in the arms
Of the most bloody nurser of his harms. Shakspeare.

2. A promoter; a fomenter.

Nu'rsery. n. s. [from nurse.]

1. The act or office of nursing.

I lov'd her most, and thought to set my rest
On her kind nursery. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. That which is the object of a nurse's care.

She went forth among her fruits and flowers,
To visit how they prosper'd, bud and bloom
Her nursery: they at her coming sprung,
And touch'd by her fair tendance gladlier grew. Milton, P. L.

3. A plantation of young trees to be transplanted to other ground.

Your nursery of stocks ought to be in a more barren ground than the ground is whereunto you remove them. Bacon.

My paper is a kind of nursery for authors, and some who have made a good figure here, will hereafter flourish under their own names. Addison, Guardian.

4. Place where young children are nursed and brought up.

I' th' swathing cloaths, the other from their nursery
Were stol'n. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

You see before you the spectacle of a Plantagenet, who hath been carried from the nursery to the sanctuary, from the sanctuary to the direful prison, from the prison to the hand of the cruel tormentor, and from that hand to the wide wilderness; for so the world hath been to me. Bacon.

Forthwith the devil did appear,
Not in the shape in which he plies
At miss's elbow when she lies;
Or stands before the nursery doors,
To take the naughty boy that roars. Prior.

They have public nurseries, where all parents are obliged to send their infants to be educated. Swift.

5. The place or state where any thing is fostered or brought up, from a nursery of children, or whence any thing is to be removed from a nursery of trees.

This keeping of cows is of itself a very idle life, and a fit nursery for a thief. Spenser on Ireland.

To see fair Padua, nursery of arts,
I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy. Shakspeare.

A luxurious court is the nursery of diseases; it breeds them, it encourages, nourishes, and entertains them. L'Estrange.

A nursery erects its head,
Where queens are form'd and future heroes bred;
Where unfledg'd actors learn to laugh and cry. Dryden.

NU'RSLING. n. s. [from nurse.] One nursed up; a fondling.

Then was she held in sovereign dignity,
And made the nursling of nobility. Spenser.

I was his nursling once, and choice delight,
His destin'd from the womb. Milton, S. A.

In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves and lift their infant head,
Indulge their childhood, and the nursling spare. Dryden.

NU'RTURE.† n. s. [contracted from nourriture, French.]

1. Food; diet.

For this did the angel twice descend,
Ordain'd thy nurture holy, as of a plant
Select and sacred? Milton, S. A.

2. Education; institution.

She should take order for bringing up of wards in good nurture, not suffer them to come into bad hands.
Spenser on Ireland.

The thorny point
Of bare distress hath ta'en from me the shew
Of smooth civility; yet am I inland bred,
And know some nurture. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath; but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.
Ephes. vi. 4.

To NU'RTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To educate; to train; to bring up.

Thou broughtest it up with thy righteousness, and nurturedst it in thy law, and reformedst it with thy judgement.
2 Esdr. viii. 12.

He was nurtured where he had been born in his first rudiments, till the years of ten. Wotton.

When an insolent despiser of discipline, nurtured into impudence, shall appear before a church governour, severity and resolution are that governour's virtues. South.

2. To nurture up; to bring by care and food to maturity.

They suppose mother earth to be a great animal, and to have nurtured up her young offspring with a conscious tenderness. Bentley.

To NU'STLE. v. a. To fondle; to cherish. Corrupted from nousle. See To NUZZLE. Ainsworth.

NUT. n. s. [hnut, Saxon; noot, Dutch; noix, Fr.]

1. The fruit of certain trees; it consists of a kernel covered by a hard shell. If the shell and kernel are in the center of a pulpy fruit, they then make not a nut but a stone.

One chanc'd to find a nut
In the end of which a hole was cut,
Which lay upon a hazel root,
There scatter'd by a squirrel;
Which out the kernel gotten had;
When quoth this Fay, dear queen, be glad,
Let Oberon be ne'er so mad,
I'll set you safe from peril. Drayton, Nymphid.

Nuts are hard of digestion, yet possess some good medicinal qualities. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. A small body with teeth, which correspond with the teeth of wheels.

This faculty may be more conveniently used by the multiplication of several wheels, together with nuts belonging unto each, that are used for the roasting of meat. Wilkins.

Clocks and jacks, though the screws and teeth of the wheels and nuts be never so smooth, yet if they be not oiled, will hardly move. Ray on the Creation.

To NUT.* v. n. [from the noun.] To gather nuts.

A. W. went to angle with Will. Staine of Mert. Coll. to Wheately bridge, and nutted in Shotover by the way.
A. Wood, Life of himself, (under 1652,) p. 73.

NUTA'TION.* n. s. [nutatio, Lat.] A kind of tremulous motion of the axis of the earth.

What subject of human contemplation shall compare in grandeur with that, which —— states the tides, adjusts the nutation of the earth, &c. Wakefield, Mem. p. 101.

NU'TBROWN. adj. [nut and brown.] Brown like a nut kept long.

Young and old come forth to play,
Till the live-long daylight fail,
Then to the spicy nutbrown ale. Milton, L'All.

When this nutbrown sword was out,
With stomach huge he laid about. Hudibras.

Two milk-white kids run frisking by her side,
For which the nutbrown lass, Erithacis,
Full often offer'd many a savoury kiss. Dryden.

King Hardicnute, midst Danes and Saxons stout,
Carous'd in nutbrown ale, and din'd on grout. King.

NU'TCRACKERS. n. s. [nut and crack.] An instrument used to enclose nuts and break them by pressure.

He cast every human feature out of his countenance, and became a pair of nutcrackers. Addison, Spect.

NU'TGALL. n. s. [nut and gall.] Hard excrescence of an oak.

In vegetable excretions, maggots terminate in flies of constant shapes, as in the nutgalls of the outlandish oak. Brown.

NU'THATCH. }
NU'TJOBBER. } n. s. [picus martius.] A bird.
NU'TPECKER. } Ainsworth.

NU'THOOK.† n. s. [nut and hook.]

1. A stick with a hook at the end to pull down boughs that the nuts may be gathered.

She's the king's nut-hook, that, when any filbert is ripe, pulls down the bravest boughs to his hand.
Comedy of Match me in London, (1631.)

2. It was anciently, I know not why, a name of contempt, Dr. Johnson here says; but, in a note on Shakspeare, considers it as the designation of a catchpoll. Other commentators believe it to be the reproachful name of a person who stole goods out at windows, by means of a pole with a hook at the end of it.

Nuthook, nuthook, you lie. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

NU'TMEG.† n. s. [nut and muguette, Fr. And so our old word is notemuge. See the citation from Chaucer.]

The nutmeg is a kernel of a large fruit not unlike the peach, and separated from that and from its investient coat, the mace, before it is sent over to us; except that the whole fruit is sometimes sent over in preserve, by way of sweet-meat or as a curiosity. There are two kinds of nutmeg; the male, which is long and cylindrical, but it has less of the fine aromatick flavour than the female, which is of the shape of an olive. Hill.

Notemuge to put in ale,
Whether it be moist or stale. Chaucer, Rime of Sir Thopas.

The second integument, a dry and flosculous coat, commonly called mace; the fourth, a kernel included in the shell, which lieth under the mace, is the same we call nutmeg. Brown.

I to my pleasant gardens went,
Where nutmegs breathe a fragrant scent. Sandys.

NU'TSHELL. n. s. [nut and shell.]

1. The hard substance that incloses the kernel of the nut.

I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count myself a king of infinite space. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

It seems as easy to me, to have the idea of space empty of body, as to think of the hollow of a nutshell without a kernel. Locke.

2. It is used proverbially for any thing of little value.

A fox had me by the back, and a thousand pound to a nutshell, I had never got off again. L'Estrange.

NU'T-TREE. n. s. [nut and tree.] A tree that bears nuts; commonly a hazel.

Of trees you shall have the nut-tree and the oak. Peacham.
Like bearing nut-trees, makes a larger crop. Dryden.

NUTRICA'TION. n. s. [nutricatio, Lat.] Manner of feeding or being fed.

Besides the teeth, the tongue of this animal is a second argument to overthrow this airy nutrication. Brown.

NU'TRIMENT.† n. s. [nutriment, old French; nutrimentum, Lat.] That which feeds or nourishes; food; aliment.

This slave
Has my lord's meat in him,
Why should it thrive and turn to nutriment? Shakspeare.

The stomach returns what it has received, in strength and nutriment diffused into all the parts of the body. South.

Does not the body thrive and grow
By food of twenty years ago?
And is not virtue in mankind,
The nutriment that feeds the mind? Swift, Miscell.

NUTRIME'NTAL.† adj. [from nutriment.] Having the qualities of food; alimental.

Much nutrimental store,
Thorough excess of humours perfited. The Silkeworms, (1599.)

By virtue of this oil vegetables are nutrimental, for this oil is extracted by animal digestion as an emulsion. Arbuthnot.

NUTRI'TION. n. s. [from nutritio, nutrio, Lat. nutrition, Fr.]

1. The act or quality of nourishing, supporting strength, or encreasing growth.

New parts are added to our substance to supply our continual decayings; nor can we give a certain account how the aliment is so prepared for nutrition, or by what mechanism it is so regularly distributed. Glanville, Scepsis.

The obstruction of the glands of the mesentery is a great impediment to nutrition; for the lymph in those glands is a necessary constituent of the aliment before it mixeth with the blood. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. That which nourishes; nutriment. Less properly.

Fix'd like a plant on his peculiar spot,
To draw nutrition, propagate, and rot. Pope.

NUTRI'TIOUS. adj. [from nutrio, Latin.] Having the quality of nourishing.

O may'st thou often see
Thy furrows whiten'd by the woolly rain
Nutritious! secret nitre lurks within. Philips.

The heat equal to incubation is only nutritious; and the nutritious juice itself resembles the white of an egg in all its qualities. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

NU'TRITIVE.† adj. [nutritif, old French.] Nourishing; nutrimental; alimental.

It cannot be very savoury, wholesome, or nutritive.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 97.

The fruits of the earth were not now so nutritive as they had been. Patrick on Gen. ix. 3.

While the secretory, or separating glands, are too much widened and extended, they suffer a great quantity of nutritive juice to pass through. Blackmore.

NU'TRITURE. n. s. [from nutrio, Latin.] The power of nourishing. Not used.

Never make a meal of flesh alone, have some other meat with it of less nutriture. Harvey on Consumptions.

To NU'ZZLE.† v. a. [This word, in its original signification, seems corrupted from noursle; but when its original meaning was forgotten, writers supposed it to come from nozzle or nose, and in that sense used it. See the verb neuter, which Dr. Johnson had intermixed with the present verb.]

1. To nurse; to foster.

Old men long nozzled in corruption, scorning them that would seek reformation. Sidney.

2. To nestle; to house, as in a nest. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

She [Wisdom] nuzzleth herself in his bosom, cherisheth his soul. Stafford's Niobe, P. ii. (1611,) p. 199.

To NU'ZZLE.† v. n. To go with the nose down like a hog.

He charged through an army of lawyers, sometimes with sword in hand, at other times nuzzling like an eel in the mud. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

Sir Roger shook his ears, and nuzzled along, well satisfied that he was doing a charitable work. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

The blessed benefit, not there confin'd,
Drops to a third, who nuzzles close behind. Pope.

NY'CTALOPS.* n. s. [νυκτάλωψ, Gr.] One who sees best in the night. Coles.

NY'CTALOPY.* n. s. [nyctalopie, Fr. νυκταλωπία, Gr.] A disease or indisposition of the eye, in which a person sees better by night than by day.

NYE of pheasants.* A brood of pheasants: So an eye is sometimes called. But eye is right: ey, Teut. an egg. See EYE.

NYMPH. n. s. [νύμφη; nympha, Lat.]

1. A goddess of the woods, meadows, or waters.

And as the moisture which the thirsty earth
Sucks from the sea, to fill her empty veins,

From out her womb at last doth take a birth,
And runs a nymph along the grassy plains. Davies.

2. A lady. In poetry.

This resolve no mortal dame,
None but those eyes cou'd have o'erthrown;
The nymph I dare not, need not name. Waller.

NY'MPHISH. adj. [from nymph.] Relating to nymphs; ladylike.

Tending all to nymphish war. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 3.

NY'MPHLY.* } adj. [from nymph; Fr. nympheux,
NY'MPHLIKE. } "nymphly." Cotgrave.] Resembling a nymph.

A thousand nymphlike and enamour'd graces. Drayton, Idea 3.

If chance with nymphlike step fair virgin pass. Milton, P. L.

NYS. [A corruption of ne is.] None is; not is. Obsolete.

Thou findest fault, where nys to be found,
And buildest strong work upon a weak ground. Spenser.

O.

O Has in English a long sound; as, drone, groan, stone, alone, cloke, broke, coal, droll; or short, got, knot, shot, prong, long. It is usually denoted long by a servile a subjoined; as, moan, or by e at the end of the syllable; as, bone: when these vowels are not appended, it is generally short, except before ll, as, droll, scroll, and even then sometimes short; as, loll.

O is used as an interjection of wishing or exclamation.

O that we, who have resisted all the designs of his love, would now try to defeat that of his anger! Decay of Chr. Piety.

O! were he present, that his eyes and hands
Might see, and urge, the death which he commands. Dryden.

O.† n. s. Used with no great elegance by Shakspeare for a circle or oval, Dr. Johnson says; citing only the example from the Prologue to Shakspeare's Henry the Fifth. It is also used by Bacon: and indeed was common in Shakspeare's time.

Can this cockpit hold
The vasty field of France? or may we cram,
Within this wooden O, the very casques,
That did affright the air at Agincourt?
Shakspeare, Hen. V. Prol.

Yon fiery oes and eyes of light.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

The colours, that shew best by candle-light, are white, carnation, and a kind of sea-water green; and oes or spangs, as they are of no great cost, so are they of most glory.
Bacon, Ess. 27. (ed. 1632,) p. 225.

Oad.* n. s. Woad; a plant used in dying. See Woad.

He must admit no difference between oad and frankincense, or the most precious balsamum and a tar-barrel.
B. Jonson, Poetaster.

OAF.† n. s. [This word is variously written; auf, ofe, and oph; it seems a corruption of ouph, a demon or fairy; in German and Dutch alf, from which elf: and means properly the same with changeling; a foolish child left by malevolent ouphs or fairies, in the place of one more witty, which they steal away. See Auf, and Elf.]

1. A changeling; a foolish child left by the fairies.

These, when a child haps to be got,
Which after proves an idiot,
When folk perceives it thriveth not,
The fault therein to smother:
Some silly doating brainless calf,
That understands things by the half,
Says that the fairy left this oaf,
And took away the other. Drayton, Nymphid.

2. A dolt; a blockhead; an idiot. Used in the north of England; and corrupted sometimes into goaf, goff, and gaff.

The fear of breeding fools
And ophs. Beaum. and Fl. Night Walker.

He, who when cool is a mere oaf, may be quite humourous in his cups. Philos. Lett. on Physiognomy, p. 76.

Oa'fish. adj. [from oaf.] Stupid; dull; doltish.

Oa'fishness. n. s. [from oafish.] Stupidity; dulness.

OAK. n. s. [ac, æc, Saxon; which, says Skinner, to shew how easy it is to play the fool, under a shew of literature and deep researches, I will, for the diversion of my reader, derive from οἶκος, a house; the oak being the best timber for building. Skinner seems to have had Junius in his thoughts, who on this very word has shewn his usual fondness for Greek etymology, by a derivation more ridiculous than that by which Skinner has ridiculed him. Ac or oak, says the grave critick, signified among the Saxons, like robur among the Latins, not only an oak but strength, and may be well enough derived, non incommode deduci potest, from ἀλκή, strength; by taking the three first letters and then sinking the λ, as is not uncommon; quercus.]

The oak-tree hath male flowers, or katkins, which consist of a great number of small slender threads. The embryos, which are produced at remote distances from these on the same tree, do afterwards become acorns, which are produced in hard scaly cups: the leaves are sinuated. The species are five. Miller.

He return'd with his brows bound with oak. Shakspeare.

He lay along
Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out
Upon the brook that brawls along this wood. Shakspeare.

No tree beareth so many bastard fruits as the oak: for besides the acorns, it beareth galls, oak apples, oak nuts, which are inflammable, and oak berries, sticking close to the body of the tree without stalk. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up and spreads by slow degrees.
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state, and in three more decays. Dryden.

An oak, growing from a plant to a great tree, and then lopped, is still the same oak. Locke.

A light, earthy, stony, and sparry matter, incrusted and affixed to oak leaves. Woodward on Fossils.

Let India boast her plants, nor envy we
The weeping amber and the balmy tree,
While by our oaks the precious loads are born,
And realms commanded which those trees adorn. Pope.

OAK Evergreen. n. s. [ilex.]

The fruit is an acorn like the common oak. The wood of this tree is accounted very good for many sorts of tools and utensils, and affords the most durable charcoal in the world. Miller.

OAKA'PPLE. n. s. [oak and apple.] A kind of spongy excrescence on the oak.

Another kind of excrescence is an exudation of plants joined with putrefaction, as in oakapples, which are found chiefly upon the leaves of oaks. Bacon Nat. Hist.

OA'KEN. adj. [from oak.] Made of oak, gathered from oak.

No nation doth equal England for oaken timber wherewith to build ships. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

I am the Power
Of this fair wood, and live an oaken bower. Milton, Arcades.

Clad in white velvet all their troop they led,
With each an oaken chaplet on his head. Dryden.

An oaken garland to be worn on festivals, was the recompense of one who had covered a citizen in battle. Addison.

He snatched a good tough oaken cudgel and began to brandish it. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

OA'KENPIN. n. s. An apple.

Oakenpin, so called from its hardness, is a lasting fruit, yields excellent liquor, and is near the nature of the Westbury apple, though not in form. Mortimer.

OA'KLING.* n. s. A young oak.

There was lately an avenue of four leagues in length, and fifty paces in breadth, planted with young oaklings. Evelyn, B. i. ch. 9. § 3.

OA'KUM. n. s. [A word probably formed by some corruption.] Cords untwisted and reduced to hemp, with which, mingled with pitch, leaks are stopped.

They make their oakum, wherewith they chalk the seams of the ships, of old sear and weather beaten ropes, when they are over spent and grown so rotten as they serve for no other use but to make rotten oakum, which moulders and washes away with every sea as the ships labour and are tossed. Ralegh.

Some drive old oakum through each seam and rift,
Their left hand does the calking-iron guide,
The rattling mallet with the right they lift. Dryden, Ann. Mir.

OAR. n. s. [are, Saxon; perhaps by allusion to the common expression of plowing the water, from the same root with ear, to plow, aro, Lat.] A long pole with a broad end, by which vessels are driven in the water, the resistance made by water to the oar pushing on the vessel.

The oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
The water, which they beat, to follow faster,
As amorous of their strokes. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

So tow'rds a ship the oar-finn'd gallies ply,
Which wanting sea to ride, or wind to fly,
Stands but to fall reveng'd. Denham.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untaught Indian, on the stream did glide,
E'er sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,
Or fin-like oars did spread from either side. Dryden.

Its progressive motion may be effected by the help of several oars, which in the outward ends of them shall be like the fins of a fish to contract and dilate. Wilkins.

To OAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To row.

He more undaunted on the ruin rode,
And oar'd with labouring arms along the flood. Pope.

To OAR. v. a. To impel by rowing.

His bold head
'Bove the contentious waves he kept, and oar'd
Himself with his good arms in lusty strokes
To the shore. Shakspeare, Tempest.

OA'RY. adj. [from oar.] Having the form or use of oars.

The swan with arched neck,
Between her white wings mantling, proudly rows
Her state with oary feet. Milton, P. L.

His hair transforms to down, his fingers meet,
In skinny films, and shape his oary feet. Addison.

OAST.† n. s. [perhaps from the Lat. ustus, of uro, to burn. In some places it is pronounced oost.] A kiln for drying hops.

Empty the bin into a hop bag, and carry them immediately to the oast or kiln, to be dried. Mortimer.

OAT.* n. s. [ate, Saxon.]

1. A grain rarely used in the singular number, except in composition, as, oat-straw. See OATS.

The hay and oat book was the register. Gayton on D. Quix. p. 8.

2. A small pipe made of an oaten straw. See OATEN.

But now my oat proceeds. Milton, Lycida.

OATCA'KE. n. s. [oat and cake.] Cake made of the meal of oats.

Take a blue stone they make haver or oatcakes upon, and lay it upon the cross bars of iron. Peacham.

OA'TEN. adj. [from oat.] Made of oats, bearing oats.

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks. Shakspeare.

OATH.† n. s. [aith, Gothick; að, Saxon; eid, Iceland. from the German ehe, ee, religio. Wachter. The distance between the noun oath, and the verb swear, is very observable, as it may shew that our oldest dialect is formed from different languages.] An affirmation, negation, or promise, corroborated by the attestation of the Divine Being.

Read over Julia's heart, thy first best love,
For whose dear sake thou then did'st rend thy faith
Into a thousand oaths, and all those oaths
Descended into perjury to love me. Shakspeare.

All the oath-rites said,
I then ascended her adorned bed. Chapman.

We have consultations, which inventions shall be published, which not: and take an oath of secrecy for the concealing of those which we think fit to keep secret. Bacon.

Those called to any office of trust, are bound by an oath to the faithful discharge of it: but an oath is an appeal to God, and therefore can have no influence, except upon those who believe that he is. Swift.

OA'THABLE. adj. [from oath. A word not used.] Capable of having an oath administered.

You're not oathable,
Although I know you'll swear
Into strong shudders th' immortal gods. Shakspeare.

OATHBREA'KING. n. s. [oath and break.] Perjury; the violation of an oath.

His oathbreaking he mended thus,
By now forswearing that he is forsworn. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

OA'TMALT. n. s. [oat and malt.] Malt made of oats.

In Kent they brew with one half oatmalt, and the other half barleymalt. Mortimer.

Oa'tmeal. n. s. [oat and meal.] Flower made by grinding oats.

Oatmeal and butter, outwardly applied, dry the scab on the head. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Our neighbours tell me oft, in joking talk,
Of ashes, leather, oatmeal, bran, and chalk. Gay.

Oa'tmeal. n. s. [panicum.] An herb. Ainsworth.

Oats. n. s. [aten, Saxon.] A grain, which in England is generally given to horses, but in Scotland supports the people.

It is of the grass leaved tribe, the flowers have no petals, and are disposed in a loose panicle: the grain is eatable. The meal makes tolerable good bread. Miller.

The oats have eaten the horses. Shakspeare.

It is bare mechanism, no otherwise produced than the turning of a wild oatbeard, by the insinuation of the particles of moisture. Locke.

For your lean cattle, fodder them with barley straw first, and the oat straw last. Mortimer.

His horse's allowance of oats and beans, was greater than the journey required. Swift.

Oa'tthistle. n. s. [oat and thistle.] An herb. Ainsworth.

To OBA'MBULATE. v. n. [obambulo, Lat.] To walk about. Not in use. Cockeram.

Obambula'tion.† n. s. [obambulatio, from obambulo, Latin.] The act of walking about. Dict.

Impute all these obambulations and nightwalks to the quick and fiery atoms, which did abound in our Don. Gayton on D. Quix. (1654,) p. 217.

Obdormi'tion.* n. s. [from obdormio, Lat.] Sleep; rest; repose.

A peaceable obdormition in thy bed of ease and honour. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

To OBDU'CE. v. a. [obduco, Latin.] To draw over as a covering.

No animal exhibits its face in the native colour of its skin but man, all others are covered with feathers, hair, or a cortex that is obduced over the cutis. Hale.

Obdu'ction.† n. s. [from obductio, obduco, Latin.] The act of covering, or laying a cover. Cockeram.

Obdu'racy. n. s. [from obdurate.] Inflexible wickedness; impenitence; hardness of heart.

Thou think'st me as far in the Devil's book, as thou and Falstaff, for obduracy and persistency. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

God may, by a mighty grace, hinder the absolute completion of sin in final obduracy. South.

OBDU'RATE. adj. [obduratus, Latin.]

1. Hard of heart; inflexibly obstinate in ill; hardened; impenitent.

Oh! let me teach thee for thy father's sake,
That gave thee life, when well he might have slain thee,
Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears. Shakspeare.

If when you make your pray'rs,
God should be so obdurate as yourselves,
How would it fare with your departed souls? Shakspeare.

Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless. Shakspeare.

To convince the proud what signs avail,
Or wonders move the obdurate to relent;
They harden'd more, by what might more reclaim. Milton.

Obdurate as you are, oh! hear at least
My dying prayers, and grant my last request. Dryden.

2. Hardned; firm; stubborn: always with some degree of evil.

Sometimes the very custom of evil makes the heart obdurate against whatsoever instructions to the contrary. Hooker.

A pleasing sorcery could charm
Pain for a while, or anguish, and excite
Fallacious hope, or arm the obdurate breast
With stubborn patience, as with triple steel. Milton, P. L.

No such thought ever strikes his marble, obdurate heart, but it presently flies off and rebounds from it. It is impossible for a man to be thorough-paced in ingratitude, till he has shook off all fetters of pity and compassion. South.

3. Harsh; rugged.

They joined the most obdurate consonants without one intervening vowel. Swift.

Obdu'rately. adv. [from obdurate.] Stubbornly, inflexibly; impenitently.

Obdu'rateness.† n. s. [from obdurate.] Stubbornness; inflexibility; impenitence.

This reason of his was grounded upon the obdurateness of men's hearts, which would think that nothing concerned them. Hammond, Works, iv. 687.

Their obstinacy, and obdurateness in their sins. Pococke on Hosea, p. 180.

Obdura'tion. n. s. [from obdurate.] Hardness of heart; stubbornness.

What occasion it had given them to think, to their greater obduration in evil, that through a froward and wanton desire of innovation, we did constrainedly those things, for which conscience was pretended? Hooker.

This barren season is always the reward of obstinate obduration. Hammond.

To Obdu're. v. a. [obduro, Lat.]

1. To harden.

The buildings are for the most part of brick, not burnt with fire, but hardened by the sun, which makes them so hard, that they appear no less solid and useful than those the fire obdures. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 112.

2. To render inflexible; to make obdurate.

All hearts are not alike: no means can work upon the wilfully obdured. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

His infinite power, justice, wisdom, mercy, knows when and how to scourge one, to chastise a second, to warn a third, to humble a fourth, to obdure a fifth. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 76.

Arm the obdured breast

This saw his hapless foes, but stood obdur'd. Milton, P. L.

The justice of your cause has won over your obdured rebel subjects. Montrose, Lett. to K. Charles I.

Obdu'redness.* n. s. [from obdure.] Hardness, stubborness.

Even the best of us lies open to a certain deadness and obduredness of heart. Seasonable exhortation shakes off this peril. Bp. Hall, Christ Mystical, § 23.

Obe'dience. n. s. [obedience, Fr. obedientia, Latin.] Obsequiousness; submission to authority; compliance with command or prohibition.

If you violently proceed against him, it would shake in pieces the heart of his obedience. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Thy husband
Craves no other tribute at thy hands,
But love, fair looks, and true obedience. Shakspeare.

His servants ye are, to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness. Rom. vi. 16.

It was both a strange commission, and a strange obedience to a commission, for men so furiously assailed, to hold their hands. Bacon, War with Spain.

In vain thou bidst me to forbear,
Obedience were rebellion here. Cowley.

Nor can this be,
But by fulfilling that which thou didst want,
Obedience to the law of God, impos'd
On penalty of death. Milton, P. L.

We must beg the grace and assistance of God's spirit to enable us to forsake our sins, and to walk in obedience to him. Wh. Duty of Man.

The obedience of men is to imitate the obedience of angels, and rational beings on earth, are to live unto God, as rational beings in heaven live unto him. Law.

OBE'DIENT. adj. [obediens, Latin.] Submissive to authority; compliant with command or prohibition; obsequious.

To this end did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient in all things. 2 Cor. ii. 9.

To this her mother's plot
She, seemingly obedient, likewise hath Made promise. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

Religion hath a good influence upon the people, to make them obedient to government, and peaceable one towards another. Tillotson.

The chief his orders gives; the obedient band,
With due observance, wait the chief's command. Pope.

Obedie'ntial. adj. [obedientiel, Fr. from obedient.] According to the rule of obedience.

Faith is such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obediential submission to the command. Hammond.

Faith is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiduciary assent to whatever the gospel has revealed, and an obediential submission to the commands. Wake, Prep. for Death.

Obe'diently. adv. [from obedient.] With obedience.

We should behave ourselves reverently and obediently towards the Divine Majesty, and justly and charitably towards men. Tillotson.

Obe'isance. n. s. [obeisance, Fr. This word is formed by corruption from abaisance, an act of reverence.] A bow; a courtesy; an act of reverence made by inclination of the body or knee.

Bartholomew my page,
See drest in all suits like a lady;
Then call him Madam, do him all obeisance. Shakspeare.

Bathsheba bowed and did obeisance unto the king. 1 Kings, i. 16.

The lords and ladies paid
Their homage, with a low obeisance made,
And seem'd to venerate the sacred shade. Dryden.

Obeli'sk. n. s. [obeliscus, Latin.]

1. A magnificent high piece of solid marble, or other fine stone, having usually four faces, and lessening upwards by degrees, till it ends in a point like a pyramid. Harris.

Between the statues obelisks were plac'd,
And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd. Pope.

2. A mark of censure in the margin of a book, in the form of a dagger [†].

He published the translation of the Septuagint, having compared it with the Hebrew, and noted by asterisks what was defective, and by obelisks what redundant. Grew.

To OBE'QUITATE. v. n. [obequito, Lat.] To ride about. Not in use. Cockeram.

Obequita'tion.† n. s. [from obequito, Lat.] The act of riding about. This word occurs in the old vocabulary of Cockeram, though Dr. Johnson has given it without reference to any usage of it; and is another kind of proof against the pretended modern coinage of equitation. See Equitation. Both are pedantick words.

Oberra'tion. n. s. [from oberro, Lat.] The act of wandering about.

OBE'SE.† adj. [obesus, Lat.] Fat; loaden with flesh.

The author's counsel runs upon his corpulency, just as one said of an over obese priest that he was an Arminian; grant, quoth a second, that he be an Arminian, I'll swear he is the greatest that ever I saw. Gayton on D. Quix. (1654,) p. 8.

Obe'seness. } n. s. [from obese.] Morbid fatness;
Obe'sity. } incumbrance of flesh.

On these many diseases depend; as on the straitness of the chest, a phthisis; on the largeness of the veins, an atrophy; on their smallness, obesity. Grew.

To OBE'Y. v. a. [obeir, French; obedio, Latin.]

1. To pay submission to; to comply with, from reverence to authority.

The will of Heaven
Be done in this and all things! I obey. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

I am asham'd, that women are so simple
To seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey. Shakspeare.

Let not sin reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof. Rom. vi. 12.

The ancient Britons yet a sceptred king obeyed. Drayton.

Was she thy God, that her thou didst obey,
Before his voice? Milton, P. L.

Africk and India shall his power obey,
He shall extend his propagated sway
Beyond the solar year, without the starry way. Dryden.

2. It had formerly sometimes to before the person obeyed, which Addison has mentioned as one of Milton's latinisms; but it is frequent in old writers; when we borrowed the French word we borrowed the syntax, obeir au roi.

He commanded the trumpets to sound, to which the two brave knights obeying, they performed their courses, breaking their staves. Sidney.

The flit bark, obeying to her mind,
Forth launched quickly, as she did desire. Spenser.

His servants ye are, to whom ye obey. Rom. vi. 16.

Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel,
Yet to their general's voice they soon obey'd. Milton, P. L.

Obe'yer.* n. s. [from obey.] One who obeys.

He approved himself to be a religious hearer, judicious observer, and obsequious obeyer of the word of his Maker. Price, Serm. on Prince Henry's Death, (1613,) p. 16.

Obfusca'tion.* n. s. [from obfuscate.] The act of darkening.

O'BJECT. n. s. [objet, Fr. objectum, Latin.]

1. That about which any power or faculty is employed.

Pardon
The flat unrais'd spirit, that hath dar'd,
On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth
So great an object. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

They are her farthest reaching instrument,
Yet they no beams unto their objects send,
But all the rays are from their objects sent,
And in the eyes with pointed angles end. Davies.

The object of true faith is, either God himself, or the word of God: God who is believed in, and the word of God as the rule of faith, or matter to be believed. Hammond.

The act of faith is applicated to the object according to the nature of it, to what is already past, as past; to what is to come, as still to come; to that which is present, as it is still present. Pearson.

Those things in ourselves, are the only proper objects of our zeal, which, in others, are the unquestionable subjects of our praise. Sprat.

Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of the will. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

As you have no mistress to serve, so let your own soul be the object of your daily care and attendance. Law.

2. Something presented to the senses to raise any affection or emotion in the mind.

Dishonour not your eye
By throwing it on any other object. Shakspeare.

Why else this double object in our sight,
Of flight pursu'd in the air, and o'er the ground? Milton, P. L.

This passenger felt some degree of concern, at the sight of so moving an object, and therefore withdrew. Atterbury.

3. [In grammar.] Any thing influenced by somewhat else.

The accusative after a verb transitive, or a sentence in room thereof, is called, by grammarians, the object of the verb. Clarke.

O'BJECTGLASS. n. s. Glass of an optical instrument remotest from the eye.

An objectglass of a telescope I once mended, by grinding it on pitch with putty, and leaning easily on it in the grinding, lest the putty should scratch it. Newton, Opt.

To OBJE'CT. v. a. [objecter, Fr. objicio, objectum, Lat.]

1. To oppose; to present in opposition.

Pallas to their eyes
The mist objected, and condens'd the skies. Pope.

2. To propose as a charge criminal, or a reason adverse: often with to or against.

Were it not some kind of blemish to be like unto Infidels and Heathens, it would not so usually be objected; men would not think it any advantage in the cause of religion to be able therewith justly to charge their adversaries. Hooker.

The book requireth due examination, and giveth liberty to object any crime against such as are to be ordered. Whitgift.

Men in all deliberations find ease to be of the negative side, and affect a credit to object and foretel difficulties; for when propositions are denied, there is an end of them; but if they be allowed, it requireth a new work; which false point of wisdom is the bane of business. Bacon.

The old truth was, object ingratitude, and ye object all crimes; and is it not as old a truth, is it not a higher truth, object rebellion, and ye object all crimes. Holyday.

This the adversaries of faith have too much reason to object against too many of its professors; but against the faith itself nothing at all. Sprat.

It was objected against a late painter, that he drew many graceful pictures, but few of them were like. Dryden.

Others object the poverty of the nation, and difficulties in furnishing greater supplies. Addison, State of the War.

There was but this single fault that Erasmus, though an enemy, could object to him. Atterbury.

O'BJECT.* part. adj. Opposed, presented in opposition.

His mercy is so object even unto sense. Abp. Sandys, Serm. fol. 110.

Whosoever makes such objections against an hypothesis, hath a right to be heard, let his temper and genius be what it will. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

4. Fault found.

I have shewn your verses to some, who have made that objection to them. Walsh, Lett.

OBJE'CTIONABLE.* adj. Exposed or liable to objection.

OBJE'CTIVE.† adj. [objectif, Fr. objectus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to the object; contained in the object.

Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective. Objective certainty is when the proposition is certainly true in itself; and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. The one is in things, the other in our minds. Watts, Logick.

2. Made an object; proposed as an object; residing in objects.

If this one small piece of nature still affords new matter for our discovery, when should we be able to search out the vast treasuries of objective knowledge that lies within the compass of the universe? Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

3. [In grammar.] A case which follows the verb active, or the preposition, answers to the oblique cases in Latin, and may be properly enough called the objective case. Lowth.

OBJE'CTIVELY. adv. [from objective.]

1. In manner of an object.

This may fitly be called a determinate idea, when, such as it is at any time objectively in the mind, it is annexed, and without variation determined to an articulate sound, which is to be steadily the sign of that same object of the mind. Locke.

2. In the state of an object.

The basilisk should be destroyed, in regard he first receiveth the rays of his antipathy and venomous emission, which objectively move his sense. Brown.

OBJE'CTIVENESS. n. s. [from objective.] The state of being an object.

Is there such a motion or objectiveness of external bodies, which produceth light? The faculty of light is fitted to receive that impression or objectiveness, and that objectiveness fitted to that faculty. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

OBJE'CTOR. n. s. [from object.] One who offers objections; one who raises difficulties.

But these objectors must the cause upbraid,
That has not mortal man, immortal made. Blackmore.

Let the objectors consider, that these irregularities must have come from the laws of mechanism. Bentley.

O'BIT.† n. s. [obit, old Fr. a corruption of the Lat. obiit, or obivit.] Funeral solemnity; anniversary service for the soul of the deceased, on the day of his death. Bullokar.

To O'BLIGATE. v. a. [obligo, Lat.] To bind by contract or duty.

OBLIGA'TION. n. s. [obligatio, from obligo, Latin; obligation, Fr.]

1. The binding power of any oath, vow, duty; contract.

Your father lost a father;
That father his; and the survivor bound
In filial obligation, for some term,
To do obsequious sorrow. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

There was no means for him as a Christian, to satisfy all obligations both to God and man, but to offer himself for a mediator of an accord and peace. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Nothing can be more reasonable than that such creatures should be under the obligation of accepting such evidence, as in itself is sufficient for their conviction. Wilkins.

The better to satisfy this obligation, you have early cultivated the genius you have to arms. Dryden.

No ties can bind, that from constraint arise,
Where either's forc'd, all obligation dies. Granville.

2. An act which binds any man to some performance.

The heir of an obliged person is not bound to make restitution, if the obligation passed only by a personal act; but if it passed from his person to his estate, then the estate passes with all its burthen. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Holy Living.

3. Favour by which one is bound to gratitude.

Where is the obligation of any man's making me a present of what he does not care for himself? L'Estrange.

So quick a sense did the Israelites entertain of the merits of Gideon, and the obligation he had laid upon them, that they tender him the regal and hereditary government of that people. South.

*OBLIGA'TO. [Italian.] A musical term, signifying necessary, on purpose, for the instrument named.

O'BLIGATORY. adj. [obligatoire, Fr. from obligate.] Imposing an obligation; binding; coercive: with to or on.

As long as the law is obligatory, so long our obedience is due. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Holy Living.

A people long used to hardships, look upon themselves as creatures at mercy, and that all impositions laid on them by a stronger hand, are legal and obligatory. Swift.

If this patent is obligatory on them, it is contrary to acts of parliament, and therefore void. Swift.

To OBLI'GE. v. a. [obliger, Fr. obligo, Lat.]

1. To bind; to impose obligation; to compel to something.

All these have moved me, and some of them obliged me to commend these my labours to your grace's patronage. White.

The church hath been thought fit to be called Catholick, in reference to the universal obedience which it prescribeth; both in regard of the persons, obliging men of all conditions, and in relation to the precepts, requiring the performance of all the evangelical commands. Pearson.

Religion obliges men to the practice of those virtues which conduce to the preservation of our health. Tillotson.

The law must oblige in all precepts, or in none. If it oblige in all, all are to be obeyed; if it oblige in none, it has no longer the authority of a law. Rogers.

2. To indebt; to lay obligations of gratitude.

He that depends upon another, must Oblige his honour with a boundless trust. Waller.

Since love obliges not, I from this hour
Assume the right of man's despotic power. Dryden.

Vain wretched creature, how art thou misled,
To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!
These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But dropt from heaven, and of a nobler kind:
Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy sight,
And reason saw not, till faith sprung the light.
Thus man by his own strength to heaven would soar,
And would not be obliged to God for more. Dryden.

When int'rest calls off all her sneaking train,
When all the oblig'd desert, and all the vain,
She waits or to the scaffold or the cell. Pope.

To those hills we are obliged for all our metals, and with them for all the conveniences and comforts of life. Bentley.

3. To please; to gratify.

A great man gets more by obliging his inferiour, than by disdaining him; as a man has a greater advantage by sowing and dressing his ground, than he can have by trampling upon it. South.

Some natures are so sour and so ungrateful, that they are never to be obliged. L'Estrange.

Happy the people, who preserve their honour
By the same duties that oblige their prince. Addison, Cato.

OBLIGE'E.† n. s. [from oblige.] The person to whom another, called the obligor, is bound by a legal or written contract. See Cowel.

Mought deem him born with ill-dispos'd skies,
When oblique Saturn sat in the house of th' agonies. Spenser.

If sound be stopped and repercussed, it cometh about on the other side in an oblique line. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

May they not pity us, condemn'd to bear
The various heaven of an obliquer sphere;
While by fix'd laws, and with a just return,
They feel twelve hours that shade, for twelve that burn. Prior.

Bavaria's stars must be accus'd which shone,
That fatal day the mighty work was done,
With rays oblique upon the Gallick sun. Prior.

It has a direction oblique to that of the former motion. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

Criticks form a general character from the observation of particular errors, taken in their own oblique or imperfect views; which is as unjust, as to make a judgement of the beauty of a man's body, from the shade it casts in such and such a position. Broome on the Odyssey.

2. Not direct; indirect; by a side glance.

Has he given the lie
In circle, or oblique, or semicircle,
Or direct parallel; you must challenge him. Shakspeare.

3. [In grammar.] Any case in nouns except the nominative.

OBLI'QUELY. adv. [from oblique.]

1. Not directly; not perpendicularly.

Of meridian altitude, it hath but twenty-three degrees, so that it plays but obliquely upon us, and as the sun doth about the twenty-third of January. Brown.

Declining from the noon of day,
The sun obliquely shoots his burning ray. Pope.

2. Not in the immediate or direct meaning.

They haply might admit the truths obliquely levelled, which bashfulness persuaded not to enquire for. Fell.

His discourse tends obliquely to the detracting from others, or the extolling of himself. Addison, Spect.

OBLI'QUENESS. } n. s. [obliquité, Fr. from oblique.]
OBLI'QUITY. }

1. Deviation from physical rectitude; deviation from parallelism or perpendicularity.

Which else to several spheres thou must ascribe,

2. Deviation from moral rectitude.

There is in rectitude, beauty; as contrariwise in obliquity, deformity. Hooker.

Count Rhodophill cut out for government and high affairs, and balancing all matters in the scale of his high understanding, hath rectified all obliquities. Howell.

For a rational creature to conform himself to the will of God in all things, carries in it a rational rectitude or goodness; and to disobey or oppose his will in any thing, imports a moral obliquity. South.

To OBLI'TERATE. v. a. [oblitero, ob and litera, Latin.]

1. To efface any thing written.

2. To wear out; to destroy; to efface.

Wars and desolations obliterate many ancient monuments. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Let men consider themselves as ensnared in that unhappy contract, which has rendered them part of the Devil's possession, and contrive how they may obliterate that reproach, and disentangle their mortgaged souls. Decay of Chr. Piety.

These simple ideas, the understanding can no more refuse to have, or alter, or blot them out, than a mirrour can refuse, alter, or obliterate the images, which the objects set before it produce. Locke.

OBLITERA'TION. n. s. [obliteratio, Lat.] Effacement; extinction.

Considering the casualties of wars, transmigrations, especially that of the general flood, there might probably be an obliteration of all those monuments of antiquity that ages precedent at some time have yielded. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

OBLI'VION.† n. s. [oblivion, old French; oblivio, Latin.]

1. Forgetfulness; cessation of remembrance.

Water drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

Thou shouldst have heard many things of worthy memory, which now shall die in oblivion, and thou return unexperienced to thy grave. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

Knowledge is made by oblivion, and to purchase a clear and warrantable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know. Brown.

Can they imagine, that God has therefore forgot their sins, because they are not willing to remember them? Or will they measure his pardon by their own oblivion. South

Among our crimes oblivion may be set;
But 'tis our king's perfection to forget. Dryden.

2. Amnesty; general pardon of crimes in a state.

By the act of oblivion, all offences against the crown, and all particular trespasses between subject and subject, were pardoned, remitted, and utterly extinguished. Davies.

OBLI'VIOUS.† adj. [obliviosus, Latin; oblivieux, Fr.]

1. Causing forgetfulness.

Raze out the written troubles of the brain,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom. Shakspeare, Macbeth

The British souls
Exult to see the crouding ghosts descend
Unnumber'd; well aveng'd, they quit the cares
Of mortal life, and drink the oblivious lake. Philips.

Oh born to see what none can see awake!
Behold the wonders of th' oblivious lake. Pope.

2. Forgetful.

There was never thing that repented me more that ever I did, than doth the remembraunce of my great and most oblivious negligence. Cavendish, Life of Wolsey.

O'BLOCUTOR.* n. s. [oblocutor, Lat.] A gainsayer. Not in use.

There be dyverse (oblocutors) which, by report of his enemyes,—saye that he would never have set forth such thinges as he promysed. Bale, Pref. to Leland's Itinerary.

O'BLONG. adj. [oblong, Fr. oblongus, Lat.] Longer than broad; the same with a rectangle parallelogram, whose sides are unequal. Harris.

The best figure of a garden I esteem an oblong upon a descent. Temple, Miscell.

Every particle, supposing them globular or not very oblong, would be above nine million times their own length from any other particle. Bentley.

O'BLONGLY. adv. [from oblong.] In an oblong form.

The surface of the temperate climates is larger than it would have been, had the globe of our earth or of the planets, been either spherical, or oblongly spheroidical. Cheyne.

O'BLONGNESS. n. s. [from oblong.] The state of being oblong.

OBLO'QUIOUS.* adj. [from obloquy.] Reproachful. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

O'BLOQUY. n. s. [obloquor, Lat.]

1. Censorious speech; blame; slander; reproach.

Reasonable moderation hath freed us from being deservedly subject unto that bitter kind of obloquy, whereby as the church of Rome doth, under the colour of love towards those things which be harmless, maintain extremely most hurtful corruptions; so we peradventure might be upbraided, that under colour of hatred towards those things that are corrupt, we are on the other side as extreme, even against most harmless ordinances. Hooker.

Here new aspersions, with new obloquies,
Are laid on old deserts. Daniel, Civil Wars.

Canst thou with impious obloquy condemn
The just decree of God, pronounc'd and sworn? Milton, P. L.

Shall names that made your city the glory of the earth, be mentioned with obloquy and detraction? Addison.

Every age might perhaps produce one or two true genius, if they were not sunk under the censure and obloquy of plodding, servile, imitating pedants. Swift.

2. Cause of reproach; disgrace. Not proper.

My chastity's the jewel of our house,
Bequeathed down from many ancestors;
Which were the greatest obloquy i' the world
In me to lose. Shakspeare, All's Well.

OBLUCTA'TION.* n. s. [from obluctor, Lat. to struggle against.] Opposition; resistance.

He hath not the command of himself, to use that artificial obluctation, and facing out of the matter, which he doth at other times. Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 125.

OBMUTE'SCENCE.† n. s. [from obmutesco, Lat.]

1. Loss of speech.

A vehement fear often produceth obmutescence. Brown.

2. Observation of silence.

Compare Christianity, as it came from Christ, with the same religion, after it fell into other hands: — with the extravagant merit very soon ascribed to celibacy, solitude, voluntary poverty; with the rigours of an ascetic, and the vows of a monastic life; the hair-shirt, the watchings, the midnight prayers, the obmutescence, the gloom and mortification of religious orders, and of those who aspired to religious perfection. Paley, Ev. of the Chr. Rel. ii. P. ii. ch. 2.

OBNO'XIOUS. adj. [obnoxius, Lat.]

1. Subject.

I propound a character of justice in a middle form, between the speculative discourses of philosophers, and the writings of lawyers, which are tied and obnoxious to their particular laws. Bacon, Holy War.

2. Liable to punishment.

All are obnoxious, and this faulty land,
Like fainting Hester, does before you stand,
Watching your sceptre. Waller.

We know ourselves obnoxious to God's severe justice, and that he is a God of mercy and hateth sin; and that we might not have the least suspicion of his unwillingness to forgive, he hath sent his only begotten Son into the world, by his dismal sufferings and cursed death, to expiate our offences. Calamy.

Thy name, O Varus, if the kinder powers
Preserve our plains, and shield the Mantuan towers,
Obnoxious by Cremona's neighbouring crime,
The wings of swans, and stronger pinion'd rhime
Shall raise aloft. Dryden.

3. Reprehensible; not of sound reputation.

Conceiving it most reasonable to search for primitive truth in the primitive writers, and not to suffer his understanding to be prepossest by the contrived and interested schemes of modern, and withal obnoxious authors. Fell.

4. Liable; exposed.

Long hostility had made their friendship weak in itself, and more obnoxious to jealousies and distrusts. Hayward.

But what will not ambition and revenge
Descend to? who aspires, must down as low
As high he soar'd; obnoxious first or last,
To basest things. Milton, P. L.

Beasts lie down,
To dews obnoxious on the grassy floor. Dryden.

They leave the government a trunk naked, defenceless, and obnoxious to every storm. Davenant.

OBNO'XIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from obnoxious.] Subjection; liableness to punishment.

Every man is loth to be an informer, whether out of the office, or out of the conscience of his own obnoxiousness. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 2. C. 5.

Men, by incurring guilt and being exposed to vengeance, are subject to restless fears and stinging remorses of conscience; nor can they be exempted from such obnoxiousness otherwise than by the free grace and mercy of God. Barrow on the Forgiveness of Sins.

OBNO'XIOUSLY. adv. [from obnoxious.] In a state of subjection; in the state of one liable to punishment.

To OBNU'BILATE.† v. a. [obnubilo, Latin; obnubiler, Fr.] To cloud; to obscure.

As a black and thick cloud covers the sun, and intercepts his beams and light; so doth this melancholy vapour obnubilate the mind. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 200.

But corporal life doth so obnubilate
Our inward eyes, that they be nothing bright. More, Sleep of the Soul, C. 3. st. 10.

OBNUBILA'TION.* n. s. [from obnubilate.] The act of making obscure.

Let others glory in their triumphs and trophies, in their obnubilation of bodies coruscant; that they have brought fear upon champions. Waterhous, Apol. for Learning, p. 175.

O'BOLE. n. s. [obolus, Latin.] In pharmacy, twelve grains. Ainsworth.

OBRE'PTION.† n. s. [obreptio, Latin.] The act of creeping in with secrecy or by surprise.

Sudden incursions and obreptions, sins of mere ignorance and inadvertency. Cudworth, Serm. p. 81.

2. Offensive; disgusting.

A girdle foul with grease binds his obscene attire. Dryden.

Home as they went, the sad discourse renew'd,
Of the relentless dame to death pursu'd,
And of the sight obscene so lately view'd. Dryden.

3. Inauspicious; ill omened.

Care shuns thy walks, as at the chearful light
The groaning ghosts, and birds obscene take flight. Dryden.

It is the sun's fate like your's to be displeasing to owls and obscene animals, who cannot bear his lustre. Pope, Lett.

OBSCE'NELY.† adv. [from obscene.] In an impure and unchaste manner.

That all words which are written in the law obscenely, must be changed to more civil words. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnuus.

Expos'd obscenely naked and asleep. Dryden, Hind and Panther, P. iii.

Obsce'neness.† } n. s. [obscenité, Fr. from obscene.]
Obsce'nity. } Impurity of thought or language; unchastity; lewdness.

We avoid loss by it, and escape obsceneness; and gain in the grace and property which helps significance. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Mr. Cowley asserts plainly, that obscenity has no place in wit. Dryden.

Those fables were tempered with the Italian severity, and free from any note of infamy or obsceneness. Dryden.

Thou art wickedly devout,
In Tiber ducking thrice by break of day,
To wash the obscenities of night away. Dryden.

No pardon vile obscenity should find,
Tho' wit and art conspire to move your mind. Pope.

Obscura'tion. n. s. [obscuratio, Lat.]

1. The act of darkening.
2. A state of being darkened.

As to the sun and moon, their obscuration or change of colour happens commonly before the eruption of a fiery mountain. Burnet.

OBSCU'RE.† adj. [obscur, Fr. obscurus, Lat. This word was formerly accented on the first syllable; as in the examples, which follow, from Shakspeare, and Davies, and Beaumont and Fletcher.]

1. Dark; unenlightened; gloomy, hindring sight.

Whoso curseth his father or mother, his lamp shall be put out in obscure darkness. Prov. xx. 20.

Who shall tempt with wand'ring feet
The dark unbottom'd infinite abyss,
And through the palpable obscure find out

2. Living in the dark.

The obscure bird clamour'd the live-long night. Shakspeare.

3. Not easily intelligible; abstruse; difficult.

I explain some of the most obscure passages, and those which are most necessary to be understood, and this according to the manner wherein he used to express himself. Dryden.

4. Not noted; not observable.

My short-wing'd Muse doth haunt
None but the obscure corners of the earth.
Davies, Bien Venu, (1606,) C. 2.

The soldiers murmur
To see their warlike eagles mew their honours
In obscure towns. Beaum. and Fl.

He says, that he is an obscure person; one, I suppose, that is in the dark. Atterbury.

To Obscu're. v. a. [obscuro, Lat.]

1. To darken; to make dark.

They are all couched in a pit hard by Herne's oak, with obscured lights; which at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night. Shakspeare.

Sudden the thunder blackens all the skies,
And the winds whistle, and the surges roll
Mountains on mountains, and obscure the pole. Pope.

2. To make less visible.

What must I hold a candle to my shames?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too, too light.
Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love,
And I should be obscur'd. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Thinking by this retirement to obscure himself from God, he infringed the omnisciency and essential ubiquity of his Maker. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. To make less intelligible.

By private consent it hath been used in dangerous times to obscure writing, and make it hard to be read by others not acquainted with the intrigue. Holder.

There is scarce any duty which has been so obscured by the writings of learned men, as this. Wake.

4. To make less glorious, beautiful, or illustrious.

Think'st thou, vain spirit, thy glories are the same,
And seest not sin obscures thy godlike frame?
I know thee now by thy ungrateful pride,
That shews me what thy faded looks did hide. Dryden.

5. To conceal; to make unknown.

O might I here
In solitude live savage, in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To sun or starlight, spread their umbrage broad. Milton, P. L.

Obscu'rely.† adv. [from obscure.]

1. Not brightly; not luminously; darkly.

The lightning's light is lost; it shines not clear,
But shoots obscurely through night's stormy air.
May, Lucan, B. 5.

Through the thick shades obscurely might you see Minotaurs, cyclopses. Crashaw, Sosp. d' Herode.

2. Out of sight; privately; without notice; not conspicuously.

After many years wandering obscurely through all the island. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 4.

Such was the rise of this prodigious fire,
Which in mean buildings first obscurely bred,
From thence did soon to open streets aspire. Dryden.

There live retir'd,
Content thyself to be obscurely good. Addison, Cato.

3. Not clearly; not plainly; darkly to the mind.

The woman's seed at first obscurely told,
Now amplier known, thy Saviour and thy Lord. Milton, P. L.

Obscu'reness. } n. s. [obscuritas, Lat. obscurité, Fr.]
Obscu'rity. }

1. Darkness; want of light.

Lo! a day of darkness and obscurity, tribulation and anguish upon the earth. Esther, xi. 8.

Should Cynthia quit thee, Venus, and each star,
It would not form one thought dark as mine are:
I could lend them obscureness now, and say,
Out of myself there should be no more day. Donne.

2. Unnoticed state; privacy.

You are not for obscurity design'd,
But, like the sun, must cheer all human kind. Dryden.

3. Darkness of meaning.

Not to mention that obscureness that attends prophetic raptures, there are divers things knowable by the bare light of nature, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscure. Boyle on Colours.

That this part of sacred Scripture had difficulties in it: many causes of obscurity did readily occur to me. Locke.

What lies beyond our positive idea towards infinity, lies in obscurity, and has the undeterminate confusion of a negative idea, wherein I know I do not comprehend all I would, it being too large for a finite capacity. Locke.

To O'BSECRATE. v. a. [obsecro, Lat.] To beseech; to intreat. Not now in use. Sir T. Wyat somewhere employs it. Cockeram.

Obsecra'tion. n. s. [obsecratio, from obsecro, Lat.] Intreaty; supplication.

That these were comprehended under the sacra, is manifest from the old form of obsecration. Stillingfleet.

O'bsequent.* adj. [obsequens, Lat.] Obedient; dutiful; submitting to. A very useful word.

Unto himself he hath reserved an infinite power to put any form upon any matter; which he always findeth pliant, and obsequent to his pleasure, even against the propriety of its own particular nature. Fotherby, Atheom. (1622,) p. 181.

O'bsequies.† n. s. [obsequies, French. I know not whether this word be not anciently mistaken for exequies, exequiæ, Latin: this word, however, is apparently derived from obsequium.]

1. Funeral rites; funeral solemnities.

There was Dorilaus valiantly requiting his friend's help, in a great battle deprived of life, his obsequies being not more solemnized by the tears of his partakers, than the blood of his enemies. Sidney.

Fair Juliet, that with angels dost remain,
Accept this latest favour at my hand;
That living honour'd thee, and being dead,
With funeral obsequies adorn thy tomb. Shakspeare.
I spare the widows' tears, their woeful cries,
And howling at their husbands' obsequies;
How Theseus at these funerals did assist,
And with what gifts the mourning dames dismist. Dryden.
His body shall be royally interr'd,
I will, myself,
Be the chief mourner at his obsequies. Dryden.
Alas! poor poll, my Indian talker dies,
Go birds and celebrate his obsequies. Creech.

2. It is found in the singular, perhaps more properly.

M. Grindall, in his late funeral sermon at the obsequy of Ferdinandus, saieth and confesseth, that it cannot be denied but that after S. Gregories time purgatory went with full sail. Stapleton, Fort. of the Faith, (1565,) fol. 8. b.

In this last solemnity of obsequy unto his ever honoured sovereign and mistress, he was the most eminent person of the whole land, and principal mourner. Sir G. Paul, Life of Abp. Whitgift, p. 116.

Or tune a song of victory to me,
Or to thyself, sing thine own obsequy. Crashaw.
Him I'll solemnly attend,
With silent obsequy and funeral train,
Home to his father's house. Milton, S. A.

OBSE'QUIOUS. adj. [from obsequium, Latin.]

1. Obedient; compliant; not resisting.

Adore not so the rising son, that you forget the father, who raised you to this height; nor be you so obsequious to the father, that you give just cause to the son to suspect that you neglect him. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

At his command the up-rooted hills retir'd
Each to his place; they heard his voice, and went Obsequious. Milton, P. L.
I follow'd her; she what was honour knew,
And with obsequious majesty approv'd
My pleaded reason. Milton, P. L.
See how the obsequious wind and liquid air
The Theban swan does upward bear. Cowley.

A genial cherishing heat acts so upon the fit and obsequious matter, as to organize and fashion it according to the exigencies of its own nature. Boyle.

His servants weeping,
Obsequious to his orders, bear him hither. Addison, Cato.

The vote of an assembly, which we cannot reconcile to public good, has been conceived in a private brain, afterwards supported by an obsequious party. Swift.

2. In Shakspeare it seems to signify, funereal; such as the rites of funerals require.

Your father lost a father;
That father his; and the survivor bound
In filial obligation, for some term,
To do obsequious sorrow. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Obse'quiously. adv. [from obsequious.]

1. Obediently: with compliance.

They rise, and with respectful awe,
At the word given, obsequiously withdraw. Dryden.

We cannot reasonably expect, that any one should readily and obsequiously quit his own opinion, and embrace ours with a blind resignation. Locke.

2. In Shakspeare it signifies, with funeral rites; with reverence for the dead.

I a while obsequiously lament
The untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Obse'quiousness.† n. s. [from obsequious.] Obedience; compliance.

No less famous for her liberty, than obsequiousness towards her husband. Bacon, Hist. of Life and Death.

An heart — of singular obsequiousness towards your father. Wotton, Paneg. to K. Charles I.

They apply themselves both to his interest and humour, with all the arts of flattery and obsequiousness, the surest and the readiest way to advance a man. South.

O'bsequy.* n. s. [obsequium, Lat.]

1. Funeral ceremony. See Obsequies.

2. Obsequiousness; compliance. Not in use.

Sway'd by strong necessity,

With too much obsequy. B. Jonson, Fox.

Obse'rvable. adj. [from observo, Latin.] Remarkable; eminent; such as may deserve notice.

They do bury their dead with observable ceremonies. Abbot.

These proprieties affixed unto bodies from considerations deduced from east, west, or those observable points of the sphere, will not be justified from such foundations. Brown.

I took a just account of every observable circumstance of the earth, stone, metal, or other matter, from the surface quite down to the bottom of the pit, and entered it carefully into a journal. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

The great and more observable occasions of exercising our courage, occur but seldom. Rogers.

Obse'rvably. adv. [from observable.] In a manner worthy of note.

It is prodigious to have thunder in a clear sky, as is observably recorded in some histories. Brown, Vulg. Err.

OBSE'RVANCE. n. s. [observance, Fr. observo, Lat.]

1. Respect; ceremonial reverence.

In the wood, a league without the town,
Where I did meet thee once with Helena,
To do observance on the morn of May. Shakspeare.
Arcite left his bed, resolv'd to pay
Observance to the month of merry May. Dryden.

2. Religious rite.

Some represent to themselves the whole of religion as consisting in a few easy observances, and never lay the least restraint on the business or diversions of this life. Rogers.

3. Attentive practice.

Use all the observance of civility,
Like one well studied in a sad ostent
To please his grandam. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.
Love rigid honesty
And strict observance of impartial laws. Roscommon.

If the divine laws were proposed to our observance, with no other motive than the advantages attending it, they would be little more than an advice. Rogers, Serm.

4. Rule of practice.

There are other strict observances;
As, not to see a woman. Shakspeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

5. Careful obedience.

We must attend our Creator in all those ordinances which he has prescribed to the observance of his church. Rogers.

6. Observation; attention.

There can be no observation or experience of greater certainty, as to the increase of mankind, than the strict and vigilant observance of the calculations and registers of the bills of births and deaths. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

7. Obedient regard; reverential attention.

Having had such experience of his fidelity and observance abroad, he found himself engaged in honour to support him. Wotton.

Obse'rvancy.* n. s. [from observance.] Attention.

We must think, men are not gods;
Nor of them look for such observancy,
As fits the bridal. Shakspeare, Othello.

OBSERVA'NDA. * n. s. pl. [Latin.] Things to be observed.

The issues of my observanda begin to grow too large for the receipts. Swift, Tale of a Tub, Concl.

Obse'rvant. adj. [observans, Latin.]

1. Attentive; diligent; watchful.

These writers, which gave themselves to follow and imitate others, were observant sectators of those masters they admired. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

Wandering from clime to clime observant stray'd,
Their manners noted, and their states survey'd. Pope

2. Obedient; respectful: with of.

We are told how observant Alexander was of his master Aristotle. Digby on the Soul, Ded.

3. Respectfully attentive: with of.

She now observant of the parting ray,
Eyes the calm sun-set of thy various day. Pope.

4. Meanly dutiful; submissive.

How could the most base men attain to honour but by such an observant slavish course. Ralegh.

OBSE'RVANT.† n. s. [This word has the accent on the first syllable in Shakspeare.]

1. A slavish attendant. Not in use.

These kind of knaves I know, which in this plainness
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty silly ducking observants
That stretch their duties nicely. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. A diligent observer.

Such observants they are thereof, [of the law.] Hooker, Ecc. Pol. I. § 4.

OBSERVA'TION.† n. s. [observatio, from observo, Latin; observation, Fr.]

1. The act of observing, noting, or remarking.

These cannot be infused by observation, because they are the rules by which men take their first apprehensions and observations of things; as the being of the rule must be before its application to the thing directed by it. South.

The rules of our practice are taken from the conduct of such persons as fall within our observation. Rogers.

2. Show; exhibition.

The kingdom of God cometh not with observation. St. Luke, xvii. 20.

3. Notion gained by observing; note; remark; animadversion.

In matters of human prudence, we shall find the greatest advantage by making wise observations on our conduct, and of the events attending it. Watts, Logick.

4. Obedience; ritual practice.

He freed and delivered the Christian church from the external observation and obedience of all such legal precepts, as were not simply, and formally moral. White.

OBSERVA'TOR. n. s. [observateur, Fr. from observo, Lat.] One that observes; a remarker.

The observator of the bills of mortality, hath given us the best account of the number that late plagues have swept away. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

She may be handsome, yet be chaste, you say, —
Good observator, not so fast away. Dryden.

OBSE'RVATORY. n. s. [observatoire, French.] A place built for astronomical observations.

Another was found near the observatory in Greenwich Park. Woodward on Fossils.

To OBSE'RVE. v. a. [observer, Fr. observo, Lat.]

1. To watch; to regard attentively.

Remember, that as thine eye observes others, so art thou observed by angels and by men. Bp. Taylor.

2. To find by attention; to note.

It is observed, that many men who have seemed to repent when they have thought death approaching, have yet, after it hath pleased God to restore them to health, been as wicked, perhaps worse, as ever they were. Wh. Duty of Man.

If our idea of infinity be got from the power we observe in ourselves, of repeating without end our own ideas, it may be demanded why we do not attribute infinity to other ideas, as well as these of space and duration. Locke.

One may observe them discourse and reason pretty well, of several other things, before they can tell twenty. Locke.

3. To regard or keep religiously.

A night to be much observed unto the Lord, for bringing them out of Egypt. Ex. xii. 42.

5. To obey; to follow.

To OBSE'RVE. v. n.

1. To be attentive.

Observing men may form many judgments by the rules of similitude and proportion, where causes and effects are not entirely the same. Watts, Logick.

2. To make a remark.

I observe, that when we have an action against any man, we must for all that look upon him as our neighbour, and love him as ourselves, paying him all that justice, peace and charity, which are due to all persons. Kettlewell.

Wherever I have found her notes to be wholly another's, which is the case in some hundreds, I have barely quoted the true proprietor, without observing upon it. Pope, Lett.

OBSE'RVER. n. s. [from observe.]

1. One who looks vigilantly on persons and things; close remarker.

He reads much;
He is a great observer; and he looks
Quite through the deeds of men. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

Angelo,
There is a kind of character in thy life,
That to the observer doth thy history
Fully unfold. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Careful observers may foretel the hour,
By sure prognostics when to dread a show'r. Swift.

2. One who looks on; the beholder.

If a slow-pac'd star had stol'n away,
From the observer's marking, he might stay
Three hundred years to see't again. Donne.

Company, he thinks, lessens the shame of vice, by sharing it; and therefore, if he cannot wholly avoid the eye of the observer, he hopes to distract it at least by a multiplicity of objects. South.

Sometimes purulent matter may be discharged from the glands in the upper part of the wind-pipe, while the lungs are sound and uninfected, which now and then has imposed on undistinguishing observers. Blackmore.

3. One who keeps any law, or custom, or practice.

Many nations are superstitious, and diligent observers of old customs, which they receive by tradition from their parents, by recording of their bards and chronicles. Spenser.

The king after the victory, as one that had been bred under a devout mother, and was in his nature a great observer of religious forms, caused Te Deum to be solemnly sung in the presence of the whole army upon the place. Bacon.

He was so strict an observer of his word, that no consideration whatever could make him break it. Prior.

Himself often read useful discourses to his servants on the Lord's day, of which he was always a very strict and solemn observer. Atterbury.

OBSE'RVINGLY. adv. [from observing.] Attentively; carefully.

There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
Would men observingly distil it out. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

To OBSE'SS.* v. a. [obsideo, obsessus, Lat.]

1. To besiege; to compass about. Not in use.

The mind is obsessed with inordinate glory. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 92.

2. A man is said to be obsessed, when an evil spirit followeth him, troubling him, and seeking opportunity to enter into him. See the second sense of OBSESSION. Bullokar.

OBSE'SSION.† n. s. [obsessio, Lat.]

1. The act of besieging.

2. The first attack of Satan, antecedent to possession.

Melancholy persons are most subject to diabolical temptations and illusions, and most apt to entertain them; and the devil best able to work upon them; but whether by obsession or possession, I will not determine. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 52.

Grave fathers, he's possess'd; again, I say,
Possess'd: nay, if there be possession,
And obsession, he has both. B. Jonson, Fox.

OBSI'DIONAL.† adj. [obsidional, French; obsidionalis, Latin.] Belonging to a siege. Sherwood.

Their honorary crowns, triumphal, ovary, civical, obsidional, had little of flowers in them. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 91.

To OBSI'GNATE.* v. a. [obsigno, Lat.] To ratify; to seal up.

As circumcision was a seal of the covenant made with Abraham and his posterity, so keeping the Sabbath did obsignate the covenant made with the children of Israel, after their delivery out of Egypt. Barrow on the Decalogue.

OBSIGNA'TION.* n. s. [from obsignate.] Ratification by sealing; act of fixing a seal; confirmation.

As the spirit of obsignation was given to them under a seal, and within a veil; so the spirit of manifestation or patefaction was like the germ of a vine, or the bud of a rose, plain indices and significations of life. Bp. Taylor, Serm. on Whitsunday.

They are builders also of God's house, founding it on initial conversation, rearing it by continued instruction, covering and finishing it by sacramental obsignation. Barrow, vol. i. S. 12.

By way of obsignation of that covenant, by which we are engaged to that obedience. Whitby on the N. Test. ii. 702.

OBSOLE'TE. adj. [obsoletus, Latin.] Worn out of use; disused; unfashionable.

Obsolete words may be laudably revived, when they are more sounding, or more significant than those in practice. Dryden.

What if there be an old dormant statute or two against him, are they not now obsolete? Swift.

OBSOLE'TENESS.† n. s. [from obsolete.] State of being worn out of use; unfashionableness.

The reader is embarrassed at once with dead and with foreign languages, with obsoleteness and innovation.
Dr. Johnson, Prop. for printing Shakspeare.

O'BSTACLE. n. s. [obstacle, Fr. obstaculum, Latin.] Something opposed; hindrance; obstruction.

Conscience is a blushing shame-fac'd spirit,
That mutinies in a man's bosom: it fills
One full of obstacles. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

If all obstacles were cut away,
And that my path were even to the crown,
As the ripe reverence and due of birth. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Disparity in age seems a greater obstacle to an intimate friendship than inequality of fortune. For the humours, business, and diversions, of young and old, are generally very different. Collier on Friendship.

Some conjectures about the origin of mountains and islands, I am obliged to look into that they may not remain as obstacles to the less skilful. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

What more natural and usual obstacle to those who take voyages, than winds and storms. Pope.

O'BSTANCY.* n. s. [obstantia, Lat.] Opposition; impediment; obstruction. Not in use.

After marriage it is of no obstancy. B. Jonson, Epicœne.

To OBSTE'TRICATE.* v. n. [obstetricor, Lat.] To perform the office of a midwife.

None so obstetricated the birth of the expedient to answer both Brute and his Trojans' advantage.
Waterhous on Fortescue, (1663,) p. 202.

OBSTETRICA'TION.† n. s. [from obstetricor, Lat.] The office of a midwife.

There he must lie, in an uncouth posture, for his appointed month, till the native bonds being loosed, and the doors forced open, he shall be by an helpful obstetrication drawn forth into the larger prison of the world. Bp. Hall, Free Prisoner, § 8.

OBSTE'TRICK. adj. [from obstetrix, Lat.] Midwifish; befitting a midwife; doing the midwife's office.

There all the learn'd shall at the labour stand,
And Douglas lend his soft obstetrick hand. Pope.

O'BSTINACY. n. s. [obstination, French; obstinatio, Latin; from obstinate.] Stubbornness; contumacy; pertinacy; persistency.

Chusing rather to use extremities, which might drive men to desperate obstinacy, than apply moderate remedies. K. Charles.

Most writers use their words loosely and uncertainly, and do not make plain and clear deductions of words one from another, which were not difficult to do, did they not find it convenient to shelter their ignorance, or obstinacy, under the obscurity of their terms. Locke.

What crops of wit and honesty appear,
From spleen, from obstinacy, hate or fear. Pope.

O'BSTINATE. adj. [obstinatus, Lat.] Stubborn; contumacious; fixed in resolution. Absolutely used, it has an ill sense; but relatively, it is neutral.

The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt to accuse it, and Disdainful to be try'd by't. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Yield,
Except you mean with obstinate repulse,
To slay your sov'reign. Shakspeare.

I have known great cures done by obstinate resolutions of drinking no wine. Temple.

Her father did not fail to find
In all she spoke, the greatness of her mind;
Yet thought she was not obstinate to die,
Nor deem'd the death she promis'd was so nigh. Dryden.

Look on Simo's mate;
No ass so meek, no ass so obstinate. Pope.

O'BSTINATELY. adv. [from obstinate.] Stubbornly; inflexibly; with unshaken determination.

Pembroke abhorred the war as obstinately, as he loved hunting and hawking. Clarendon.

A Greek made himself their prey,
To impose on their belief, and Troy betray;
Fix'd on his aim, and obstinately bent
To die undaunted, or to circumvent. Dryden.

The man resolv'd, and steady to his trust,
Inflexible to ill, and obstinately just,
Can the rude rabble's influence despise. Addison.

My spouse maintains her royal trust,
Though tempted, chaste, and obstinately just. Pope.

O'BSTINATENESS.† n. s. [from obstinate.] Stubbornness.

We had like to have forgotten the neck and shoulders of the world, which have an ill fashion of stiffness and inflexible obstinateness, stubbornly refusing to stoop to the yoke of the Law, or the Gospel. Bp. Hall, Fashions of the World.

OBSTIPA'TION. n. s. [from obstipo, Lat.] The act of stopping up any passage.

OBSTRE'PEROUS. adj. [obstreperus, Lat.] Loud; clamorous; noisy; turbulent; vociferous.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. (1654,) p. 28.

Obstru'ction.† n. s. [obstructio, Lat. obstruction, Fr. from obstruct.]

1. Hindrance; difficulty.

Sure God by these discoveries did design,
That his clear light thro' all the world should shine;
But the obstruction from that discord springs,
The prince of darkness makes 'twixt Christian kings. Denham.

2. Obstacle; impediment; that which hinders.

All obstructions in parliament, that is, all freedom in differing in votes, and debating matters with reason and candour, must be taken away. King Charles.

In his winter quarters the king expected to meet with all the obstructions and difficulties his enraged enemies could lay in his way. Clarendon.

Whenever a popular assembly free from obstructions, and already possessed of more power than an equal balance will allow, shall continue to think that they have not enough, I cannot see how the same causes can produce different effects among us, from what they did in Greece and Rome. Swift.

3. [In physick.] The blocking up of any canal in the human body, so as to prevent the flowing of any fluid through it, on account of the increased bulk of that fluid, in proportion to the diameter of the vessel. Quincy.

Obstructions are the cause of most diseases.
Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 10.

4. In Shakspeare it once signifies something heaped together.

Aye, but to die, and go we know not where;
To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot;
This sensible warm motion to become
A kneaded clod. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Obstru'ctive.† adj. [obstructif, Fr. from obstruct.] Hindering; causing impediment.

Having thus separated this doctrine of God's predetermining all events from three other things confounded with it, it will now be discernible how noxious and obstructive this doctrine is to the superstructing all good life. Hammond.

Being immoderately taken, it [flesh] is exceeding obstructive.
Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 10.

Obstru'ctive. n. s. Impediment; obstacle.

O'BVIOUSLY. adv. [from obvious.]

1. Evidently; apparently.

All purely identical propositions obviously and at first blush, contain no instruction. Locke.

2. Easily to be found.

For France, Spain, and other foreign countries, the volumes of their laws and lawyers have obviously particulars concerning place and precedence of their magistrates and dignities. Selden.

3. Naturally.

We may then more obviously, yet truly, liken the civil state to bulwarks, and the church to a city. Holyday.

O'BVIOUSNESS. n. s. [from obvious.] State of being evident or apparent.

Slight experiments are more easily and cheaply tried. I thought their easiness or obviousness fitter to recommend than depreciate them. Boyle.

To OBU'MBRATE. v. a. [obumbro, Lat.] To shade; to cloud.

The rays of royal majesty reverberated so strongly upon Villerio, dispelled all those clouds which did hang over and obumbrate him. Howell, Voca For.

OBUMBRA'TION.† n. s. [obombration, French; from obumbro, Lat.] The act of darkening or clouding. Sherwood.

OCCA'SION. n. s. [occasion, Fr. occasio, Lat.]

1. Occurrence; casualty; incident.

The laws of Christ we find rather mentioned by occasion in the writings of the Apostles, than any solemn thing directly written to comprehend them in legal sort. Hooker.

2. Opportunity; convenience.

Me unweeting, and unware of such mishap,
She brought to mischief through occasion,
Where this same wicked villain did me light upon. Spenser.

Because of the money returned in our sacks are we brought in, that he may seek occasion, fall upon us, and take us for bondmen. Gen. xliii. 18.

Use not liberty for an occasion. Gal. v. 13.

Let me not let pass
Occasion which now smiles. Milton, P. L.

I'll take th' occasion which he gives to bring Him to his death. Waller.

With a mind as great as theirs he came
To find at home occasion for his fame,
Where dark confusions did the nations hide. Waller.

From this admonition they took only occasion to redouble their fault, and to sleep again. South.

This one has occasion of observing more than once in several fragments of antiquity, that are still to be seen in Rome. Addison on Italy.

3. Accidental cause.

Have you ever heard what was the occasion and first beginning of this custom? Spenser on Ireland.

That woman that cannot make her fault her husband's occasion, let her never nurse her child herself, for she will breed it like a fool. Shakspeare, As you like it.

The fair for whom they strove,
Nor thought, when she beheld the fight from far,
Her beauty was th' occasion of the war. Dryden.

Concerning ideas lodged in the memory, and upon occasion revived by the mind, it takes notice of them as of a former impression. Locke.

4. Reason not cogent, but opportune.

Your business calls on you,
And you embrace the occasion to depart. Shakspeare.

5. Incidental need; casual exigence.

Never master had
A page so kind, so duteous, diligent,
So tender over his occasions. Shakspeare, Cymb.

Antony will use his affection where it is:
He married but his occasion here. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

My occasions have found time to use them toward a supply of money. Shakspeare, Timon.

They who are desirous of a name in painting, should read with diligence, and make their observations of such things as they find for their purpose, and of which they may have occasion. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Syllogism is made use of on occasion to discover a fallacy hid in a rhetorical flourish. Locke.

The ancient canons were very well fitted for the occasion of the church in its purer ages. Baker on Learning.

God hath put us into an imperfect state, where we have perpetual occasion of each other's assistance. Swift.

A prudent chief not always must display
His pow'rs in equal ranks, and fair array,
But with the occasion and the place comply,
Conceal his force, nay, seem sometimes to fly. Pope.

To OCCA'SION. v. a. [occasionner, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To cause casually.

Who can find it reasonable that the soul should, in its retirement, during sleep, never light on any of those ideas it borrowed not from sensation, preserve the memory of no ideas but such, which being occasioned from the body, must needs be less natural to a spirit. Locke.

The good Psalmist condemns the foolish thoughts, which a reflection on the prosperous state of his affairs had sometimes occasioned in him. Atterbury.

2. To cause; to produce.

I doubt not, whether the great encrease of that disease may not have been occasioned by the custom of much wine introduced into our common tables. Temple.

A consumption may be occasioned by running sores, or sinuous fistulas, whose secret caves and winding burrows empty themselves by copious discharges. Blackmore.

By its styptic quality it affects the nerves, very often occasioning tremors. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. To influence.

If we enquire what it is that occasions men to make several combinations of simple ideas into distinct modes, and neglect others which have as much an aptness to be combined, we shall find the reason to be the end of language. Locke.

OCCA'SIONABLE.* adj. [from occasion.] That may be occasioned.

This practice, of constantly and carefully observing our hearts will fence us against immoderate pleasure, occasionable by men's hard opinions or harsh censures passed on us. Barrow, vol. iii. S. 13.

OCCA'SIONAL. adj. [occasionel, Fr. from occasion.]

1. Incidental; casual.

Thus much is sufficient out of Scripture, to verify our explication of the deluge, according to the Mosaical history of the flood, and according to many occasional reflections dispersed in other places of Scripture concerning it. Burnet.

2. Producing by accident.

The ground or occasional original hereof, was the amazement and sudden silence the unexpected appearance of wolves does often put upon travellers. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. Produced by occasion or incidental exigence.

Besides these constant times, there are likewise occasional times for the performance of this duty. Wh. Duty of Man.

Those letters were not writ to all;
Nor first intended but occasional,
Their absent sermons. Dryden, Hind and Panth.

OCCA'SIONALLY. adv. [from occasional.] According to incidental exigence; incidentally.

Authority and reason on her wait,
As one intended first, not after made
Occasionally. Milton, P. L.

I have endeavoured to interweave with the assertions some of the proofs whereon they depend, and occasionally scatter several of the more important observations throughout the work. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

OCCA'SIONER. n. s. [from occasion.] One that causes, or promotes by design or accident.

She with true lamentations made known to the world, that her new greatness did no way comfort her in respect of her brother's loss, whom she studied all means possible to revenge upon every one of the occasioners. Sidney.

Some men will load me as if I were a wilful and resolved occasioner of my own and my subjects' miseries. King Charles.

In case a man dig a pit and leave it open, whereby it happeneth his neighbour's beast to fall thereinto and perish, the owner of the pit is to make it good, in as much as he was the occasioner of that loss to his neighbour. Sanderson.

OCCECA'TION.✝ n. s. [occæcatio, from occæco, Lat.] The act of blinding or making blind; state of being blind.

It is an addition to the misery of this inward occecation. Bp. Hall, Occas. Medit. § 57.

We fall under the same occecation, which our Saviour upbraids to the Jews, that seeing we see not, neither do we understand. Lively Oracles, &c. p. 199.

Those places speak of obduration and occecation, so as if the blindness that is in the minds, and hardness that is in the hearts of wicked men, were from God. Sanderson.

O'CCIDENT. n. s. [from occidens, Latin.] The west.

The envious clouds are bent
To dim his glory, and to stain the tract
Of his bright passage to the occident. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

OCCIDE'NTAL. adj. [occidentalis, Latin.] Western.

Ere twice in murk and occidental damp,
Moist Hesperus hath quench'd his sleepy lamp. Shakspeare.

If she had not been drained, she might have tiled her palaces with occidental gold and silver. Howell.

East and west have been the obvious conceptions of philosophers, magnifying the condition of India above the setting and occidental climates. Brown, Vulg. Err.

OCCI'DUOUS. adj. [occidens, Latin.] Western.

OCCI'PITAL. adj. [occipitalis, Lat.] Placed in the hinder part of the head.

O'CCIPUT. n. s. [Latin.] The hinder part of the head.

His broad-brim'd hat
Hangs o'er his occiput most quaintly,
To make the knave appear more saintly. Butler.

OCCI'SION.✝ n. s. [from occisio, Lat.] The act of killing.

This kind of occision of a man, according to the laws of the kingdom, and in execution thereof, ought not be numbered in the rank of crimes. Hale, H. P. C. ch. 42.

To OCCLU'DE. v. a. [occludo, Latin.] To shut up.

They take it up, and roll it upon the earths, whereby occluding the pores they conserve the natural humidity, and so prevent corruption. Brown.

OCCLU'SE. adj. [occlusus, Latin.] Shut up; closed.

The appulse is either plenary and occluse, so as to preclude all passages of breath or voice through the mouth; or else partial and pervious, so as to give them some passages out of the mouth. Holder on Speech.

OCCLU'SION.✝ n. s. [from occlusio, Latin.] The act of shutting up.

The constriction and occlusion of the orifice. Howell, Lett. i. iii. 30.

OCCU'LT. adj. [occulte, Fr. occultus, Lat.] Secret; hidden; unknown; undiscoverable.

An artist will play a lesson on an instrument without minding a stroke; and our tongues will run divisions in a tune not missing a note, even when our thoughts are totally engaged elsewhere: which effects are to be attributed to some secret act of the soul, which to us is utterly occult, and without the ken of our intellects. Glanville.

These instincts we call occult qualities; which is all one with saying that we do not understand how they work. L'Estrange.

These are manifest qualities, and their causes only are occult. And the Aristotelians give the name of occult qualities not to manifest qualities, but to such qualities only as they supposed to lie hid in bodies, and to be the unknown causes of manifest effects. Newton, Opt.

OCCULTA'TION. n. s. [occultatio, Latin.] In astronomy, is the time that a star or planet is hid from our sight, when eclipsed by interposition of the body of the moon, or some other planet between it and us. Harris.

OCCU'LTED.* adj. [from occult.] Secret. Not in use.

If his occulted guilt
Do not itself unkennel in one speech,
It is a damned ghost that we have seen. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

OCCU'LTNESS. n. s. [from occult.] Secretness; state of being hid.

O'CCUPANCY. n. s. [from occupans, Latin.] The act of taking possession.

Of moveables, some are things natural; others, things artificial. Property in the first is gained by occupancy, in the latter by improvement. Warburton on Lit. Property.

O'CCUPANT.✝ n. s. [occupans, Latin.] He that takes possession of any thing.

Of beasts and birds the property passeth with the possession, and goeth to the occupant; but of civil people not so. Bacon.

The number of the apostles was not yet full: one room is left void for a future occupant. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 3.

To O'CCUPATE. v. a. [occupo, Latin.] To possess; to hold; to take up.

Drunken men are taken with a plain destitution in voluntary motion; for that the spirits of the wine oppress the spirits animal, and occupate part of the place where they are, and so make them weak to move. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

OCCUPA'TION. n. s. [from occupation, Fr. occupatio, Lat.]

1. The act of taking possession.

Spain hath enlarged the bounds of its crown within this last sixscore years, much more than the Ottomans: I speak not of matches or unions, but of arms, occupations, invasions. Bacon.

2. Employment; business.

Such were the distresses of the then infant world; so incessant their occupations about provision for food, that there was little leisure to commit any thing to writing. Woodward.

In your most busy occupations, when you are never so much taken up with other affairs, yet now and then send up an ejaculation to the God of your salvation. Wake.

3. Trade; calling; vocation.

The red pestilence strike all trades in Rome,
And occupations perish. Shakspeare, Coriol.

He was of the same craft with them, and wrought, for by their occupation they were tent-makers. Acts, xviii. 3.

O'CCUPIER. n. s. [from occupy.]

1. A possessor; one who takes into his possession.
If the title of occupiers be good in a land unpeopled, why should it be bad accounted in a country peopled thinly? Ralegh.

2. One who follows any employment.
Thy merchandise, and the occupiers of thy merchandise, shall fall into the midst of the seas. Ezek. xxvii. 27.

To O'CCUPY. v. a. [occuper, Fr. occupo, Lat.]

1. To possess; to keep; to take up.
How shall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned say Amen at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest? 1 Cor. xiv. 16.
Powder being suddenly fired altogether, upon this high rarefaction, requireth a greater space than before its body occupied. Brown, Vulg. Err.
He must assert infinite generations before that first deluge; and then the earth could not receive them, but the infinite bodies of men must occupy an infinite space. Bentley, Sermons.

2. To busy; to employ.
An archbishop may have cause to occupy more chaplains than six. Act of Hen. VIII.
They occupied themselves about the sabbath, yielding exceeding praise to the Lord. 2 Mac. viii. 27.
How can he get wisdom that driveth oxen and is occupied in their labours, and whose talk is of bullocks? Ecc. xxxviii. 25.
He that giveth his mind to the law of the most high, and is occupied in the meditation thereof, will seek out the wisdom of all the ancient, and be occupied in prophecies. Ecclus. xxxix. 1.

3. To follow as business.
They that go down to the sea in ships, and occupy their business in deep waters. Ps. 107 Comm. Pr.
Mariners were in thee to occupy thy merchandise. Ez. xxvii. 9

4. To use; to expend.
All the gold occupied for the work, was twenty and nine talents. Exodus, xxxviii. 24.

To O'CCUPY. v. n. To follow business.
He called his ten servants, and delivered them ten pounds, and said unto them, Occupy, till I come. St. Luke, xix. 13.

To OCCU'R. v. n. [occurro, Latin.]

1. To be presented to the memory or attention.
There doth not occur to me any use of this experiment for profit. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
The mind should be always ready to turn itself to the variety of objects that occur, and allow them as much consideration as shall be thought fit. Locke.
The far greater part of the examples that occur to us, are so many encouragements to vice and disobedience. Rogers.

2. To appear here and there.
In Scripture though the word heir occur, yet there is no such thing as heir in our author's sense. Locke.

3. To clash; to strike against; to meet.
Bodies have a determinate motion according to the degrees of their external impulse, their inward principle of gravitation, and the resistance of the bodies they occur with. Bentley.

4. To obviate; to intercept; to make opposition to. A latinism.
Before I begin that I must occur to one specious objection against this proposition. Bentley.

OCCU'RRENCE. n. s. [occurrence, Fr. from occur: this was perhaps originally occurents.]

1. Incident; accidental event.
In education most time is to be bestowed on that which is of the greatest consequence in the ordinary course and occurrences of that life the young man is designed for. Locke.

2. Occasional presentation.
Voyages detain the mind by the perpetual occurrence and expectation of something new. Watts.

OCCU'RRENT. n. s. [occurrent, Fr. occurrens, Latin.] Incident; any thing that happens.
Contentions were as yet never able to prevent two evils, the one a mutual exchange of unseemly and unjust disgraces, the other a common hazard of both, to be made a prey by such as study how to work upon all occurrents, with most advantage in private. Hooker's Dedication.
He did himself certify all the news and occurrents in every particular, from Calice, to the mayor and aldermen of London. Bacon, Hen. VII.

OCCU'RSION. n. s. [occursus, Latin.] Clash; mutual blow.
In the resolution of bodies by fire, some of the dissipated parts may, by their various occursion occasioned by the heat, stick closely. Boyle.
Now should those active particles, ever and anon justled by the occursion of other bodies, so orderly keep their cells without alteration of site. Glanville, Sceps.

O'CEAN.✝ n. s. [ocean, Fr. oceanus, Latin; ὠκεανὸς, Greek, from ὠκέως ναίειν, to flow or slide swiftly. Eustathius. Others say, that the Greeks adopted the Phenician word og, which denotes the circumference of the ocean, and which is derived from the Hebrew hhog, it surrounds.]

1. The main; the great sea.
Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood
Clean from my hand? Shakspeare, Macbeth.
The golden sun salutes the morn,
And, having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiack. Tit. Andronicus.

2. Any immense expanse.
Time, in general, is to duration, as place to expansion. They are so much of those boundless oceans of eternity and immensity, as is set out and distinguished from the rest, to denote the position of finite real beings, in those uniform, infinite oceans of duration and space. Locke.

O'CEAN.✝ adj. [This is not usual, though conformable to the original import of the word, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Milton. Nothing, however, was more usual among our old writers.] Pertaining to the main or great sea.
At forty miles beyond the city, it falleth into the ocean sea. Robinson, Tr. of More's Utopia, (1551,) ch. 2.
To burst the billows of the ocean sea. Hist. of Orlando Furioso, (1599.)
And too long painted on the ocean streams. Drummond, Poems, P. ii. (1616.)
In bulk as huge as that sea-beast
Leviathan, which God of all his works
Created hugest that swim the ocean stream. Milton, P. L.
Bounds were set
To darkness, such as bound the ocean wave. Milton, P. L.

OCEA'NICK.✝ adj. [from ocean.] Pertaining to the ocean. Dict.
No one yet knows, to what distance any of the oceanic birds go to sea. Cook's Voyage.

OCE'LLATED. adj. [ocellatus, Latin.] Resembling the eye.
The white butterfly lays its offspring on cabbage leaves; a very beautiful reddish ocellated one. Derham, Phys. Theol.

O'CHRE.✝ n. s. [ochre, ocre, Fr. ὤχρα, Gr. perhaps from ὠχρὸς, pale.]
The earths distinguished by the name of ochres are those which have rough or naturally dusty surfaces, are but slightly coherent in their texture, and are composed of fine and soft argillaceous particles, and are readily diffusible in water. They are of various colours; such as red, yellow, blue, green, black. The yellow sort are called ochres of iron, and the blue ochres of copper. Hill, Mat. Med.

O'CHREOUS. adj. [from ochre.] Consisting of ochre.
In the interstices of the flakes is a grey, chalky, or ochreous matter. Woodward on Fossils.

O'CHREY. adj. [from ochre.] Partaking of ochre.
This is conveyed about by the water; as we find in earthy, ochrey, and other loose matter. Woodward.

O'chimy. n. s. [formed by corruption from alchymy.] A mixed base metal.

O'CTAGON. n. s. [ὀκτὼ and γωνία.] In geometry, a figure consisting of eight sides and angles; and this, when all the sides and angles are equal, is called a regular octagon, which may be inscribed in a circle. Harris.

Octa'gonal.† } adj. [from octagon.] Having eight
Octo'gonal. } angles and sides.

Here was anciently a large church, built in honour of that glorious triumph: but all that now remains of it is only an octogonal cupola, about eight yards in diameter. Maundrell, Trav. p. 104.

The font, remaining in its old situation near the chief entrance, is large, and well ornamented; and was probably constructed at the time of the present church, with some of whose windows the Gothick mouldings on the faces of its octogonal panes uniformly correspond. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 4.

Octa'ngular. adj. [octo and angulus, Lat.] Having eight angles. Dict.

Octa'ngularness. n. s. [from octangular.] The quality of having eight angles. Dict.

O'ctant. } adj. In astrology, is, when a planet is in O'ctile. } such an aspect or position with respect to another, that their places are only distant an eighth part of a circle or forty-five degrees. Dict.

O'ctateuch.* n. s. [octateuque, Fr. ὀκτὼ, eight, and τεῦχος, a work, Gr.] A name for the eight first books of the Old Testament.

Not unlike unto that [style] of Theodoret in his questions upon the octoteuch. Hanmer, View of Antiq. (1677,) p. 37.

O'ctave.† n. s. [octave, Fr. octavus, Lat.]

1. The eighth day after some peculiar festival.

It was a custom among the primitive Christians, to observe the octave or eighth day after their principal feasts with great solemnity. Wheatly on the Comm. Pr. ch. 5. § 5.

2. Eight days together after a festival. Ainsworth.

Celestine granted from the feast, — and in the octaves, every day, thirty thousand yeares of pardon! Fulke against Allen, (1580,) p. 356.

3. [In musick.] An eighth or an interval of eight sounds.

Although the same notes in the different octaves are in reality unisonous, yet there is a variety of tones in treble, contratenor, tenor, and bass voices, which, when combined in a numerous chorus, produces an effect of a noble if not a sublime kind, that must be felt rather than described. Mason on Church Mus. p. 210.

O'ctave.* adj. Denoting eight.

Boccace — particularly is said to have invented the octave rhyme, or stanza of eight lines. Dryden, Pref. to the Fables.

OCTAVO.† n. s. [Latin.] A book is said to be in octavo when a sheet is folded into eight leaves. Dict.

They accompany the second edition of the original experiments, which were printed first in English in octavo. Boyle.

Folios, quartos, octavos, and duodecimos! ungrateful varlets that you are, who have so long taken up my house without paying for your lodging! Pope, Acc. of Curl.

Octe'nnial. adj. [from octennium, Lat.]

1. Happening every eighth year.
2. Lasting eight years.

OCTO'BER. n. s. [October, Latin; octobre, Fr.] The tenth month of the year, or the eighth numbered from March.

O'ctostyle. n. s. [ὀκτὼ and ςύλος, Gr.] In the ancient architecture, is the face of a building or ordonnance containing eight columns. Harris.

Octosy'llable.* adj. [octo, Lat. and syllable.] Consisting of eight syllables.

In the octosyllable metre Chaucer has left several compositions: — Though I call this the octosyllable metre from what I apprehend to have been its original form, it often consists of nine and sometimes ten syllables; but the eighth is always the last accented syllable. Tyrwhitt, Ess. on the Lang. and Vers. of Chaucer, § 8.

O'ctuple. adj. [octuplus, Lat.] Eight fold. Dict.

O'CULAR. adj. [oculaire, Fr. from oculus, Latin.] Depending on the eye; known by the eye.

Prove my love a whore,
Be sure of it: give me the ocular proof,
Or thou hadst better have been born a dog. Shakspeare.

He that would not believe the menace of God at first, it may be doubted whether before an ocular example he believed the curse at first. Brown.

O'cularly.† adv. [from ocular.] To the observation of the eye.

Great desire I had to inform myself ocularly of the state and practice of the Roman church; the knowledge whereof might be of no small use to me in my holy station. Bp. Hall, Specialties of his Life.

The same is ocularly confirmed by Vives upon Austin. Brown.

O'culate. adj. [oculatus, Lat.] Having eyes; knowing by the eye.

O'culist. n. s. [from oculus, Lat.] One who professes to cure distempers of the eyes.

If there be a speck in the eye, we take it off; but he were a strange oculist who would pull out the eye. Bacon.

I am no oculist, and if I should go to help one eye and put out the other, we should have an untoward business. L'Estrange.

O'CULUS beli. [Latin.]

The oculus beli of jewellers, probably of Pliny, is an accidental variety of the agat kind; having a grey horny ground, circular delineations, and a spot in the middle, resembling the eye; whence its name. Woodward.

ODD.† adj. [udda, Swedish. Dr. Johnson and others. Junius thinks it to be derived from added. Mr. H. Tooke contends, that it is the participle owed, ow'd. "Thus," he says, "when we are counting by couples, or by pairs, we say, one pair, two pairs, &c. and one owed, ow'd, to make up another pair. It has the same meaning when we say, an odd man, or an odd action: it still relates to pairing; and we mean — without a fellow, unmatched, not such another, one owed to make up a couple." Div. of Purley, ii. 38. This specious etymon will hardly be received. A later writer carries it to the Greek ἴδιος, "which signifies every thing that can relate to the unity, if I may so express myself, of a being. Ἴδιος, say the ordinary lexicographers, peculiaris, sui generis, suus, privatus." Whiter, Etym. Mag. p. 478. Our word is thus to be traced to the first syllable (id) of the Greek word; but the same etymologist also notices the Arab. ahd, the term for one.]

1. Not even; not divisible into equal numbers.

This is the third time; I hope
Good luck lies in odd numbers. Shakspeare.

What verity there is in that numeral conceit, in the lateral division of man by even and odd; ascribing the odd unto the right side, and the even unto the left; and so by parity, or imparity of letters in men's names, to determine misfortunes. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. More than a round number; indefinitely exceeding any number specified.

The account of the profits of Ulster, from the fifth year of Edward IIId until the eighth, do amount but to nine hundred and odd pounds. Davies on Ireland.

Sixteen hundred and odd years after the earth was made, it was destroyed in a deluge of water. Burnet, Theory.

The year, without regard to days, ends with an odd day and odd hours, odd minutes and odd seconds of minutes; so that it cannot be measured by any even number of days, hours, or minutes. Holder on Time.

3. Particular; uncouth; extraordinary; not like others; not to be numbered among any class. In a sense of contempt or dislike.

Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense,
Such a dependency of thing on thing,
As e'er I heard in madness. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Of thee, kind boy, I ask no red and white,
To make up my delight,
No odd becoming graces,
Black eyes, or little know not what's in faces. Suckling.

When I broke loose from writers who have employed their wit and parts in propagating of vice, I did not question but I should be treated as an odd kind of a fellow. Spectator.

No fool Pythagoras was thought;
He made his list'ning scholars stand,
Their mouth still cover'd with their hand:
Else, may be, some odd thinking youth,
Might have refus'd to let his ears
Attend the music of the spheres. Prior.

This blue colour being made by nothing else than by reflexion of a specular superficies, seems so odd a phenomenon and so difficult to be explained by the vulgar hypothesis of philosophers, that I could not but think it deserved to be taken notice of. Newton, Opt.

So proud I am no slave,
So impudent I own myself no knave,
So odd, my country's ruin makes me grave. Pope.

To counterpoise this hero of the mode,
Some for renown are singular and odd;
What other men dislike is sure to please,
Of all mankind these dear antipodes. Young.

4. Not noted; not taken into the common account; unheeded.

I left him cooling of the air with sighs,
In an odd angle of the isle. Shakspeare, Tempest.

There are yet missing some few odd lads that you remember not. Shakspeare, Tempest.

5. Strange; unaccountable; fantastical.

How strange or odd soe'er I bear myself,
As I, perchance, hereafter shall think meet,
To put an antick disposition on. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

It is an odd way of uniting parties to deprive a majority of part of their ancient right, by conferring it on a faction, who had never any right at all. Swift.

Patients have sometimes coveted odd things which have relieved them; as salt and vinegar. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

With such odd maxims to thy flocks retreat,
Nor furnish mirth for ministers of state. Young.

The dreams of sleeping men are made up of the waking man's ideas, though for the most part oddly put together. Locke.

This child was near being excluded out of the species of man barely by his shape. It is certain a figure a little more oddly turned had cast him, and he had been executed. Locke.

The real essence of substances we know not; and therefore are so undetermined in our nominal essences, which we make ourselves, that if several men were to be asked concerning some oddly-shaped fetus, whether it were a man or no? one should meet with different answers. Locke.

Her aukward love indeed was oddly fated;
She and her Polly were too near related. Prior.

As masters in the clare obscure,
With various light your eyes allure:
A flaming yellow here they spread;
Draw off in blue, or charge in red;
Yet from these colours oddly mix'd,
Your sight upon the whole is fix'd. Prior.

They had seen a great black substance lying on the ground very oddly shaped. Swift.

Fossils are very oddly and elegantly shaped, according to the modification of their constituent salts, or the cavities they are formed in. Bentley.

O'DDNESS.† n. s. [from odd.]

And though the sword, some understood,
In force had much the odds of wood,
'Twas nothing so; both sides were balanc'd
So equal, none knew which was valiant'st. Hudibras.

4. Quarrel; debate; dispute.

I can't speak
Any beginning to this peevish odds. Shakspeare, Othello.

What is the night?
Almost at odds with the morning, which is which. Shakspeare.

He flashes into one gross crime or other,
That sets us all at odds. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three;
Until the goose came out of door,
And staid the odds by adding four. Shakspeare, L. Lab. Lost.

Gods of whatsoe'er degree,
Resume not what themselves have given,
Or any brother god in heav'n;
Which keeps the peace among the gods,
Or they must always be at odds. Swift, Miscell.

ODE.† n. s. [ode, Fr. ᾠδή, Gr. from ἀείδω, to sing. Ronsard is said to have introduced the word into the French language.] A poem written to be sung to musick; a lyrick poem; the ode is either of the greater or less kind. The less is characterised by sweetness and ease; the greater by sublimity, rapture, and quickness of transition.

A man haunts the forests that abuses our young plants with carving Rozalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles, all forsooth deifying the name of Rosalind. Shakspeare, As you like it.

O run, prevent them with thy humble ode,
And lay it lowly at his blessed feet. Milton, Ode.

What work among you scholar gods!
Phœbus must write him am'rous odes;
And thou, poor cousin, must compose
His letters in submissive prose. Prior.

1. Hateful; detestable; abominable.

For ever all goodness will be most charming; for ever all wickedness will be most odious. Sprat.

Hatred is the passion of defence, and there is a kind of hostility included in its very essence. But then, if there could have been hatred in the world, when there was scarce any thing odious, it would have acted within the compass of its proper object. South.

Let not the Trojans, with a feign'd pretence
Of proffer'd peace, delude the Latian prince:
Expel from Italy that odious name. Dryden.

She breathes the odious fume
Of nauseous steams, and poisons all the room. Granville.

2. Exposed to hate.

Another means for raising money, was, by inquiring after offences of officers in great place, who as by unjust dealing they became most odious, so by justice in their punishments the prince acquired both love and applause. Hayward.

He had rendered himself odious to the parliament. Clarendon.

3. Causing hate; invidious.

The seventh from thee,
The only righteous in a world perverse,
And therefore hated, therefore so beset
With foes, for daring single to be just,
And utter odious truth, that God would come
To judge them with his saints. Milton, P. L.

4. A word expressive of disgust: used by women.

Green fields, and shady groves, and crystal springs,
And larks, and nightingales, are odious things;
But smoke, and dust, and noise, and crowds delight. Young.

O'DIOUSLY. adv. [from odious.]

1. Hatefully; abominably.

Had thy love, still odiously pretended,
Been as it ought, sincere, it would have taught thee
Far other reasonings. Milton, S. A.

2. Invidiously; so as to cause hate.

Arbitrary power no sober man can fear, either from the king's disposition or his practice; or even where you would odiously lay it, from his ministers. Dryden.

O'DIOUSNESS. n. s. [from odious.]

1. Hatefulness.

Have a true sense of his sin, of its odiousness, and of its danger. Wake, Prep. for Death.

2. The state of being hated.

There was left of the blood royal, an aged gentleman of approved goodness, who had gotten nothing by his cousin's power but danger from him, and odiousness for him. Sidney.

O'DIUM. n. s. [Latin.] Invidiousness; quality of provoking hate.

The odium and offences which some men's rigour or remissness had contracted upon my government, I was resolved to have expiated. King Charles.

She threw the odium of the fact on me,
And publickly avow'd her love to you. Dryden.

Projectors, and inventors of new taxes being hateful to the people, seldom fail of bringing odium upon their master. Davenant.

Fanning their odoriferous wings, dispense
Native perfumes, and whisper whence they stole
These balmy spoils. Milton, P. L.

Smelling bodies send forth effluvias of steams, without sensibly wasting. A grain of musk will send forth odoriferous particles for scores of years, without its being spent. Locke.

ODORI'FEROUSNESS. n. s. [from odoriferous.] Sweetness of scent; fragrance.

O'DOROUS.† adj. [odorus, Lat. odoreux, old French. Milton has once placed the accent on the second syllable of this word; which, Mr. Nares says, is a licence found only in this passage, and, if the etymology were considered, would be accounted right. But this accentuation is not peculiar to Milton.] Fragrant; perfumed; sweet of scent.

Such fragrant flowers do give most odorous smell,
But her sweet odour did them all excel. Spenser.

Their private roofs on odorous timber borne,
Such as might palaces for kings adorn. Waller.

O'DOUR. n. s. [odor, Lat. odeur, Fr.]

1. Scent, whether good or bad.

Democritus, when he lay a dying, sent for loaves of new bread, which having opened and poured a little wine into them, he kept himself alive with the odour till a certain feast was past. Bacon.

Infusions in air, for so we may call odours, have the same diversities with infusions in water; in that the several odours which are in one flower or other body, issue at several times, some earlier, some later. Bacon.

They refer sapor unto salt, and odour unto sulphur; they vary much concerning colour. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Where silver riv'lets play thro' flow'ry meads,
And woodbines give their sweets, and limes their shades,
Black kennels absent odours she regrets,
And stops her nose at beds of violets. Young.

2. Fragrance; perfume; sweet scent.

Me seem'd I smelt a garden of sweet flow'rs,
That dainty odours from them threw around,
For damsels fit to deck their lovers' bow'rs. Spenser.

By her intercession with the king she would lay a most seasonable and popular obligation upon the whole nation, and leave a pleasant odour of her grace and favour to the people behind her. Clarendon.

The Levites burned the holy incense in such quantities as refreshed the whole multitude with its odours, and filled all the region about them with perfume. Addison.

OE. This combination of vowels does not properly belong to our language, nor is ever found but in words derived from the Greek, and not yet wholly conformed to our manner of writing: oe has in such words the sound of E.

OECONO'MICKS. n. s. [οἰκονομικὸς; œconomique, Fr. from oeconomy. Both it and its derivatives are under economy.] Management of household affairs.

A prince's leaving his business wholly to his ministers, is as dangerous an errour in politicks, as a master's committing all to his servant, is in oeconomicks. L'Estrange.

OECUME'NICAL. adj. [οἰκεμενικὸς, from οἰκημενη.] General; respecting the whole habitable world.

This Nicene council was not received as an oecumenical council in any of the eastern patriarchates, excepting only that of Constantinople. Stillingfleet.

We must not make a computation of the Catholick church from that part of it which was within the compass of the Roman empire, though called oecumenical. Leslie.

OEDE'MA.† n. s. [οἴδημα, from οἰδέω, to swell. The word is oedeme, in the enlarged edition of Bullokar's Expositor, 1656.] A tumour. It is now and commonly by surgeons confined to a white, soft, insensible tumour, proceeding from cold and aqueous humours, such as happen to hydropick constitutions. Quincy.

OEDEMA'TICK. } adj. [from oedema.] Pertaining to OEDE'MATOUS. } an oedema.

With circle after circle as they fell,
And now the lovely face but half appears,
O'er-run with wrinkles and defac'd with tears. Addison.

OESO'PHAGUS. n. s. [from οἰσὸς, wicker, from some similitude in the structure of this part to the contexture of that; and φάγω to eat.] The gullet; a long, large, and round canal, that descends from the mouth, lying all along between the windpipe and the joints of the neck and back, to the fifth joint of the back, where it turns a little to the right, and gives way to the descending artery; and both run by one another, till at the ninth the oesophagus turns again to the left, pierces the midriff, and is continued to the left orifice of the stomach. Quincy.

Wounds penetrating the oesophagus and aspera arteria, require to be stitched close, especially those of the oesophagus, where the sustenance and saliva so continually presseth into it. Wiseman, Surgery.

OF.† prep. [af, Goth. of, Icel. of, Saxon. This word is sometimes redundantly placed after the participle active; and should be avoided. Some have objected to the ternary exhibition, in one sentence, of this word: "She [Great Britain] sits in the midst of a mighty affluence of all the necessaries and conveniences of life." Addison, State of the War. The image in this sentence, bishop Hurd has observed, is fine; but the expression somewhat exceptionable on the account of three ofs coming together. Others see no inelegance in this accumulation; and cite Genesis, iii. 2. "We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden."]

1. It is put before the substantive that follows another in construction; as, of these part were slain; that is, part of these.

Nor fire nor fate their bays shall blast,
Nor death's dark vail their days o'ercast. Denham.

To OFFU'SCATE.† v. a. offusco, Latin; offusquer, Fr.] To dim; to cloud; to darken.

Disdaining and despising all vice and laziness, which offuscate and diffame the children of good houses. Wodroephe, Fr. Gramm. (1623,) p. 364.

Offusca'tion.† n. s. [from offuscate.] The act of darkening.

Is this the honour which man hath by being a little world, that he hath these earthquakes in himself, sudden shakings; these lightnings, sudden flashes; these thunders, sudden noises, these eclypses, sudden offuscations and darknings of his senses, &c. Donne, Devot. p. 6.

Oft.† adv. [oft, Sax. ufta, Goth. oft, Icel. from of, oft, too much. Serenius. In the superlative, oftest.] Often; frequently; not rarely; not seldom.

In labours more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. 2 Cor. xi. 23.

It may be a true faith, for so much as it is; it is one part of true faith, which is oft mistaken for the whole. Hammond.

Glory and popular praise,
Rocks, whereon greatest men have oftest wreck'd.
Milton, P. R.

Favours to none, to all she smiles extends,
Oft she rejects, but never once offends. Pope.

O'ften.† adv. [from oft, Saxon; in the comparative, oftener, oftner, superlative, oftenest, oftnest.] Oft; frequently, many times, not seldom.

The queen that bore thee,
Oftner upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she liv'd. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

In journeying often. 2 Cor. xi. 26.

He sent for him the oftener. Acts, xxiv. 26.

A lusty black-brow'd girl, with forehead broad and high,
That often had bewitcht the sea-gods with her eye. Drayton.

Who does not more admire Cicero as an author, than as a consul of Rome, and does not oftner talk of the celebrated writers of our own country in former ages, than of any among their contemporaries? Addison, Freeholder.

O'ften.* adj. Frequent.

Our merciful God first visited this people in great and often mercy. Abp. Sandys, Serm.

Use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities. 1 Tim. v. 23.

See, by often trials, what turn they take. Locke on Educat. § 66.

O'ftenness.* n. s. [from often.] Frequency.

Degrees of well-doing there could be none, except in the seldomness and oftenness of doing well. Hooker.

O'ftentimes. adv. [often and times. From the composition of this word it is reasonable to believe, that oft was once an adjective, of which often was the plural; which seems retained in the phrase thine often infirmities. See Often.] Frequently; many times, often.

Is our faith in the blessed Trinity a matter needless, to be so oftentimes mentioned and opened in the principal part of that duty which we owe to God, our publick prayer? Hooker.

The difficulty was by what means they could ever arrive to places oftentimes so remote from the ocean. Woodward.

It is equally necessary that there should be a future state, to vindicate the justice of God, and solve the present irregularities of Providence, whether the best men be oftentimes only, or always the most miserable. Atterbury.

O'fttimes. adv. [oft and times.] Frequently; often.

Ofttimes nothing profits more
Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right,
Well manag'd. Milton, P. L.

Ofttimes before I hither did resort,
Charm'd with the conversation of a man
Who led a rural life. Dryden and Lee.

Ogdoa'stich.* n. s. [ὀγδοος and στίχος, Greek.] A poem of eight lines.

His request to Diana in an hexastich, and her answer in an ogdoastich, hexameters and pentameters, — are in the British story. Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 1.

It will not be much out of the bias to insert, in this ogdoastique, a few verses of the Latin which was spoken in that age. Howell, Instr. For. Trav. p. 143.

OGE'E.† } n. s. [ogive, augive, Fr. Cotgrave.] A

O'GLE.* n. s. [from the verb.] A side glance.

I teach the church ogle in the morning, and the playhouse ogle by candle-light. I have also brought over with me a new flying ogle fit for the ring. Addison, Spect. No. 46.

O'GLER. n. s. [oogheler, Dutch.] A sly gazer; one who views with side glances.

Upon the disuse of the neck-piece, the tribe of oglers stared the fair sex in the neck rather than in the face. Addison.

Jack was a prodigious ogler; he would ogle you the outside of his eye inward, and the white upward. Arbuthnot.

O'GLING.* n. s. [from the verb.] Practice of viewing with side glances.

If the female tongue will be in motion, why should it not be set to go right? Could they talk of the different aspects and conjunctions of planets, they need not be at the pains to comment upon oglings and clandestine marriages. Addison.

If we inspect into the usual process of modern courtship, we shall find it to consist in a devout turn of the eyes, called ogling. Swift, Fragment.

The speech from the throne, in the opening of the session in 1795, threw out oglings and glances of tenderness. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

O'GLIO. n. s. [from olla, Spanish.] A dish made by mingling different kinds of meat; a medley; a hotchpotch.

These general motives of the common good, I will not so much as once offer up to your lordship, though they have still the upper end; yet, like great oglios, they rather make a shew than provoke appetite. Suckling.

Where is there such an oglio or medley of various opinions in the world again, as those men entertain in their service, without any scruple as to the diversity of their sects and opinions? King Charles.

He that keeps an open house, should consider that there are oglios of guests, as well as of dishes, and that the liberty of a common table is as good as a tacit invitation to all sorts of intruders. L'Estrange.

O'GRE.* } n. s. [ogre, French.] An imaginary mon-
O'GRESS. } ster of the East.

The prince heard enough to convince him of his danger, and then perceived that the lady, who called herself the daughter of an Indian king, was an ogress; wife to one of those savage dæmons, called ogre; who stay in remote places, and make use of a thousand wiles to surprize and devour passengers. Transl. of Arabian Nights' Entertainments.

O'GRESSES.† n. s. [In heraldry.] Cannon balls of a black colour. Ainsworth.

Argent 2 bends sable betwixt two ogresses. Ashmole, Berk. ii. 417.

OH. interject. An exclamation denoting pain, sorrow, or surprise.

Oh me! all the horse have got over the river, what shall we do? Walton, Angler.

My eyes confess it,
My every action speaks my heart aloud;
But oh, the madness of my high attempt
Speaks louder yet! Dryden, Span. Friar.

OIL.† n. s. [æl, Saxon; aleu, Goth. from ala, ignem sustentare. Ihre, and Serenius. Oel, Teut. oleum, Lat. ἔλαιον, Gr.]

1. The juice of olives expressed.

Bring pure oil olive beaten for the light. Ex. xxvii. 20.

2. Any fat, greasy, unctuous, thin matter.

In most birds there is only one gland; in which are divers cells, ending in two or three larger cells, lying under the nipple of the oil bag. Derham, Phys. Theol.

3. The juices of vegetables, whether expressed or drawn by the still, that will not mix with water.

Oil with chemists called sulphur, is the second of their hypostatical, and of the true five chymical principles. It is an inflammable, unctuous, subtile substance, which usually rises after the spirit. The chemists attribute to this principle all diversity of colours. There are two sorts of oil; one, which will swim upon water, as oil of anniseed and lavender, which the chemists call essential; and another kind, which probably is mixt with salts, and will sink in water, as the oil of guaiacum and cloves. Harris.

After this expressed oil, we made trial of a distilled one; and for that purpose made choice of the common oil or spirit. Boyle.

A curious artist long inur'd to toils
Of gentler sort, with combs, and fragrant oils,
Whether by chance, or by some god inspir'd,
So touch'd his curls, his mighty soul was fir'd. Young.

To OIL. v. a. [from the noun.] To smear or lubricate with oil.

The men fell a rubbing of armour, which a great while had lain oiled. Wotton.

Amber will attract straws thus oiled, it will convert the needles of dials, made either of brass or iron, although they be much oiled, for in those needles consisting free upon their centre there can be no adhesion. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Swift oils many a spring which Harley moves. Swift.

OI'LCOLOUR. n. s. [oil and colour.] Colour made by grinding coloured substances in oil.

Oilcolours, after they are brought to their due temper, may be preserved long in some degree of softness, kept all the while under water. Boyle.

OI'LER.* n. s. [from oil.] One who trades in oils and pickles. This word is in Huloet. We now say oilman.

OI'LINESS. n. s. [from oily.] Unctuousness; greasiness; quality approaching to that of oil.

He is not at one with himself what account to give of it. Tillotson.

10. [On, l'on, French. It is used sometimes a general or indefinite nominative for any man, any person. For one the English formerly used men; as, they live obscurely, men know not how; or die obscurely, men mark not when. Ascham. For which it would now be said, one knows not how, one knows not when; or, it is not known how.] Any person; any man indefinitely.

It is not so worthy to be brought to heroical effects by fortune or necessity, like Ulysses and Æneas, as by one's own choice and working. Sidney.

One may be little the wiser for reading this dialogue, since it neither sets forth what Erona is, nor what the cause should be which threatens her with death. Sidney.

One would imagine these to be the expressions of a man blessed with ease, affluence, and power; not of one who had been just stripped of all those advantages. Atterbury.

For provoking of urine, one should begin with the gentlest first. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

For some time one was not thought to understand Aristotle, unless he had read him with Averroe's comment. Baker.

11. A person of particular character.

Then must you speak
Of one that lov'd not wisely, but too well;
Of one not easily jealous; but being wrought
Perplex'd in the extreme. Shakspeare, Othello.

With lives and fortunes trusting one
Who so discreetly us'd his own. Waller.

Edward I. was one who very well knew how to use a victory, as well as obtain it. Hale.

One who contemned divine and human laws. Dryden.

Forgive me, if that title I afford
To one, whom Nature meant to be a lord. Harte.

12. One has sometimes a plural, either when it stands for persons indefinitely; as, the great ones of the world: or when it relates to some thing going before, and is only the representative of the antecedent noun. This relative mode of speech, whether singular or plural, is in my ear not very elegant, yet is used by good authors.

Be not found here; hence with your little ones. Shakspeare.

Does the son receive a natural life? The subject enjoys a civil one: that's but the matter, this the form. Holyday.

These successes are more glorious which bring benefit to the world, than such ruinous ones as are dyed in human blood. Glanville.

He that will overlook the true reason of a thing which is but one, may easily find many false ones, error being infinite. Tillotson.

The following plain rules and directions, are not the less useful because they are plain ones. Atterbuay.

There are many whose waking thoughts are wholly employed on their sleeping ones. Addison, Spect.

Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad sovereign, who might possibly have been a good one, had he been invested with an authority limited by law. Addison, Freeholder.

This evil fortune which attends extraordinary men, hath been imputed to divers causes that need not be set down, when so obvious an one occurs, that when a great genius appears, the dunces are all in conspiracy against him. Swift.

13. One another, is a mode of speech very frequent; as, they love one another; that is, one of them loves another: the storm beats the trees against one another; that is, one against another.

In democratical governments, war did commonly unite the minds of men; when they had enemies abroad, they did not contend with one another at home. Davenant.

O'NEBERRY. n. s. [aconitum, Lat.] Wolf'sbane.

O'NEEYED. adj. [one and eye.] Having only one eye.

A sign-post dauber wou'd disdain to paint
The one-ey'd hero on his elephant. Dryden.

The mighty family
Of one-ey'd brothers hasten to the shore. Addison.

ONEIROCRI'TICAL. adj. [oneirocritique, French; ὀνειροκριτικὸς, Gr. it should therefore according to analogy be written onirocritical and onirocritick.] Interpretative of dreams.

If a man has no mind to pass by abruptly from his imagined to his real circumstances, he may employ himself in that new kind of observation which my oneirocritical correspondent has directed him to make. Addison, Spect.

ONEIROCRI'TICK. n. s. [ὀνειροκριτικός, Gr.] An interpreter of dreams.

Having surveyed all ranks and professions, I do not find in any quarter of the town an oneirocritick, or an interpreter of dreams. Addison, Spect.

ONEIROCRI'TICKS.* n. s. pl. Interpretations of dreams.

A pretence as groundless and silly as the dreaming oneirocriticks of Artemidorus and Astrampsychus, or the modern chiromancy and divinations of gipsies. Bentley, Serm. 4.

ONEIROMA'NCY.* n. s. [ὄνειρος and μαντεία, Gr.] Divination by dreams.

These rude observations were at last licked into an art, physical oneiromancy; in which physicians, from a consideration of the dreams, proceeded to a crisis of the disposition of the person. Spencer on Prod. (1665,) p. 297.

O'NEMENT.* n. s. [from one.] State of being one; union. Not in use.

Ye witless gallants, I beshrew your hearts,
That sets such discord 'twixt agreeing parts,
Which never can be set at onement more. Bp. Hall, Sat. iii. 7.

O'NENESS. n. s. [from one.] Unity; the quality of being one.

Our God is one, or rather very oneness and mere unity, having nothing but itself in itself, and not consisting, as all things do besides God, of many things. Hooker.

The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypostases, is the one eternal indivisible divine nature, and the eterntiy of the Son's generation, and his co-eternity, and his consubstantiality with the Father when he came down from Heaven and was incarnate. Hammond.

O'NERARY. adj. [onerarius, Lat. oneraire, Fr.] Fitted for carriage or burthens; comprising a burthen.

To O'NERATE. v. a. [onero, Latin.] To load; to burthen.

ONERA'TION. n. s. [from onerate.] The act of loading. Dict.

O'NEROUS.† adj. [onereux, French; onerosus, Lat.] Burthensome; oppressive.

Overcome and tormented with worldly cares, and onerous business Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 171.

A banished person, absent out of necessity, retains all things onerous to himself, as a punishment for his crime. Ayliffe.

O'NION.† n. s. [oignon, French; unnan, Su. Goth. unio, Latin.] A plant.

If the boy have not a woman's gift
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well. Shakspeare, Tam of the Shrew.
I an ass, am onion-ey'd. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.
This is ev'ry cook's opinion,
No savoury dish without an onion:
But lest your kissing should be spoil'd,
Your onions must be throughly boil'd. Swift.

O'NLY.† adj. [from one, onely, or onelike; ænlic, Saxon.]

1. Single; one and no more.

Of all whom fortune to my sword did bring,
This only man was worth the conquering. Dryden.

2. This and no other.

The only child of shadeful Savernake. Drayton.

The logick now in use has long possessed the chair, as the only art taught in the schools for the direction of the mind in the study of the sciences. Locke.

3. This above all other: as, he is the only man for musick.

Whose only joy was to relieve the needs
Of wretched souls. Spenser, F. Q.
His only heart-sore, and his only foe. Spenser, F. Q.

4.

With the only twinkle of her eye
She could or save or spill. Spenser, F. Q.

The only sound
Of leaves and fuming rills. Milton, P. L.

O'NLY.† adv. [supposed by some to be an abbreviation of alonely. See ALONELY.]

1. Simply; singly; merely; barely.

I propose my thoughts only as conjectures. Burnet.

The posterity of the wicked inherit the fruit of their father's vices; and that not only by a just judgement, but from the natural course of things. Tillotson.

All who deserve his love, he makes his own;
And to be lov'd himself, needs only to be known. Dryden.

The practice of virtue is attended not only with present quiet and satisfaction, but with comfortable hope of a future recompence. Nelson.

Nor must this contrition be exercised by us, only for grosser evils; but when we live the best. Wake.

2. So and no otherwise.

Every imagination of the thoughts of his heart, was only evil continually. Gen. vi. 5.

3. Singly without more: as, only begotten.

O'NOMANCY. n. s. [ὄνομα and μαντεία.] Divination by a name.

Destinies were superstitiously, by onomancy, deciphered out of names, as though the names and natures of men were suitable, and fatal necessities concurred herein with voluntary motion. Camden.

ONOMA'NTICAL. adj. [ὄνομα and μάντις.] Predicting by names.

Theodatus, when curious to know the success of his wars against the Romans, an onomantical or name-wisard Jew, willed him to shut up a number of swine and give some of them Roman names, others Gothish names with several marks, and there to leave them. Camden.

O'NSET.† n. s. [on and set.]

1. Attack; storm; assault; first brunt.

As well the soldier dieth, which standeth still, as he that gives the bravest onset Sidney.

All breathless, weary, faint,
Him spying, with fresh onset he assail'd,
And kindling new his courage, seeming queint,
Struck him so hugely, that through great constraint
He made him stoop. Spenser, F. Q.

The shout
Of battle now began, and rushing sound
Of onset. Milton, P. L.

Sometimes it gains a point; and presently it finds itself baffled and beaten off; yet still it renews the onset, attacks the difficulty afresh; plants this reasoning and that argument, like so many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way into the obstinate enclosed truth. South.

Without men and provisions it is impossible to secure conquests that are made in the first onsets of an invasion. Addison.

Observe
The first impetuous onsets of his grief;
Use every artifice to keep him stedfast. Philips.

2. Something added or set on by way of ornamental appendage. This sense, says Nicholson, is still retained in Northumberland, where onset means a tuft. Dr. Johnson. — The northern meaning is not disputed; but the word in the tragedy of Titus Andronicus, which Dr. Johnson cites as an example of that meaning, signifies simply a beginning; "an inchoation or ONSET," as Hakewill in his Apology for Providence illustrates it, p. 86. ed. 1630.

I will with deeds requite thy gentleness;
And for an onset, Titus, to advance
Thy name and honourable family,
Lavinia will I make my emperess. Tit. Andronicus.

To O'NSET. v. a. [from the noun.] To set upon; to begin. Not used.

This for a while was hotly onsetted and a reasonable price offered, but soon cooled again. Carew.

O'NSLAUGHT.† n. s. [on and slay. Sax. on-ʒlaʒan.

See ANSLAIGHT, and SLAUGHTER.] Attack; storm; onset. Not in use.

They made a halt
To view the ground, and where t' assault;
Then call'd a council, which was best,
By siege or onslaught, to invest
The enemy; and 'twas agreed
By storm and onslaught to proceed. Hudibras.

The several duels, onslaughts, storms, and military appearances. Gayton on D. Quix. p. 19.

ONTO'LOGIST. n. s. [from ontology.] One who considers the affections of being in general; a metaphysician.

ONTO'LOGY. n. s. [ὄντα and λόγος.] The science of the affections of being in general; metaphysicks.

The modes, accidents, and relations that belong to various beings, are copiously treated of in metaphysicks, or more properly ontology. Watts, Logick.

O'NWARD. adv. [onbpeanb, Sax.]

1. Forward; progressively.

My lord,
When you went onward on this ended action,
I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye. Shakspeare.

Satan was now at hand, and from his seat
The monster moving onward came as fast,
With horrid strides. Milton, P. L.

Him through the spicy forest onward come
Adam discern'd, as in the door he sat
Of his cool bower. Milton, P. L.

Not one looks backward, onward still he goes,
Yet ne'er looks forward farther than his nose. Pope.

2. In a state of advanced progression.

You are already so far onward of your way, that you have forsaken the imitation of ordinary converse. Dryden.

3. Somewhat farther.

A little onward lend thy guiding hand
To these dark steps, a little farther on. Milton, S. A.

O'NWARD.* adj. [from the adverb.]

1. Advanced; encreased; improved.

Philoxenus came to see how onward the fruits were of his friend's labour. Sidney.

2. Conducting; leading forward to perfection.

Sincerity,
Thou first of virtues, let no mortal leave
Thy onward path! Home, Trag. of Douglas.

In agonies of grief they curse the hour,
When first they left Religion's onward way.
Glynn, Day of Judgement.

O'NWARDS.* adv. In progression.

Onwards, that such separation may not be made of man and wife for heresy or misbelief, we need no other conviction than that peremptory and clear determination of our Saviour, which we have formerly insisted on.
Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 4. C. 2.

O'NYCHA. n. s. It is found in two different senses in Scripture. — The odoriferous snail or shell, and the stone onyx. The greatest part of commentators explain it by the onyx or odoriferous shell. The onyx is fished for in the Indies, where grows the spicanardi, the food of this fish and what makes its shell so aromatick. Calmet.

Take sweet spices, onycha, and galbanum. Ex. xxx. 34.

O'NYX. n. s. [ὄνυξ.] The onyx is a semipellucid gem, of which there are several species, but the bluish white kind, with brown and white zones, is the true onyx legitima of the ancients. Hill, Mat. Med.

Nor are her rare endowments to be sold,
For glittering sand by Ophir shown,
The blue-ey'd saphir, or rich onyx stone. Sandys.

The onyx is an accidental variety of the agat kind: it is of a dark horny colour, in which is a plate of a bluish white, and sometimes of red: when on one or both sides the white, there happens to lie also a plate of a reddish or flesh colour, the jewellers call the stone a sardonyx. Woodward on Fossils.

OOZE.† n. s. [either from eaux, waters, French; or pæs, wetness, Saxon. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius refers to the Su. Goth. os, the mouth of a river, "kaell-os, locus uliginosus;" and to the German asche, flowing water; which Wachter pronounces a Celtick word. See ASCHE in Wachter.]

1. Soft mud; mire at the bottom of water; slime.

My son i' the ooze is bedded. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Some carried up into their grounds the ooze or salt water mud, and found good profit thereby. Carew.

Old father Thames rais'd up his rev'rend head,
Deep in his ooze he sought his sedgy bed,
And shrunk his waters back into his urn. Dryden.

2. Soft flow; spring. This seems to be the meaning in Prior.

From his first fountain and beginning ooze,
Down to the sea each brook and torrent flows. Prior.

3. The liquor of a tanner's vat. [See Wachter in ASCHE.]

Before the bark of the oak is used, it is ground to powder, and the infusion of it in water is by the tanners termed ooze.
Woodland Companion, p. 4.

To OOZE. v. n. [from the noun.] To flow by stealth: to run gently; to drain away.

When the contracted limbs were cramp'd, even then
A wat'rish humour swell'd and ooz'd agen. Dryden.

The lily drinks
The latent rill, scarce oozing through the grass. Thomson.

O'OZY.† adj. [from ooze.] Miry; muddy; slimy.

His rustick crew with mighty poles
Would drive his prey out from their oozy holes,
And so pursue them down the rolling flood.
King, The Fisherman.

The oozy places and holes, which, it must be supposed, the sea left behind it. Leslie, Short Meth. with the Deists.

From his oozy bed
Old father Thames advanc'd his reverend head. Pope.

To OPA'CATE. v. a. [opaco, Lat.] To shade; to cloud; to darken; to obscure.

The same corpuscles upon the unstopping of the glass, did opacate that part of the air they moved in. Boyle.

OPA'CITY. n. s. [opacité, Fr. opacitas, Lat.] Cloudiness; want of transparency.

Can any thing escape eyes in whose opticks there is no opacity? Brown.

Had there not been any night, shadow, or opacity, we should never have had any determinate conceit of darkness. Glanville.

How much any body hath of colour, so much hath it of opacity, and by so much the more unfit is it to transmit the species. Ray on the Creation.

The least parts of almost all bodies, are in some measure transparent; and the opacity of those bodies ariseth from the multitude of reflexions caused in their internal parts. Newton.

OPA'COUS. adj. [opacus, Lat.] Dark; obscure; not transparent.

When he perceives that opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal diffusion through the whole place that it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, and more subtile far than they, and consequently, divisible into lesser atoms; and having lesser pores, gives less scope to our eyes to miss light. Digby.

Upon the firm opacous globe
Of this round world, whose first convex divides
The luminous inferiour orbs, inclos'd
From chaos, and the inroad of darkness old,
Satan alighted. Milton, P. L.

OPA'COUSNESS.* n. s. [from opacous.] The state of being opaque.

Mysteries, which (without these coverings) even the opacousness of the place were not obscure enough to conceal.
Evelyn, Sylv. § 8.

O'PAL. n. s. [opalus, Lat.] The opal is a very elegant and singular kind of stone, it hardly comes within the rank of the pellucid gems, being much more opake, and less hard. It is in the pebble shape, from the head of a pin to the bigness of a walnut. It is naturally bright, and shows all its beauty without the help of the lapidary: in colour it resembles the finest mother of pearl; its basis seeming a bluish or greyish white, but with a property of reflecting all the colours of the rainbow, as turned differently to the light. Hill, Mat. Med.

Thy mind is a very opal. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

The empyreal heaven, extended wide
In circuit, undetermin'd square or round;
With opal towers, and battlements adorn'd
Of living saphir. Milton, P. L.

We have this stone from Germany, and is the same with the opal of the ancients. Woodward on Fossils.

OPA'QUE.† adj. [opacus, Lat. Written also opake.] Dark; not transparent; cloudy.

The night's nimble net,
That doth encompass every opake ball.
More, Life of the Soul, iii. 2.

They
Shot upward still direct, whence no way round
Shadow from body opaque can fall. Milton, P. L.

These disappearing fixt stars were actually extinguished and turned into more opaque and gross planet-like bodies.
Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

OPA'QUE.* n. s. Opacity.

Through this opaque of nature and of soul,
This double night. Young, Night Th. 1.

Vivid green,
Warm brown, and black opake, the foreground bears Conspicuous. Mason.

OPA'QUENESS.* n. s. [from opaque.] State of being opaque.

The earth's opakeness, enemy to light.
More, Immortal. of the Soul, i. ii. 31.

To OPE.
To O'PEN. } v. a. [open, Saxon; op, Icelandick, ὀπή, Gr. a hole. Ope is used only in poetry, when one syllable is more convenient than two.]

1. To unclose; to unlock; to put into such a state as that the inner parts may be seen or entered: the contrary to shut.

The world's mine oyster,
Which I with sword will open.
Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

Before you fight, ope this letter. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

They consent to work us harm and woe,
To ope the gates, and so let in our foe. Fairfax.

If a man open a pit and not cover it, and an ox fall therein, the owner of the pit shall make it good. Ex. xxi. 33.

Let us pass through your land, and none shall do you any hurt: howbeit they would not open unto him. 1 Mac. v. 48.

Open thy mouth for the dumb in the cause of all such as are appointed to destruction. Prov. xxxi. 8.

Adam, now ope thine eyes; and first behold
The effects which thy original crime hath wrought
In some to spring from thee. Milton, P. L.

The draw bridges at Amsterdam part in the middle, and a vessel, though under sail, may pass them without the help of any one on shore; for the mast-head, or break-water of the ship bearing against the bridge in the middle, opens it. Brown.

Our fleet Apollo sends,
Where Tuscan Tyber rolls with rapid force,
And where Numicus opes his holy source. Dryden.

When first you ope your doors, and passing by
The sad ill-omen'd object meets your eye. Dryden.

My old wounds are open'd at this view,
And in my murderer's presence bleed anew. Dryden.

When the matter is made, the side must be opened to let it out. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To show; to discover.

The English did adventure far for to open the north parts of America. Abbot, Desc. of the World.

3. To divide; to break.

The wall of the cathedral church was opened by an earthquake, and shut again by a second. Addison on Italy.

4. To explain; to disclose.

Some things wisdom openeth by the sacred books of Scripture, some things by the glorious works of nature. Hooker.

Paul reasoned with them out of the Scriptures, opening and alleging, that Christ must needs have suffered and risen again from the dead. Acts, xvii. 3.

After the earl of Lincoln was slain, the king opened himself to some of his council, that he was sorry for the earl's death, because by him he might have known the bottom of his danger. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Grammont governour of Bayonne, took an exquisite notice of their persons and behaviour, and opened himself to some of his train, that he thought them to be gentlemen of much more worth than their habits bewrayed. Wotton.

A friend who relates his success, talks himself into a new pleasure; and by opening his misfortunes, leaves part of them behind him. Collier on Friendship.

5. To begin; to make the initial exhibition.

You retained him only for the opening of your cause, and your main lawyer is yet behind. Dryden, Ep. to the Whigs.

Homer opens his poem with the utmost simplicity and modesty; he continually grows upon the reader.
Notes on the Odyssey.

To OPE.
To O'PEN. } v. n.

1. To unclose itself; not to remain shut; not to continue closed.

The hundred doors
Ope of themselves; a rushing whirlwind roars
Within the cave. Dryden, Æn.

Unnumber'd treasures ope at once,
From each she nicely culls with curious toil,
And decks the goddess. Pope, Rape of the Lock.

2. To bark. A term of hunting.

If I cry out thus upon no trail, never trust me when I open again. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

The night restore our actions done by day;
The hounds in sleep will open for their prey. Dryden.

Hark! the dog opens, take thy certain aim;
The woodcock flutters. Gay, Rural Sports.

OPE.†
O'PEN. } adj. [Ope is scarcely used but by old authors, and by them in the primitive not figurative sense.]

1. Unclosed; not shut.

The gates are ope, now prove good seconds;
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the fliers. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Most sacrilegious murder hath broke ope
The lord's anointed temple, and stole thence
The life o' the building. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Then sent Sanballat his servant, with an open letter in his hand. Neh. vi. 5.

With the same key set ope the door
Wherewith you lock'd it fast before. Cleaveland.

Through the gate,
Wide open and unguarded, Satan pass'd. Milton, P. L.

They meet the chiefs returning from the fight,
And each with open arms embrac'd her chosen knight.
Dryden.

He, when Æneas on the plain appears,
Meets him with open arms and falling tears. Dryden.

The bounce broke ope the door. Dryden.

The door was ope, they blindly grope the way. Dryden.

2. Plain; apparent; evident; publick.

They crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame. Heb. vi. 6.

He irefully enrag'd would needs to op[illegible] wit[illegible] Drayton.

The under-work, transparent, shews the open arms.
Where open acts accuse, th' excuse is vain[illegible] Daniel.

3. Not wearing disguise; clear; artless; sincere.

He was so secret therein, as not daring to be open, that to no creature he ever spake of it. Sidney.

Lord Cordes, the hotter he was against the English in time of war, had the more credit in a negotiation of peace; and besides was held a man open and of good faith. Bacon.

The French are always open, familiar, and talkative; the Italians stiff, ceremonious, and reserved. Addison.

This reserved mysterious way of acting towards persons, who in right of their posts expected a more open treatment, was imputed to some hidden design. Swift.

His generous, open, undesigning heart,
Has begg'd his rival to sollicit for him. Addison, Cato.

4. Not clouded; clear.

With dry eyes, and with an open look,
She met his glance midway. Dryden, Boccace.

Then shall thy Craggs
On the east ore another Pollio shine;
With aspect open shall erect his head. Pope.

5. Not hidden; exposed to view.

In that little spot of ground that lies between those two great oceans of eternity, we are to exercise our thoughts, and lay open the treasures of the divine wisdom and goodness hid in this part of nature and providence. Burnet.

Moral principles require reasoning and discourse to discover the certainty of their truths: they lie not open as natural characters engraven on the mind. Locke.

6. Not restrained; not denied; not precluded.

If Demetrius and the craftsmen have a matter against any man, the law is open and there are deputies; let them implead one another. Acts, xix. 38.

7. Not cloudy; not gloomy. Dr. Johnson. — The solitary example, which Dr. Johnson here brings from Bacon, shews that not frosty, or mild, is the meaning of the word; and such is the general acceptation of an open winter.

An open and warm winter portendeth a hot and dry summer. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Did you ever see so open a winter in England? We have not had two frosty days; but it pays it off in rain. Swift, Lett.

8. Uncovered.

With open head, and foot all bare,
Hir haire to-sprad, she gan to fare. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

Here is better than the open air. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

And when at last in pity, you will die,
I'll watch your birth of immortality;
Then, turtle-like, I'll to my mate repair;
And teach you your first flight in open air. Dryden.

9. Exposed; without defence.

The service that I truly did his life,
Hath left me open to all injuries. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

10. Attentive.

Thine eyes are open upon all the sons of men, to give every one according to his ways. Jer. xxxii. 19.

The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry. Ps. xxxiv. 15.

O'PENER.† n. s. [from open.]

1. One that opens; one that unlocks; one that uncloses.

True opener of mine eyes,
Much better seems this vision, and more hope
Of peaceful days portends, than those two past. Milton, P. L.

It is a letter sealed, and sent; which to the bearer is but paper, but to the receiver and opener is full of power. Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 34.

2. Explainer; interpreter.

To us, th' imagin'd voice of heav'n itself;
The very opener and intelligencer
Between the grace, the sanctities of heav'n,
And our dull workings. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

3. That which separates; disuniter.

There [illegible] such openers of compound bodies, because [illegible] be some experiments in which it appeared. Boyle.

OPENEY'ED. adj. [open and eye.] Vigilant; watchful.

While you here do snoring lie,
Openeyed conspiracy
His time doth take. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Knowledge of good and ill, shun to taste. Milton, P. L.
If the operation of these salts be in convenient glasses promoted by warmth, the ascending steams may easily be caught and reduced into a penetrant spirit. Boyle.
Speculative painting, without the assistance of manual operation, can never attain to perfection, but slothfully languishes; for it was not with his tongue that Apelles performed his noble works. Dryden, Dufresnoy.
The pain and sickness caused by manna, are the effects of its operation on the stomach and guts by the size, motion and figure of its insensible parts. Locke.

2. Action; effect. This is often confounded with the former sense.

Repentance and renovation consist not in the strife, wish, or purpose, but in the actual operations of good life. Hammond.
Many medicinal drugs of rare operation. Heylyn.
That false fruit
Far other operation first display'd,
Carnal desire inflaming. Milton, P. L.
The offices appointed, and the powers exercised in the church by their institution and operation are holy. Pearson.
In this understanding piece of clock-work, his body as well as other senseless matter has colour, warmth, and softness. But these qualities are not subsistent in those bodies, but are operations of fancy begotten in something else. Bentley.

3. [In chirurgery.] The part of the art of healing which depends on the use of instruments.

4. The motions or employments of an army.

O'PERATIVE. adj. [from operate.] Having the power of acting; having forcible agency; active; vigorous; efficacious.

To be over curious in searching how God's all-piercing and operative spirit distinguishing gave form to the matter of the universal, is a search like unto his, who not contented with a known ford, will presume to pass over the greatest rivers in all parts where he is ignorant of their depths. Ralegh.
Many of the nobility endeavoured to make themselves popular, by speaking in parliament against those things which were most grateful to his majesty; and he thought a little discountenance upon those persons would suppress that spirit within themselves, or make the poison of it less operative upon others. Clarendon.
In actions of religion we should be zealous, active and operative, so far as prudence will permit. Bp. Taylor.
This circumstance of the promise must give life to all the rest, and make them operative toward the producing of good life. Decay of Chr. Piety.
It holds in all operative principles, especially in morality; in which not to proceed, is certainly to go backward. South.

Opinia'stre.* } Opinia'strous. } adj. [opiniastre, Fr.] Fond of one's own opinion. Not in use. The substantives opiniastre and opiniastrie have likewise not been received. See what Dr. Johnson says under opiniatrety.

Men are so far in love with their own opiniastre conceits, as that they cannot patiently endure opposition. Ralegh, Arts of Emp. ch. 14.

Next, in matters of death, the laws of England, whereof you have intruded to be an opiniastrous subadvocate, and are bound to defend them, conceive it not enjoined in Scripture, when or for what cause they shall be put to death, as in adultery, theft, and the like. Milton, Colasterion.

To Opi'niate.* v. a. [opiniatrer, Fr.] To maintain obstinately.

They did opiniate two principles, not distinct only, but contrary the one to the other. Barrow, Serm.

Opi'niative.† adj. [from opinion.]

1. Stiff in a preconceived notion.

If either the obstinacy of the pope's ambition, or the wilfulness or scrupulosity of any opinionative ministers should oppose against and impeach the unity of charity; then, the unity of authority to be interposed to assist it. Sir E. Sandys, State of Rel. (ed. 1605,) sign. T. 2.

2. Imagined: not proved.

It is difficult to find out truth, because it is in such inconsiderable proportions scattered in a mass of opinionative uncertainties, like the silver in Hiero's crown of gold. Glanville.

Opi'niativeness.* n. s. [from opinionative.] Inflexibility of opinion; obstinacy.

The first obstacle to good counsel is pertinacy or opiniativeness. Ralegh, Arts of Emp. ch. 14

Opi'niator. n. s. [opiniatre. French.] One fond of his own notion; inflexible; adherent to his own opinion.

What will not opiniators and self-believing men dispute of and make doubt of? Raleigh.

Essex left lord Roberts governour; a man of a sour and surly nature, a great opiniator, and one who must be overcome before he would believe that he could be so. Clarendon.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition; as it is pity but all such politick opiniators should. South.

Opinia'tre.† adj. [French.] Obstinate; stubborn; inflexible.

Spare yourself, lest you bejade the good galloway, your own opiniatre wit, and make the very conceit itself blush with spurgalling. Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

What in common life would denote a man rash, fool-hardy, hair-brained, opiniatre, crazed, is recommended in this scheme as the true method in speculation. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 15

Instead of an able man, you desire to have him an insignificant wrangler, opiniatre in discourse, and priding himself in contradicting others. Locke.

Opinia'tre.* n. s. One fond of his own notion one stiff in his own opinions.

To be termed a foppish simpleton, a clownish singularist, or non-conformist to ordinary usage, a stiff opiniatre, are opprobrious names, which divert many persons from their duty.
Barrow, vol. iii. S. 34.

OPINIA'TRETY. } n. s. [opiniatreté, French.] Obstinacy; inflexibility; determination of mind; stubborness. This word, though it has been tried in different forms, is not yet received, nor is it wanted.
OPI'NIATRY. }

Lest popular opiniatre should arise, we will deliver the chief opinions. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The one sets the thoughts upon wit and false colours, and not upon truth; the other teaches fallacy, wrangling and opiniatry. Locke on Education.

So much as we ourselves comprehend of truth and reason, so much we possess of real and true knowledge. The floating of other men's opinions in our brains, make us not one jot the more knowing, though they happen to be true: what in them was science, is in us but opiniatrety. Locke.

I can pass by opiniatry and the busy meddling of those who thrust themselves into every thing. Woodward, Lett.

I was extremely concerned at his opiniatrety in leaving me: but he shall not get rid so. Pope.

OPI'NION.† n. s. [opinion, Fr. opinio, Lat.]

1. Persuasion of the mind, without proof or certain knowledge.

Opinion is a light, vain, crude and imperfect thing, settled in the imagination, but never arriving at the understanding, there to obtain the tincture of reason. B. Jonson.

Opinion is, when the assent of the understanding is so far gained by evidence of probability, that it rather inclines to one persuasion than to another, yet not altogether without a mixture of incertainty or doubting. Hale.

Time wears out the fictions of opinion, and doth by degrees discover and unmask that fallacy of ungrounded persuasions; but confirms the dictates and sentiments of nature. Wilkins.

Blest be the princes who have fought
For pompous names, or wide dominion,
Since by their error we are taught,
That happiness is but opinion. Prior.

2. Sentiments; judgement; notion.

Where no such settled custom hath made it law, there it hath force only according to the strength of reason and circumstances joined with it, or as it shews the opinion and judgement of them that made it; but not at all as if it had any commanding power of obedience. Selden.

Can they make it out against the common sense and opinion of all mankind, that there is no such thing as a future state of misery for such as have lived ill here. South.

Charity itself commands us, where we know no ill, to think well of all; but friendship, that always goes a pitch higher, gives a man a peculiar right and claim to the good opinion of his friend. South.

We may allow this to be his opinion concerning heirs, that where there are divers children the eldest son has the right to be heir. Locke.

Philosophers are of opinion, that infinite space is possessed by God's infinite omnipresence. Locke.

A story out of Boccalini sufficiently shews us the opinion that judicious author entertained of the criticks. Addison.

3. Favourable judgement.

In actions of arms small matters are of great moment, especially when they serve to raise an opinion of commanders. Hayward.

Howsoever I have no opinion of those things; yet so much I conceive to be true, that strong imagination hath more force upon things living, than things merely inanimate. Bacon.

If a woman had no opinion of her own person and dress, she would never be angry at those who are of the opinion with herself. Law.

4. Reputation.

Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

You have the opinion
Of a valiant gentleman, one that dares
Fight, and maintain your honour against odds.
Shirley, Gamester.

To OPI'NION. v. a. [from the noun.] To opine; to think. A word out of use, and unworthy of revival.

The Stoicks opinioned the souls of wise men dwell about the moon, and those of fools wandered about the earth: whereas the Epicurians held nothing after death. Brown.

That the soul and the angels are devoid of quantity and dimension, is generally opinioned. Glanville, Scepsis.

OPI'NIONED.* adj. Attached to particular opinions; conceited.

He may cast him upon a bold self-opinioned physician, worse than his distemper. South, Serm. i. 298.

OPI'NIONATE.* } adj. [from opinion.] Obstinate: inflexible in opinion.
OPI'NIONATED. }

Are you so simple as not to discern between the choler of some few opinionate men, and the consequence of their opinions? Bp. Bedell, Lett. to Mr. Waddesworth, (about 1620,) p. 325.

People of clear heads are what the world calls opinionated. Shenstone.

OPI'NIONATELY.* adv. [from opinionate.] Obstinately; conceitedly; in one's own opinion.

Self-conceited people never agree well together: they are wilful in their brawls, and reason cannot reconcile them: where either are only opinionately wise, hell is there; unless the other be a patient merely. Feltham, Res. i. 85.

OPI'NIONATIVE. adj. [from opinion.] Fond of preconceived notions; stubborn.

Striking at the root of pedantry and opinionative assurance, would be no hindrance to the world's improvement. Glanville.

One would rather chuse a reader without art, than one ill-instructed with learning, but opinionative and without judgement. Burnet, The. of the Earth.

OPI'NIONATIVELY. adv. [from opinionative.] Stubbornly.

OPI'NIONATIVENESS. n. s. [from opinionative.] Obstinacy.

OPI'NIONIST.† n. s. [opinioniste, Fr. from opinion.] One fond of his own notions.

Every conceited opinionist sets up an infallible chair in his own brain. Glanville to Albius.

This was never called into question, till the conceited opinionist Jovinian, among his other paradoxes, ventured to broach the contrary doctrine. Bp. Bull, Works, i. 299.

OPI'PAROUS. adj. [opiparus, Lat.] Sumptuous. Dict.

OPITULA'TION. n. s. [opitulatio, Lat.] An aiding; a helping. Dict.

O'PIUM.† n. s. [ὄπιον, from ὀπὸς, Gr. juice. Our old word was opie. "Narcotikes, and opie of Thebes fine." Chaucer.] A juice, partly of the resinous, partly of the gummy kind. It is brought to us in flat cakes or masses, very heavy and of a dense texture, not perfectly dry: its colour is a dark brownish yellow; its smell is of a dead faint kind; and its taste very bitter and very acrid. It is brought from Natolia, Egypt, and the East Indies, produced from the white garden poppy; with which the fields of Asia-Minor are in many places sown. When the heads grow to maturity, but are yet soft, green, and full of juice, incisions are made in them, and from every one of these a few drops flow of a milky juice, which soon hardens into a solid consistence. The finest opium proceeds from the first incisions. What we generally have is the mere crude juice, worked up with water, or honey sufficient to bring it into form. Externally applied it is emollient, relaxing and discutient, and greatly promotes suppuration. A moderate dose of opium taken internally, is generally under a grain, yet custom will make people bear a dram, but in that case nature is vitiated. Its first effect is the making the patient cheerful; it removes melancholy, and dissipates the dread of danger; the Turks always take it when they are going to battle: it afterwards quiets the spirits, eases pain, and disposes to sleep. After the effect is over, the pain generally returns in a more violent manner; the spirits become lower than before, and the pulse languid. An immoderate dose of opium brings on drunkenness, cheerfulness, and loud laughter, at first, and, after many terrible symptoms, death itself. Those who have accustomed themselves to an immoderate use of opium, are apt to be faint, idle, and thoughtless; they lose their appetite, and grow old before their time. Hill.

Sleep hath forsook and given me o'er
To death's benumming opium as my only cure. Milton, S. A.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporific or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities, whereby it is fitted to produce different operations on different parts of our bodies. Locke.

O'PLE-TREE. n. s. [opulus, Lat.] A sort of tree; the witch-hazel. Ainsworth.

OPOBA'LSAMUM. n. s. [Latin.] Balm of Gilead.

OPODE'LDOC.* n. s. [In medicine.] The name of a plaster; and also of a popular ointment.

OPO'PONAX. n. s. [Latin.] A gum resin in small loose granules, and sometimes in large masses, of a strong disagreeable smell, and an acrid and extremely bitter taste; brought to us from the East, and known to the Greeks; but we are entirely ignorant of the plant which produces this drug. Hill.

OPO'SSUM.* n. s. An American animal.

Here is likewise that singular animal, called the opossum, which seems to be the wood-rat, mentioned by Charlevoix, in his history of Canada. Guthrie.

O'PPIDAN.† n. s. [oppidanus, Lat.] A townsman; an inhabitant of a town.

The oppidans, in the mean time, were not wanting to trouble us; and particularly the baillives. A. Wood, Ann. Univ. Ox. in 1528.

O'PPIDAN.* adj. Relating to a town.

Touching the temporal government of Rome, and oppidan affairs, there is a pretor, and some choice citizens, who sit on the capitol, Howell, Lett. i. i. 38.

To OPPI'GNERATE. v. a. [oppignero, Lat.] To pledge; to pawn. Not in use.

The duke of Guise Henry was the greatest usurer in France, for that he had turned all his estate into obligations; meaning that he had sold and oppignorated all his patrimony, to give large donatives to other men. Bacon.

Ferdinando merchanded with France, for the restoring Roussillion and Perpignan, oppignorated to them. Bacon.

To O'PPILATE.† v. a. oppilo, Latin; oppiler, Fr.] To heap up obstruction. Cockeram, and Sherwood.

OPPILA'TION.† n. s. [oppilation, Fr. from oppilate.] Obstruction; matter heaped together.

Nothing is worse than to feed on many dishes, or to protract the time of meats longer than ordinary: from thence proceed our infirmities: — thence, saith Fernelius, come crudities, wind, oppilations. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 71.

The ingredients prescribed in their substance actuate the spirits, reclude oppilations, and mundify the blood. Harvey.

O'PPILATIVE.† adj. [oppilative, Fr.] Obstructive. Sherwood.

OPPLE'TED. adj. [oppletus, Lat.] Filled; crouded.

To OPPO'NE.* v. a. [oppono, Lat.] To oppose. Not in use.

What can you not do
Against lords spiritual or temporal,
That shall oppone you. B. Jonson, Alchemist.

OPPO'NENCY.* n. s. [opponens, Lat.] The opening an academical disputation; the proposition of objections to a tenet: an exercise for a degree. See the second meaning of OPPONENT.

OPPO'NENT. adj. [opponens, Lat.] Opposite; adverse.

Ere the foundations of this earth were laid,
It was opponent to our search ordain'd,
That joy, still sought, should never be attain'd. Prior.

OPPO'NENT. n. s. [opponens, Lat.]

1. Antagonist; adversary.
2. One who begins the dispute by raising objections to a tenet, correlative to the defendant or respondent.

Inasmuch as ye go about to destroy a thing which is in force, and to draw in that which hath not as yet been received, to impose on us that which we think not ourselves bound unto; that therefore ye are not to claim in any conference other than the plaintiff's or opponent's part. Hooker.

How becomingly does Philopolis exercise his office, and seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long practised moderator. More.

OPPORTU'NE. adj. [opportun, Fr. opportunus, Lat.] Seasonable; convenient; fit; timely; well-timed; proper.

There was nothing to be added to this great king's felicity, being at the top of all worldly bliss, and the perpetual constancy of his prosperous successes, but an opportune death to withdraw him from any future blow of fortune. Bacon.

Will lift us up in spite of fate,
Nearer our ancient seat; perhaps in view
Of those bright confines, whence with neighb'ring arms
And opportune excursion, we may chance
Re-enter heav'n. Milton, P. L.

Consider'd every creature, which of all
Most opportune might serve his wiles; and found
The serpent subtlest beast of all the field. Milton, P. L.

OPPORTU'NELY. adv. [from opportune.] Seasonably: conveniently; with opportunity either of time or place.

He was resolved to chuse a war rather than to have Bretagne carried by France, being situate so opportunely to annoy England either for coast or trade. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Against these there is a proper objection, that they offend uniformity; whereof I am therefore opportunely induced to say somewhat. Wotton, Architecture.

The experiment does opportunely supply the deficiency. Boyle.

OPPORTU'NITY. n. s. [opportunité, Fr. opportunitas, Lat.] Fit time; fit place; time; convenience; suitableness of circumstances to any end.

A wise man will make more opportunities than he finds. Men's behaviour should be like their apparel, not too straight, but free for exercise. Bacon

Opportunity, like a sudden gust,
Hath swell'd my calmer thoughts into a tempest. —
Accursed opportunity!
That work'st our thoughts into desires, desires
To resolutions; those being ripe and quicken'd,
Thou giv'st them birth, and bring'st them forth to action. Denham.

Though their advice be good, their counsel wise,
Yet length still loses opportunities. Denham.

I had an opportunity to see the clouds descend, and after it was past, to ascend again so high as to get over part of the mountain. Brown, Trav.

Neglect no opportunity of doing good, nor check thy desire of doing it, by a vain fear of what may happen. Atterbury.

All poets have taken an opportunity to give long descriptions of the night. Broome.

OPPO'SAL.* n. s. [from oppose.] Opposition.

The castle gates opened, fearless of any further opposal. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 81.

To OPPO'SE. v. a. [opposer, French; oppono, Latin.]

1. To act against; to be adverse; to hinder; to resist.

There's no bottom, none
In my voluptuousness: and my desire
All continent impediments wou'd o'erbear,
That did oppose my will. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. To put in opposition; to offer as an antagonist or rival.

If all men are not naturally equal, I am sure all slaves are, and then I may, without presumption, oppose my single opinion to his. Locke.

3. To place as an obstacle.

Since he stands obdurate,
And that no lawful means can carry me
Out of his envy's reach, I do oppose
My patience to his fury. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

I through the seas pursu'd their exil'd race,
Engag'd the heavens, oppos'd the stormy main;
But billows roar'd and tempests rag'd in vain. Dryden.

4. To place in front; to place over against.

Her grace sat down
In a rich chair of state, opposing freely
The beauty of her person to the people. Shakspeare.

To OPPO'SE. v. n.

1. To act adversely.

A servant, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

He practised to dispatch such of the nobility as were like to oppose against his mischievous drift, and in such sort to encumber and weaken the rest, that they should be no impediments to him. Hayward.

2. To object in a disputation; to have the part of raising difficulties against a tenet supposed to be right.

OPPO'SELESS. adj. [from oppose.] Irresistible; not to be opposed.

I could bear it longer, and not fall
To quarrel with your great opposeless wills. Shakspeare.

OPPO'SER. n. s. [from oppose.] One that opposes, antagonist, enemy; rival.

Now the fair goddess fortune
Fall deep in love with thee, and her great charms
Misguide thy opposers' swords: bold gentleman!
Prosperity be thy page. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Brave wits that have made essays worthy of immortality, yet by reason of envious and more popular opposers, have submitted to fate, and are almost lost in oblivion. Glanville.

I do not see how the ministers could have continued in their stations, if their opposers had agreed about the methods by which they should be ruined. Swift.

A hardy modern chief,
A bold opposer of divine belief. Blackmore.

O'PPOSITE. adj. [opposite, Fr. oppositus, Lat.]

1. Placed in front; facing each other.

To the other five,
Their planetary motions and aspects,
In sextile, square, trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy. Milton, P. L.

2. Adverse; repugnant.

Nothing of a foreign nature, like the trifling novels, by which the reader is misled into another sort of pleasure, opposite to that which is designed in an epick poem. Dryden.

This is a prospect very uneasy to the lusts and passions, and opposite to the strongest desires of flesh and blood. Rogers.

3. Contrary.

In this fallen state of man religion begins with repentance and conversion, the two opposite terms of which are God and sin. Tillotson.

Particles of speech have divers, and sometimes almost opposite significations. Locke.

O'PPOSITE. n. s. Adversary; opponent; antagonist; enemy.

To the best and wisest, while they live, the world is continually a froward opposite, a curious observer of their defects and imperfections; their virtues it afterwards as much admireth. Hooker.

He is the most skilful, bloody, and fatal opposite that you could have found in Illyria. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

The knight whom fate or happy chance
Shall grace his arms so far in equal fight,
From out the bars to force his opposite,
The prize of valour and of love shall gain. Dryden.

O'PPOSITELY. adv. [from opposite.]

1. In such a situation as to face each other.

The lesser pair are joined edge to edge, but not oppositely with their points downward, but upward. Grew.

2. Adversely.

I oft have seen, when corn was ripe to mow,
And now in dry, and brittle straw did grow,
Winds from all quarters oppositely blow. May, Virg.

O'PPOSITENESS. n. s. [from opposite.] The state of being opposite.

OPPOSI'TION.† n. s. [opposition, Fr. oppositio, Lat.]

1. Situation so as to front something opposed; standing over against.

2. Hostile resistance.

Virtue, which breaks through all opposition,
And all temptation can remove,
Most shines, and most is acceptable above. Milton, S. A.

He considers Lausus rescuing his father at the hazard of his own life, as an image of himself when he took Anchises on his shoulders, and bore him safe thro' the rage of the fire and the opposition of his enemies. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

3. Contrariety of affection.

They who never tried the experiment of a holy life, measure the laws of God not by their intrinsical goodness, but by the reluctancy and opposition which they find in their own hearts. Tillotson.

4. Contrariety of interest; contrariety of measures.

When the church is taken for the persons making profession of the christian faith, the catholick is often added in opposition to hereticks and schismaticks. Pearson.

5. Contrariety of meaning; diversity of meaning.

The parts of every true opposition do always both concern the same subject, and have reference to the same thing, sith otherwise they are but in shew opposite, not in truth. Hooker.

The use of language and custom of speech, in all authors I have met with, has gone upon this rule, or maxim, that exclusive terms are always to be understood in opposition only to what they are opposed to, and not in opposition to what they are not opposed to. Waterland.

6. Inconsistency, contradiction.

Reason can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence to embrace what is less evident, nor allow it to entertain probability in opposition to knowledge and certainty. Locke.

7. The collective body of members of both houses of Parliament who oppose the ministry, or the measures of government.

He has never omitted a fair occasion, with whatever detriment to his interest as a member of opposition, to assert the very same doctrines which appear in that book. Burke.

O'PPOSITIVE. adj. [from opposite.] Capable of being put in opposition.

Here not without some oppositive comparison; not Moses, not Elias, but This: Moses and Elias were servants; This, a son. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

To OPPRE'SS. v. a. [oppressus, Lat.]

1. To crush by hardship or unreasonable severity.

Israel and Judah were oppressed together, and all that took them captives held them fast, they refused to let them go. Jer. l. 33.

Alas! a mortal most opprest of those Whom fate has loaded with a weight of woes. Pope.

2. To overpower; to subdue.

We're not ourselves,
When nature, being oppress'd, commands the mind
To suffer with the body. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

In blazing height of noon,
The sun oppress'd, is plung'd in thickest gloom. Thomson.

OPPRE'SSION. n. s. [oppression, Fr. from oppress.]

1. The act of oppressing; cruelty; severity.

If thou seest the oppressions of the poor, marvel not at the matter, for he that is higher than the highest regardeth. Eccles. v. 8.

2. The state of being oppressed; misery.

Famine is in thy cheeks;
Need and oppression stare within thine eyes,
Contempt and beggary hang upon thy back. Shakspeare.

Cæsar himself has work, and our oppression
Exceeds what we expected. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

3. Hardship; calamity.

We are all subject to the same accidents; and when we see any under particular oppression, we should look upon it as the common lot of human nature. Addison.

4. Dulness of spirits; lassitude of body.

Drowsiness, oppression, heaviness, and lassitude, are signs of a too plentiful meal. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

OPPRE'SSIVE. adj. [from oppress.]

1. Cruel; inhuman; unjustly exactious or severe.

2. Heavy; overwhelming.

Alicia, reach thy friendly arm,
And help me to support that feeble frame,
That nodding totters with oppressive woe,
And sinks beneath its load. Rowe, Jane Shore.

To ease the soul of one oppressive weight,
This quits an empire, that embroils a state. Pope.

OPPRE'SSIVELY.† adv. [from oppressive.] In an oppressive or severe manner.

Her taxes are more injudiciously and more oppressively imposed, more vexatiously collected. Burke on the State of the Nation (1769.)

OPPRE'SSOR. n. s. [oppresseur, Fr. from oppress.] One who harasses others with unreasonable or unjust severity.

I from oppressors did the poor defend,
The fatherless, and such as had no friend. Sandys.

The cries of orphans, and th' oppressor's rage,
Had reach'd the stars. Dryden.

Power when employed to relieve the oppressed, and to punish the oppressor, becomes a great blessing. Swift.

OPPRO'BRIOUS. adj. [from opprobrium, Lat.]

1. Reproachful; disgraceful; causing infamy; scurrilous.

Himself pronounceth them blessed, that should for his name sake be subject to all kinds of ignominy and opprobrious malediction. Hooker.

They see themselves unjustly aspersed, and vindicate themselves in terms no less opprobrious than those by which they are attacked. Addison, Freeholder.

2. Blasted with infamy.

I will not here defile
My unstain'd verse with his opprobrious name. Daniel.

Solomon he led by fraud to build
His temple right against the temple of God,
On that opprobrious hill. Milton, P. L.

OPPRO'BRIOUSLY. adv. [from opprobrious.] Reproachfully; scurrilously.

Think you, this little prating York
Was not incensed by his subtle mother,
To taunt and scorn you thus opprobriously. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

OPPRO'BRIOUSNESS. n. s. [from opprobrious.] Reproachfulness; scurrility.

*OPPRO'BRIUM. n. s. [Latin. We had formerly the harsh English word opprobrie, which is in Sherwood's dictionary. Opprobrium has long been in use, though Dr. Johnson has overpassed it; and continues to be.] Disgrace; infamy.

Whoever presumes to give check to our insolence, is sure to be made the mark of our malice, and to be persecuted with all the reproach and opprobrium that the most inveterate rancour can invent. Scott, Serm. before the Ld. Mayor, 168 , (Works, ed. fol. ii. 37.)

To OPPU'GN.† v. a. [oppugner, old French; oppugno, Lat.] To oppose; to attack; to resist.

Not so subtle to invent false matters to oppugne the truth. Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554,) sign. B. i. b.

For the ecclesiastical laws of this land we are led by a great reason to observe, and ye be by no necessity bound to oppugn them. Hooker.

This is to oppugn nature, and to make a strong body weak. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 227.

They said the manner of their impeachment they could not but conceive did oppugn the rights of parliament. Clarendon.

If nothing can oppugn love,
And virtue envious ways can prove,
What cannot he confide to do
That brings both love and virtue too? Hudibras.

The ingredients include oppilations, mundify the blood, and oppugn putrefaction. Harvey.

OPPU'GNANCY. n. s. [from oppugn.] Opposition.

Take but degree away, untune that string,
And hark what discord follows, each thing meets
In meer oppugnancy. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

OPPUGNA'TION.* n. s. [old Fr. oppugnation.] Resistance. Huloet.

Which being done by way of tithes in those countries wherein they obtain, there is just cause of thankfulness to God for so meet a provision, none for a just oppugnation. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 3. C. 7.

OPPU'GNER.† n. s. [from oppugn.] One who opposes or attacks.

I know these sports have many oppugners. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 272.

He was a strong oppugner of the Pelagian heresy. Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 4.

In words the fathers, but in their deeds the oppugners, of the truth. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnuus.

The modern and degenerate Jews be, upon the score of being the great patrons of man's free will, not causelessly esteemed the great oppugners of God's free grace. Boyle.

OPSI'MATHY.† n. s. [ὀψιμάθια.] Late education; late erudition.

Opsimathie, which is too late beginning to learn, was counted a great vice, and very unseemly amongst moral and natural men. Hales, Rem. p. 218.

OPSONA'TION. n. s. [opsonatio, Lat.] Catering; a buying provisions. Dict.

O'PTABLE.† adj. [optabilis, Lat.] Desirable; to be wished. Cockeram.

To O'PTATE.* v. a. [opto, Lat. opter, Fr.] To choose; to wish for; to desire. Not in use. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

OPTA'TION.* n. s. [optatio, Lat.] The expression of a wish. Obsolete.

To this belong — optation, obtestation, interrogation. Peacham, Gard. of Eloquence, (1577,) sign. P. iii.

O'PTATIVE.† adj. [optativus, Lat.]

1. Expressive of desire.

This optative infinity in the soul of man. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. 1. (1648,) p. 196.

2. Belonging to that mood of a verb which expresses desire.

The verb undergoes in Greek a different formation to signify wishing, which is called the optative mood. Clarke.

O'PTICAL. adj. [ὀπτικός.] Relating to the science of opticks.

It seems not agreeable to what anatomists and optical writers deliver, touching the relation of the two eyes to each other. Boyle.

OPTI'CIAN.✝ n. s. [from optick.]

1. One skilled in opticks.

How it is that, by means of our sight, we learn to judge of such distances, opticians have endeavoured to explain in several different ways. A. Smith on the External Senses.

2. One who makes or sells optick glasses.

Opticians have daily experience of the truth of these observations. Adams on Vision.

O'PTICK. adj. [ὀπτικος, Gr. optique, Fr.]

1. Visual; producing vision; subservient to vision.

May not the harmony and discord of colours arise from the proportions of the vibrations propagated through the fibres of the optick nerves into the brain, as the harmony and discord of sounds arise from the proportions of the vibrations of the air? Newton, Opt.

2. Relating to the science of vision.

Where our master handleth the contractions of pillars, we have an optick rule, that the higher they are, the less should be always their diminution aloft, because the eye itself doth contract all objects, according to the distance. Wotton.

O'PTICK. n. s. An instrument of sight; an organ of sight.

Can any thing escape the perspicacity of eyes which were before light, and in whose opticks there is no opacity. Brown.

Our corporeal eyes we find
Dazzle the opticks of our mind. [Den]ham.

You may neglect, or quench, or hate the flame,
Whose smoke too long obscur'd your rising name,
And quickly cold indifference will ensue,
When you love's joys through honour's optick view. Prior.

Why has not man a microscopick eye?
For this plain reason, man is not a fly.
Say what the use, were finer opticks given,
T' inspect a mite, not comprehend the heaven. Pope.

O'PTICKS. n. s. [ὀπτική.] The science of the nature and laws of vision.

No spherical body of what bigness soever illuminates the whole sphere of another, although it illuminate something more than half of a lesser, according unto the doctrine of opticks. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Those who desire satisfaction must go to the admirable treatise of opticks by Sir Isaac Newton. Cheyne.

O'PTIMACY.✝ n. s. [optimates, Latin.] Nobility; body of nobles; men of the highest rank.

The government of every city in time becomes corrupt: principality changeth into tyranny; the optimacy is made the government of the people; and the popular estate turns to licentious disorder. Ralegh, Arts of Emp. ch. 26.

Sometimes an optimacy of a few, all prime, coequal in their power; and sometimes a democracy, or popular state, a whole Egypt full of locusts in one breast. Hammond, Works, iv. 529.

In this high court of parliament there is a rare co-ordination of power, a wholesome mixture betwixt monarchy, optimacy, and democracy. Howell.

O'PTIMISM.✱ n. s. [from optimus, Lat.] The doctrine that every thing in nature is ordered for the best.

Voltaire has, in many parts of his works, besides his Candide and his Philosophical Dictionary, exerted the utmost efforts of his wit and argument to depreciate and destroy the doctrine of optimism, and the idea that "The eternal art educes good from ill." Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

OPTI'MITY. n. s. [from optimus, Lat.] The state of being best.

O'PTION.✝ n. s. [optio, Lat.]

1. Choice; election; power of choosing.

Transplantation must proceed from the option of the people, else it sounds like an exile; so the colonies must be raised by the leave of the king and not by his command. Bacon.

He decrees to punish the contumacy finally, by them their own options. H——

Which of these two rewards we will receive, he hath left to our option. Smalridge.

2. Wish. Cockeram.

I shall conclude this epistle with a pathetick option, O that men were wise.

The Layman's Defence of Christianity, (about 1730,) p. 23.

3. A choice of preferment belonging to the patronage of suffragans, made by the archbishops of Canterbury and York, on the promotion of the person to a bishoprick.

The archbishop of Canterbury hath a right, upon the promotion of every bishop in his Grace's province, [and so has the archbishop of York, except with regard to the see of Durham,] to choose any one ecclesiastical preferment, prebend, or benefice, in the gift of such bishop, which is called the archbishop's option; which is even at the disposal of the executors of the archbishop, if the bishop that is promoted doth not die before the option becometh vacant. Nelson, Life of Bp. Bull, p. 357.

O'PTIONAL.✱ adj. [from option.] Leaving somewhat to choice.

Original writs are either optional or peremptory. Blackstone.

O'PULENCE. } n. s. [opulence, Fr. opulentia, Lat.]
O'PULENCY. } Wealth; riches; affluence.

It must be a discovery of the infinite flatteries that follow youth and opulency. Shakspeare, Timon.

After eight years spent in outward opulency and inward murmur, that it was not greater; after vast sums of money and great wealth gotten, he died unlamented. Clarendon.

He had been a person not only of great opulency, but authority. Atterbury.

There in full opulence a banker dwelt,
Who all the joys and pangs of riches felt;
His side-board glitter'd with imagin'd plate,
And his proud fancy held a vast estate. Swift.

O'PULENT. adj. [opulent, Fr. opulentus, Lat.] Rich; wealthy; affluent.

He made him his ally, and provoked a mighty and opulent king by an offensive war in his quarrel. Bacon.

To begin with the supposed policy of gratifying only the rich and opulent. Does our wise man think that the grandee whom he courts does not see through all the little plots of his courtship. South.

O'PULENTLY. adv. [from opulent.] Richly; with splendour.

OR.✝ conjunct. [oðeꞃ, Sax.]

1. A disjunctive particle, marking distribution, and sometimes opposition.

Inquire what the ancients thought concerning this world, whether it was to perish or no; whether to be destroyed or to stand eternally? Burnet.

He my muse's homage should receive,
If I could write, or Holles could forgive. Garth.

By intense study, or application to business that requires little action, the digestion of foods will soon proceed more slowly, and with more uneasiness. Blackmore.

Every thing that can be divided by the mind into two or more ideas, is called complex. Watts, Logick.

2. It corresponds to either: he must either fall or fly.

At Venice you may go to any house either by land or water. Addison.

3. It sometimes, but rather inelegantly, stands for either.

For thy vast bounties are so numberless,
That them or to conceal, or else to tell,
Is equally impossible. Cowley.

4. Sometimes for whether, or whether it be.

Whatever draws me,
Or sympathy, or some connatural force. Milton, P. L.

5. Or is sometimes redundant, but is then more properly omitted.

How great soever the sins of any unreformed person are, Christ died for him because he died for all; only he must reform and forsake his sins, or else he shall never receive benefit of his death. Hammond.

6. [Op, or æpe, Sax.] Before. Or and ere were formerly indiscriminately used. Then or ever, or e'er, combined; a form not yet disused; though Dr. Johnson has pronounced it obsolete. The spirited lines from a modern poem, now cited, exhibit the application of it.

Or we go to the declaration of this psalm, it shall be convenient to shew who did write this psalm. Bp. Fisher.

The dead man's knell
Is there scarce ask'd for whom, and good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying or e'er they sicken. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Learn before thou speak, and use physick or ever thou be sick. Ecclus. xviii. 19.

The shepherds on the lawn
Or e'er the point of dawn
Sat simply chatting in a rustick row. Milton, Ode Nativ.

Awake, for shame! or e'er thy nobler sense
Sink in the oblivious pool of indolence!
Must wit be found alone on falsehood's side,
Unknown to truth, to virtue unallied?
Arise! nor scorn thy country's just alarms;
Wield in her cause thy long-neglected arms.
Poetry of the Anti-Jacobin.

OR. n. s. [French.] Gold. A term of heraldry.

The show'ry arch
With listed colours gay, or, azure, gules,
Delights and puzzles the beholders' eyes. Philips.

O'RACH. n. s. [atriplex.] There are thirteen species; garden orach was cultivated as a culinary herb, and used as spinach, though it is not generally liked by the English, but still esteemed by the French. Miller.

O'RACLE. n. s. [oracle, Fr. oraculum, Lat.]

1. Something delivered by supernatural wisdom.

The main principle whereupon our belief of all things therein contained dependeth, is, that the Scriptures are the oracles of God himself. Hooker.

2. The place where, or person of whom the determinations of heaven are enquired.

Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well,
And set me up in hope? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

God hath now sent his living oracle
Into the world to teach his final will,
And sends his spirit of truth henceforth to dwell,
In pious hearts, an inward oracle,
To all truth requisite for men to know. Milton, P. R.

3. Any person or place where certain decisions are obtained.

There mighty nations shall enquire their doom,
The world's great oracle in times to come. Pope.

4. One famed for wisdom; one whose determinations are not to be disputed.

To O'RACLE.† v. n. [from the noun.] To utter oracles. A word not received, Dr. Johnson observes; citing only the passage from Milton. But Milton did not introduce this word into the language.

Hence so many corruptions of divine text, because men endeavour to make it speak their own sense; use it as their pleader, not counsellor: if it will speak for us, none so ready to fee it, as it were, with the resignation of our reasons or will; but if it oracle contrary to our interest or humour, we will create an amphiboly, a double meaning where there is none; and make it speak our meaning, or conclude it defective.
Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. (1654,) p. 254.

No more shalt thou by oracling abuse
The Gentiles. Milton, P. R.

ORA'CULAR.† } ORA'CULOUS. } adj. [from oracle.]

1. Uttering oracles; resembling oracles.

Corycian nymphs and hill-gods he adores,
And Themis then, oraculous, implores. Sandys, Ovid.

Thy counsel would be as the oracle of
Urim and Thummim, those oraculous gems
On Aaron's breast, or tongue of seers old
Infallible. Milton, P. R.

Here Charles contrives the ordering of his states,
Here he resolves his neighbouring princes' fates;
What nation shall have peace, where war be made,
Determin'd is in this oraculous shade. Waller.

They have something venerable and oracular, in that unadorned gravity and shortness in the expression. Pope.

The oraculous seer frequents the Pharian coast,
Proteus a name tremendous o'er the main. Pope.

2. Positive; authoritative; magisterial; dogmatical.

Though their general acknowledgments of the weakness of human understanding look like cold and sceptical discouragements; yet the particular expressions of their sentiments are as oraculous as if they were omniscient. Glanville, Scepsis.

3. Obscure; ambiguous; like the answers of ancient oracles.

As for equivocations, or oraculous speeches, they cannot hold out long. Bacon, Ess. 6.

He spoke oraculous and sly,
He'd neither grant the question, nor deny. King.

ORA'CULARLY.† } ORA'CULOUSLY. } adv. [from oraculous.]

1. In manner of an oracle.

The testimonies of antiquity, and such as pass oraculously amongst us, were not always so exact as to examine the doctrine they delivered. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Hence rise the branching beech and vocal oak,
Where Jove of old oraculously spoke. Dryden.

2. Authoritatively; positively.

An awful judge delivering oracularly the law.
Burke, Sp. on the Powers of Juries in Libels.

ORA'CULOUSNESS. n. s. [from oracular.] The state of being oracular.

O'RAISON.† n. s. [oraison, Fr. oratio, Latin.] Prayer; verbal supplication; or oral worship: more frequently written orison, and accented on the first syllable by our oldest and best poets. Dyer has placed the accent on the second syllable of oraison; and so has Cotton on that of orison, for the sake of his rhyme. See ORISON. Temple uses the French form of the word before us.

They were commonly called the judgements of God, and performed with solemn oraisons, and other ceremonies.
Temple, Intr. Hist. of Eng. (1695,) p. 248.

Here, at dead of night,
The pilgrim oft, mid his oraison, hears
Aghast the voice of time, disparting towers,
Tumbling all precipitate down dash'd. Dyer, Ruins of Rome.

O'RAL. adj. [oral, Fr. os, oris, Lat.] Delivered by mouth; not written.

Oral discourse, whose transient faults dying with the sound that gives them life, and so not subject to a strict review, more easily escapes observation. Locke on Education.

St. John was appealed to as the living oracle of the church; and as his oral testimony lasted the first century, many have observed, that by a particular providence several of our Saviour's disciples, and of the early converts, lived to a very great age, that they might personally convey the truth of the gospel to those times which were very remote. Addison.

O'RALLY.† adv. [from oral.]

1. By mouth; without writing.

Oral tradition were incompetent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws of a kingdom, because they are complex, not orally traducible to so great a distance of ages. Hale, Common Law.

2. In the mouth.

The priest did sacrifice, and orally devour it whole.
Bp. Hall, Epist. D. i. E. 5.

That which is externally delivered in the sacrament, and orally received by the communicant.
Abp. Usher, Answ. to the Jesuit Malone, p. 32.

O'RANGE.† n. s. [orange, Fr. The aureum malum, or golden apple of the ancients: low Lat. aurantium, an orange.] The leaves have two lobes or appendages at their base like ears, and cut in form of a heart; the fruit is round and depressed, and of a yellow colour when ripe, in which it differs from the citron and lemon. The species are eight. Miller.

The notary came aboard, holding in his hand a fruit like an orange, but of colour between orange-tawny and scarlet, which cast a most excellent odour, and is used for a preservative against infection. Bacon, New Atlantis.

The ideas of orange colour and azure, produced in the mind by the same infusion of lignum nephriticum, are no less distinct ideas than those of the same colours taken from two different bodies. Locke.

Fine oranges, sauce for your veal,
Are charming when squeez'd in a pot of brown ale. Swift.

The punick granate op'd its rose-like flowers;
The orange breath'd its aromatick powers. Harte.

O'RANGERY. n. s. [orangerie, Fr.] Plantation of oranges.

A kitchen garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery, or artificial green house. Spectator.

O'RANGEMUSK. n. s. A species of pear.

O'RANGEWIFE. n. s. [orange and wife.] A woman who sells oranges.

You wear out a good wholesome forenoon in hearing a cause between an orangewife and a fosset seller. Shakspeare.

O'RANGETAWNY.† n. s. [orange and tawny.] A colour so called.

Holding in his hand a fruit of that country, like an orange, but of colour between orangetawny and scarlet. Bacon, New Atlantis.

Baronets, or knights of Nova Scotia, are commonly distinguished from others by a ribbon of orangetawny. Heylyn.

O'RANGETAWNY.* adj. Of a colour resembling an orange; nearly red.

Usurers should have orangetawny bonnets, because they do judaize. Bacon, Ess. 41.

I will discharge it in your straw-coloured beard, your orangetawny beard. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

Great is my patience to forbear thee thus,— Uncivil, orangetawny-coated clerk! B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

ORA'TION. n. s. [oration, Fr. oratio, Lat.] A speech made according to the laws of rhetorick; a harangue; a declamation.

There shall I try,
In my oration, how the people take
The cruel issue of these bloody men. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

This gives life and spirit to every thing that is spoken, awakens the dullest spirits, and adds a singular grace and excellency both to the person and his oration. Watts.

To ORA'TION.* v. n. [from the noun.] To make a speech; to harangue. Not in use.

They gave answers with great sufficiency touching all difficulties concerning their own law, and had marvellous promptitude both for orationing and giving judgement. Donne, Hist. of the Sept. p. 80.

O'RATOR. n. s. [orateur, Fr. orator, Lat.]

1. A publick speaker; a man of eloquence.

Poor queen and son! your labour is but lost;
For Warwick is a subtle orator. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

As when of old some orator renown'd,
In Athens or free Rome, where eloquence
Flourish'd, since mute! to some great cause address'd,
Stood in himself collected; while each part,
Motion, each act, won audience. Milton, P. L.

It would be altogether vain and improper in matters belonging to an orator to pretend to strict demonstration. Wilkins.

The constant design of both these orators in all their speeches, was to drive some one particular point. Swift.

I have listened to an orator of this species, without being able to understand one single sentence. Swift.

Both orators so much renown'd,
In their own depths of eloquence were drown'd. Dryden.

2. A petitioner. This sense is used in addresses to chancery.

ORATO'RICAL.† adj. [from orator.] Rhetorical; befitting an orator.

He that hath written the tales of Nereus, cardinal Baronius's oratorical patron. Favour, Antiq. Tr. over Novelty, (1619,) p. 339.

Running out with much oratorical liberty upon the weakness of those men's arguments. Clarke, Lett. to Dodwell, p. 50.

Where he speaks in an oratorical, affecting, or persuasive way, let this be explained by other places where he treats of the same theme in a doctrinal way. Watts.

ORATO'RIAL.* } adj. [oratorius, Lat.] Rhetorical;
ORATO'RIOUS. } befitting an orator.

What errour is so rotten and putrid, which some oratorious varnish hath not sought to colour over with shews of truth and piety? Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 29.

The oratorial part of these gentlemen seldom vouchsafe to mention fewer than fifteen hundred or two thousand people, to be maintained in this hospital, without troubling their heads about the fund. Swift, on Maintaining the Poor.

He [Dr. Bathurst] endeavoured, at the command of the king, to introduce a more graceful and oratorial manner of delivering the public sermons at St. Mary's. Warton, Life of Bathurst, p. 88.

ORATO'RIALLY.* } adv. [from the adj.] In a rhetori-
ORATO'RIOUSLY. } cal manner.

Nor do they oppose things of this nature argumentatively, so much as oratoriously. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 115.

ORATO'RIO.* n. s. [Italian.] A kind of sacred drama, the subject of it being generally taken from the Scriptures, set to musick.

Sorry I am to accuse the greatest English composer Purcel, and the best adopted one Handel, of being the cause of this innovation, [the mixture of the violin with the organ;] the former by adding violin accompaniments to some of his anthems and services; the latter by erecting an organ on the play-house stage, with a view undoubtedly to difference as much by its dignified form, as by its solemn tones, that semi-dramatic species of composition the oratorio from a genuine opera. Mason on Church Mus. p. 73.

O'RATORY.† n. s. [oratoria ars, Lat.]

1. Eloquence; rhetorical expression.

Each pasture stored with sheep feeding with sober security, while the pretty lambs with bleating oratory craved the dams' comfort. Sidney.

When a world of men
Could not prevail with all their oratory,
Yet hath a woman's kindness over-rul'd. Shakspeare.

When my oratory grew tow'rd end,
I bid them that did love their country's good,
Cry, God save Richard. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Sighs now breath'd
Unutterable, which the spirit of prayer
Inspir'd, and wing'd for heav'n with speedier flight
Than loudest oratory. Milton, P. L.

By this kind of oratory and professing to decline their own inclinations and wishes, purely for peace and unity, they prevailed over those who were still surprised. Clarendon.

Hammond's subjects were such as had greatest influence on practice, which he prest with most affectionate tenderness, making tears part of his oratory. Fell.

The former, who had to deal with a people of much more politeness, learning, and wit, laid the greatest weight of his oratory upon the strength of his arguments. Swift.

Come harmless characters, that no one hit,
Come Henley's oratory, Osborn's wit. Pope.

2. Exercise of eloquence.

The Romans had seised upon the fleet of the Antiates, among which there were six armed with rostra, with which the consul Menenius adorned the publick place of oratory. Arbuthnot.

3. [Oratoire, French.] At first it signified a closet; then, a private place, allotted for prayer alone; and also, a place for publick worship.

They should first remove all company from them; and in a secret oratorie, or privy chamber, themselves assemble all the powers of their wits to remember these seven articles. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 85.

They begin to erect to themselves oratories not in any sumptuous or stately manner, which neither was possible by reason of the poor estate of the church, and had been perilous in regard of the world's envy towards them. Hooker.

Do not omit thy prayers for want of a good oratory or place to pray in; nor thy duty for want of temporal encouragements. Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

Christians had oratories, or houses of Christian worship. Mede on Churches, p. 56.

Within these oratories might you see
Rich carvings, portraitures, and imagery. Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

O'RATRESS.* } O'RATRIX. } n. s. [oratrix, Lat. from orator. Cockeram gives the English oratrix.] A female orator.

I see love's oratress pleads tediously to thee. Warner, Albion's England, (1602,) ch. 9.

I fight not with my tongue: this is my oratrix. Trag. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

ORB. n. s. [orbe, Fr. orbis, Latin.]

1. Sphere; orbicular body.

A mighty collection of water inclosed in the bowels of the earth, constitutes an huge orb in the interiour or central parts; upon the surface of which orb of water the terrestrial strata are expanded. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Circular body.

They with a storm of darts to distance drive
The Trojan chief; who held at bay from far,
On his Vulcanian orb sustain'd the war. Dryden.

3. Mundane sphere; celestial body; light of heaven.

In the floor of heaven
There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims. Shakspeare.

4. Wheel; any rolling body.

The orbs
Of his fierce chariot roll'd as with the sound
Of torrent floods. Milton, P. L.

5. Circle; line drawn round.

Does the son learn action from the father? Yet all his activity is but in the epicycle of a family: whereas a subject's motion is in a larger orb. Holyday.

6. Circle described by any of the mundane spheres.

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricks and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs, though no such things were. Bacon.

With smiling aspect you serenely move,
In your fifth orb, and rule the realm of love. Dryden.

7. Period; revolution of time.

Self-begot, self-rais'd,
By our own quickening power, when fatal course
Had circled his full orb, the birth mature
Of this our native heaven. Milton, P. L.

8. Sphere of action.

Will you again unknit
This churlish knot of all-abhorred war,
And move in that obedient orb again,
Where you did give a fair and natural light. Shakspeare.

9. It is applied by Milton to the eye, as being luminous and spherical.

A drop serene hath quench'd their orbs,
Or dim suffusion veil'd. Milton, P. L.

To ORB.* v. a. [from the noun.] To round; to form into a circle.

Truth and Justice then
Will down return to men,
Orb'd in a rainbow, and like glories wearing. Milton, Ode Nativ.

Our happiness may orb itself into a thousand vagancies of glory and delight, and with a kind of eccentrical equation be (as it were) an invariable planet of joy and felicity. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 1.

A golden axle did the work uphold,
Gold was the beam, the wheels were orb'd with gold. Addison.

ORBA'TION.† n. s. [orbatio, Lat.] Privation of parents or children; any privation; poverty. Cockeram.

O'RBED.† adj. [from orb.] Round; circular; orbicular. See To ORB.

All those sayings will I overswear,
And all those swearings keep as true in soul,
As doth that orbed continent the fire,
That severs day from night. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

Let each
Fit well his helm, gripe fast his orbed shield. Milton, P. L.

O'RBICK.* adj. [orbicus, Lat.] Circular; spherical.

How the body of this orbick frame
From tender infancy so big became. Bacon, Pan or Nature.

ORBI'CULAR. adj. [orbiculaire, Fr. orbiculatus, Lat.]

1. Spherical.

He shall monarchy with thee divide
Of all things parted by the empyreal bounds,
His quadrature from thy orbicular world. Milton, P. L.

2. Circular; approaching to circularity.

The form of their bottom is not the same; for whereas before it was of an orbicular make, they now look as if they were pressed. Addison, Guardian.

By a circle I understand not here a perfect geometrical circle, but an orbicular figure, whose length is equal to its breadth, and which as to sense may seem circular. Newton.

ORBI'CULARLY. adv. [from orbicular.] Spherically; circularly.

ORBI'CULARNESS. n. s. [from orbicular.] The state of being orbicular.

ORBI'CULATED. adj. [orbiculatus, Lat.] Moulded into an orb.

ORBICULA'TION.* n. s. [orbiculatus, Lat.] State of being moulded into an orb or circle.

It might have been more significantly called orbiculation, seeing this circumfusion makes not only a circle, but fills a sphere. More, Song of the Soul, Int. Gen. p. 424.

O'RBIT. n. s. [orbite, Fr. orbita, Lat.]

1. The line described by the revolution of a planet.

Suppose more suns in proper orbits roll'd,
Dissolv'd the snows and chas'd the polar cold. Blackmore.

Suppose the earth placed nearer to the sun, and revolve for instance in the orbit of Mercury; there the whole ocean would even boil with extremity of heat, and be all exhaled into vapours; all plants and animals would be scorched. Bentley.

2. A small orb. Not proper.

Attend, and you discern it in the fair
Conduct and finger, or reclaim a hair;
Or roll the lucid orbit of an eye;
Or in full joy elaborate a sigh. Young.

O'RBITUDE.† } O'RBITY. } n. s. [orbitudo, and orbitas, Lat. The former of these words occurs in Cockeram's vocabulary; the latter is noticed by Dr. Johnson, with the name of Bacon following an imperfect definition, but without any example.] Loss or want of parents or children; loss of husband or wife; any privation.

Old age and orbity were those two things that emboldened him. Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

She's in orbity;
At once receiver, and the legacy. Donne, Poems, p. 333.

Considering the frequent mortality in friends and relations, in such a term of time, he may pass away divers years in sorrow and black habits, and leave none to mourn for himself; orbity may be his inheritance. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 22.

O'RBY. adj. [from orb.] Resembling an orb. Not used.

It smote Atrides orbie targe; but runne not through the brasse. Chapman.

When, now arraid
The world was with the spring; and orbie houres
Had gone the round againe, through herbs and flowers. Chapman.

ORC.† n. s. [orca, Lat. ὄρυγα.] A sea-fish; a species of whale.

Orks, that for their lord the ocean wooe. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 2.

Proteus' herds, and Neptune's orks. B. Jonson, Masques.

An island salt and bare,
The haunt of seals and orcs, and sea-mews clang. Milton, P. L.

O'RCHAL. n. s. A stone from which a blue colour is made. Ainsworth.

O'RCHANET. n. s. An herb. Ainsworth.

O'RCHARD.† n. s. [either hortyard or wortyard, says Skinner; ontgeapd, Saxon. Junius, and Dr. Johnson. — Hortyard, or ortyard, seems to be the true word; aurtigards, Goth. jurtagard, Icel. It signified formerly a garden in general; urt, Goth. an herb, and gard, a hedge; hortus, Lat. Milton writes the word, orchat; probably from the Greek ὄρχατος. See HORTYARD.] A garden of fruit-trees.

Planting of orchards is very profitable, as well as pleasurable. Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

They overcome their riches, not by making
Baths, orchards, fish pools. B. Jonson.

His parsonage-house from an incommodious ruin he had rendered a fair and pleasant dwelling, with the conveniences of gardens and orchards. Fell.

Her private orchards, wall'd on ev'ry side,
To lawless Sylvans all access deny'd. Pope.

O'RCHARDING.* n. s. Cultivation of orchards.

All land is not fit for orcharding. Evelyn, Pom. ch. 5.

Trench grounds for orcharding. Ib. Kal. Hort. Oct.

O'RCHARDIST.* n. s. One who cultivates orchards.

However expert the orchardist may be, much will depend on soil. Trans. Adelphi Soc. xiii. 24.

O'RCHESTRE.† } n. s. [French; ὀρχήστρα, from
ORCHE'STRA. } ὀρχεῖσθαι, to dance; the Grecian orchestra being the places in which dances were publickly performed; and orchestra (which form of the word is not noticed by Dr. Johnson) was at first used by us in this sense. Sir John Davies published, in 1599, a poem on the antiquity and excellency of dancing, entitled Orchestra.] A place for publick exhibition; the place where the musicians are set at a publick show; the band of musicians.

Praise but orchestra, and the skipping art. Marston, Sat. iii. 11.

Devotion, when lukewarm, is undevout;
But when it glows, its heat is struck to heaven;
To human hearts her golden harps are strung;
High heaven's orchestra chaunts Amen to man. Young, Night Th. 4.

He very precipitately made his retreat out of one of the doors under the orchestre. Student, i. 143.

The different degrees of precision, with which the musick of the orchestre can accommodate itself to each of these diversities, must depend upon the taste, the sensibility, the fancy, and imagination of the composer. A. Smith, on the Imit. Arts, P. ii.

When the orchestre interrupts, as it frequently does, either the recitative or the air, it is in order either to enforce the effect of what had gone before, or to put the mind in the mood which fits it for hearing what is to come after. A. Smith, on the Imit. Arts, P. ii.

O'RCHIS.* n. s. A plant, of which several sorts grow wild in England. The flowers of some are thought to resemble flies.

I here saw a great many of the small red and yellow tulip, — and many beautiful kinds of the orchis, some representing bees and flies so naturally as to deceive at first sight. Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 29.

ORD.† n. s. An edge or sharpness; as in ordbright, &c. and in the Icelandick tongue, ord signifies a spear or dart. Gibson.

Ord, in old English, signified beginning; whence probably the proverbial phrase odds [ords] and ends, for scraps or remnants, and perhaps orts for waste provision. Dr. Johnson. — Ord is certainly our old word for beginning; and Chaucer uses ord and end. See Lye also in the Sax. Op, opb. But orts have no connection whatever with ord. See ORTS.

To ORDA'IN. v. a. [ordino, Lat. ordonner, Fr.]

1. To appoint; to decree.

Know the cause why musick was ordain'd;
Was it not to refresh the mind of man
After his studies, or his usual pain? Shakspeare.

Jeroboam ordained a feast. 1 Kings, xii. 32.

As many as were ordained to eternal life, believed. Acts, xiii. 48.

He commanded us to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the judge of quick and dead. Acts, x. 42.

To souls oppress'd and dumb with grief,
The gods ordain this kind relief,
That musick should in sounds convey
What dying lovers dare not say. Waller.

The fatal tent,
The scene of death, and place ordain'd for punishment. Dryden.

My reason bends to what thy eyes ordain;
For I was born to love, and thou to reign. Prior.

2. To establish; to settle; to institute.

Mulmutius
Ordain'd our laws, whose use the sword of Cæsar
Hath too much mangled. Shakspeare, Cymb.

I will ordain a place for Israel. 1 Chron. xvii. 9.

God, from Sinai descending, will himself
In thunder, lightning, and loud trumpets sound,
Ordain them laws. Milton, P. L.

Some laws ordain, and some attend the choice
Of holy senates, and elect by voice. Dryden.

3. To set in an office.

All signified unto you by a man, who is ordained over the affairs, shall be utterly destroyed. Esther, xiii. 6.

4. To invest with ministerial function, or sacerdotal power.

Meletius was ordained by Arian bishops, and yet his ordination was never questioned. Stillingfleet.

ORDA'INABLE.* adj. [from ordain.] That may be appointed.

The nature of man is ordainable to life. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 377.

ORDA'INER.† n. s. [from ordain.]

1. He who ordains, or decrees.

The performance of wholesome laws must needs bring great commendation to the author and ordainer of them. Barrow, vol. i. S. 5.

2. He who invests with ministerial function, or sacerdotal power.

The ordainer pronounceth by name, when he signeth him, Such a man is consecrated from being presbyter to be a bishop, &c. Bp. Bedell, Life and Lett. p. 473.

O'RDEAL.† n. s. [opbal, Sax. ordalium, low Lat. ordalie, Fr. Dr. Johnson. Serenius deduces the word from the Goth. ordela, dirimere litem, urdela, dijudicare; from ur, ex, and dela, dividere, judicare. See also Kilian, Teut. Dict. in V. Oordeel.] A trial, by fire or water, by which the person accused appealed to heaven, by walking blindfold over hot bars of iron; or being thrown, I suppose, into the water, whence the vulgar trial of witches.

Their ordeal laws they used in doubtful cases, when clear proofs wanted. Hakewill on Providence.

In the time of king John, the purgation per ignem et aquam, or the trial by ordeal continued; but it ended with this king. Hale.

O'RDER. n. s. [ordo, Lat. ordre, Fr.]

1. Method; regular disposition.

To know the true state of Solomon's house, I will keep this order; I will set forth the end of our foundation, the instruments for our works, the several employments assigned, and the ordinances we observe. Bacon, New Atlantis.

As St. Paul was full of the doctrine of the gospel; so it lay all clear and in order, open to his view. Locke.

2. Established process.

The moderator, when either of the disputants breaks the rules, may interpose to keep them to order. Watts.

3. Proper state.

Any of the faculties wanting, or out of order, produce suitable defects in men's understandings. Locke.

4. Regularity; settled mode.

This order with her sorrow she accords,
Which orderless all form of order brake. Daniel.

Kings are the fathers of their country, but unless they keep their own estates, they are such fathers as the sons maintain, which is against the order of nature. Davenant.

5. Mandate; precept; command.

Give order to my servants, that they take
No note of our being absent. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

If the lords of the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, presently some nobleman published a protestation against those orders and proclamations. Clarendon.

Upon this new fright, an order was made by both houses for disarming all the papists in England; upon which, and the like orders, though seldom any thing was after done, yet it served to keep up the apprehensions in the people, of dangers and designs, and to disincline them from any reverence or affection to the queen. Clarendon.

When christians became a distinct body, courts were set up by the order of the Apostles themselves, to minister judicial process. Kettleworth.

I have received an order under your hand for a thousand pounds in words at length, Tatler.

6. Rule; regulation.

The church hath authority to establish that for an order at one time, which at another time it may abolish, and in both do well. Hooker.

7. Regular government.

The night, their number, and the sudden act
Would dash all order, and protect their fact. Daniel.

As there is no church, where there is no order, no ministry; so where the same order and ministry is, there is the same church. Pearson.

8. A society of dignified persons distinguished by marks of honour.

Elves,
The several chairs of order look you scour,
With juice of balm and ev'ry precious flow'r. Shakspeare.

Princes many times make themselves desires, and set their hearts upon toys; sometimes upon a building; sometimes upon erecting of an order. Bacon.

She left immortal trophies of her fame,
And to the noblest order gave the name. Dryden.

By shining marks, distinguish'd they appear,
And various orders various ensigns bear. Granville.

9. A rank, or class.

The king commanded the high priest and the priests of the second order, to bring forth out of the temple all the vessels. 2 Kings, xxiii. 4.

The Almighty seeing,
From his transcendent seat, the saints among,
To those bright orders utter'd thus his voice. Milton, P. L.

Like use you make of the equivocal word dignity, which is of order, or office, or dominion, or nature; and you artificially blend and confound all together. Waterland.

10. A religious fraternity.

Find a barefoot brother out,
One of our order to associate me,
Here visiting the sick. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

11. [In the plural.] Hierarchical state.

If the faults of men in orders are only to be judged among themselves, they are all in some sort parties. Dryden.

Having in his youth made a good progress in learning, that he might dedicate himself more intirely to religion, he entered into holy orders, and in a few years became renowned for his sanctity of life. Addison, Spect.

When Ouranius first entered into holy orders, he had haughtiness in his temper, a great contempt and disregard for all foolish and unreasonable people; but he has prayed away this spirit. Law.

12. Means to an end.

Virgins must remember, that the virginity of the body is only excellent in order to the purity of the soul; for in the same degree that virgins live more spiritually than other persons, in the same degree is their virginity a more excellent state. Bp. Taylor, Rule of living Holy.

We should behave reverently towards the Divine Majesty, and justly towards men; and in order to the better discharge of these duties, we should govern ourselves in the use of sensual delights, with temperance. Tillotson.

The best knowledge is that which is of greatest use in order to our eternal happiness. Tillotson.

What we see is in order only to what we do not see; and both these states must be joined together. Atterbury.

One man pursues power in order to wealth, and another wealth in order to power, which last is the safer way, and generally followed. Swift.

13. Measures; care.

It were meet you should take some order for the soldiers, which are now first to be discharged and disposed of some way; which may otherwise grow to as great inconvenience as all this that you have quit us from. Spenser on Ireland.

Provide me soldiers,
Whilst I take order for mine own affairs. Shakspeare.

The money promised unto the king, he took no order for, albeit Sostratus required it. 2 Mac. iv. 27.

If any of the family be distressed, order is taken for their relief and competent means to live. Bacon.

14. [In architecture.] A system of the several members, ornaments, and proportions of columns and pilasters; or it is a regular arrangement of the projecting parts of a building, especially those of a column; so as to form one beautiful whole: or order is a certain rule for the proportions of columns, and for the figures which some of the parts ought to have, on the account of the proportions that are given them. There are five orders of columns; three of which are Greek, viz. the Dorick, Ionick, and Corinthian; and two Italian, viz. the Tuscan and Composite. The whole is composed of two parts at least, the column and the entablature, and of four parts at the most; where there is a pedestal under the columns, and one acroter or little pedestal on the top of the entablature. The column has three parts; the base, the shaft, and the capital; which parts are all different in the several orders.

In the Tuscan order, any height being given, divide it into ten parts and three quarters, called diameters, by diameters is meant the thickness of the shaft at the bottom, the pedestal having two;

the column with base and capital, seven; and the entablature one and three quarters.

In the Dorick order, the whole height being given, is divided into twelve diameters or parts, and one third; the pedestal having two and one third, the column eight, and the entablature two.

In the Ionick order, the whole height is divided into thirteen diameters and a half, the pedestal having two and two thirds, the column nine, and the entablature one and four fifths.

In the Corinthian order, the whole height is divided into fourteen diameters and a half, the pedestal having three, the column nine and a half, and the entablature two.

In the Composite order, the whole height is divided into fifteen diameters and one third; the pedestal having three and one third, the column ten, and the entablature two.

In a colonnade or range of pillars, the intercolumniation or space between columns in the tuscan order, is four diameters. In the Dorick order, two and three quarters; in the Ionick order, two and a quarter; in the Corinthian order, two; and in the Composite order, one and a half. Builder's Dict.

To O'RDER.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To regulate; to adjust; to manage; to conduct.

To him that ordereth his conversation aright, will I shew the salvation of God. Ps. l. 23.

Balfour, by an orderly and well-governed march, passed in the king's quarters without any considerable loss, to a place of safety. Clarendon.

4. According with established method.

As for the orders established, sith the law of nature, of God and man do all favour that which is in being, till orderly judgement of decision be given against it, it is but justice to exact obedience of you. Hooker.

A clergy reformed from popery in such a manner, as happily to preserve the mean between the two extremes, in doctrine, worship, and government, perfected this reformation by quiet and orderly methods, free from those confusions and tumults that elsewhere attended it. Atterbury.

O'RDERLY. adv. [from order.] Methodically; according to order; regularly; according to rule.

All parts of knowledge have been thought by wise men to be then most orderly delivered and proceeded in, when they are drawn to their first original. Hooker.

Ask him his name, and orderly proceed
To swear him. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Make it orderly and well,
According to the fashion of the time. Shakspeare.

It is walled with brick and stone, intermixed orderly. Sandys.

How should those active particles, justled by the occursion of other bodies, whereof there is an infinite store, so orderly keep their cells without any alteration of site. Glanville.

In the body, when the principal parts, the heart and liver, do their offices, and all the inferior smaller vessels act orderly and duly, there arises a sweet enjoyment upon the whole, which we call health. South, Serm.

ORDINABI'LITY.* n. s. [from ordinable.] Capability of being appointed.

Our obedience to God ought to be such, as that it may have, though not a merit of condignity to deserve everlasting bliss, (that being, as I have shewn you, utterly impossible,) yet an ordinability, as a great doctor of our church expresseth it, that is, a meetness, fitness, and due disposition toward the obtaining it. Bp. Bull, Works, i. 367.

O'RDINABLE.† adj. [ordino, Lat.] Such as may be appointed.

All the ways of œconomy God hath used toward a rational creature, to reduce mankind to that course of living which is most perfectly agreeable to our nature, and by the mercy of God, ordinable to eternal bliss. Hammond.

If we look upon ourselves as men, we are free agents, and therefore capable of doing good or evil, and consequently ordinable unto reward or punishment. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 11.

O'RDINAL. adj. [ordinal, Fr. ordinalis, Lat.] Noting order: as, second, third.

The moon's age is thus found, add to the epact the day of the month and the ordinal number of that month from March inclusive, because the epact begins at March, and the sum of those, casting away thirty or twenty-nine, as often as it ariseth, is the age of the moon. Holder.

O'RDINAL.† n. s. [ordinal, old Fr. ordinale, Lat.] A ritual; a book containing orders.

As provost principall
To teach them their ordinall. Skelton, Poems, p. 230.

O'RDINANCE. n. s. [ordonnance, Fr.]

1. Law; rule; prescript.

It seemeth hard to plant any sound ordinance, or reduce them to a civil government; since all their ill customs are permitted unto them. Spenser on Ireland.

Let Richard and Elizabeth,
The true succeeders of each royal house,
By God's fair ordinance conjoin together! Shakspeare.

2. Observance commanded.

One ordinance ought not to exclude the other, much less to disparage the other, and least of all to undervalue that which is the most eminent. Bp. Taylor.

3. Appointment.

Things created to shew bare heads,
When one but of my ordinance stood up,
To speak of peace or war. Shakspeare, Coriol.

4. A cannon. It is now generally written for distinction ordnance; its derivation is not certain; perhaps when the word cannon was first introduced, it was mistaken for canon, and so not improperly translated ordinance. It is commonly used in a collective sense for more cannons than one.

Caves and womby vaultages of France,
Shall chide your trespass and return your mock,
In second accent to his ordinance. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

O'RDINANT.* adj. [ordinans, Lat.] Ordaining; decreeing. Not in use.

Why, even in that was heaven ordinant. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

O'RDINARILY. adv. [from ordinary.]

1. According to established rules; according to settled method.

We are not to look that the church should change her publick laws and ordinances, made according to that which is judged ordinarily, and commonly fittest for the whole, although it chance that for some particular men the same be found inconvenient. Hooker.

Springs and rivers do not derive the water which they ordinarily refund, from rain. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Commonly; usually.

The instances of human ignorance were not only clear ones, but such as are not so ordinarily suspected. Glanville.

Prayer ought to be more than ordinarily fervent and vigorous before the sacrament. South.

O'RDINARY. adj. [ordinarius, Lat.]

1. Established; methodical; regular.

Though in arbitrary governments there may be a body of laws observed in the ordinary forms of justice, they are not sufficient to secure any rights to the people; because they may be dispensed with. Addison, Freeholder.

The standing ordinary means of conviction failing to influence them, it is not to be expected that any extraordinary means should be able to do it. Atterbury.

Through the want of a sincere intention of pleasing God in all our actions, we fall into such irregularities of life, as by the ordinary means of grace we should have power to avoid. Law.

2. Common; usual.

Yet did she only utter her doubt to her daughters, thinking, since the worst was past, she would attend a further occasion, lest over much haste might seem to proceed of the ordinary mislike between sisters in law. Sidney.

It is sufficient that Moses have the ordinary credit of an historian given him. Tillotson.

This designation of the person our author is more than ordinary obliged to take care of, because he hath made the conveyance, as well as the power itself, sacred. Locke.

There is nothing more ordinary than children's receiving into their minds propositions from their parents; which being fastened by degrees, are at last, whether true or false, riveted there. Locke.

Method is not less requisite in ordinary conversation, than in writing. Addison.

3. Mean; of low rank.

These are the paths wherein ye have walked, that are of the ordinary sort of men; these are the very steps ye have trodden, and the manifest degrees whereby ye are of your guides and directors trained up in that school. Hooker.

Men of common capacity, and but ordinary judgement, are not able to discern what things are fittest for each kind and state of regiment. Hooker.

Every ordinary reader, upon the publishing of a new poem, has will and ill-nature enough to turn several passages of it into ridicule, and very often in the right place. Addison.

My speculations, when sold single, are delights for the rich and wealthy; after some time they come to the market in great quantities, and are every ordinary man's money. Addison.

You will wonder how such an ordinary fellow, as Wood, could get his majesty's broad seal. Swift.

4. Ugly; not handsome: as, she is an ordinary woman.

O'RDINARY. n. s.

1. Established judge of ecclesiastical causes.

The evil wilt
Of all their parishioners they had constrain'd,
Who to the ordinary of them complain'd. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

If fault be in these things any where justly found, law hath referred the whole disposition and redress thereof to the ordinary of the place. Hooker.

2. Settled establishment.

Spain had no other wars save those which were grown into an ordinary; now they have coupled therewith the extraordinary of the Valtoline and Palatinate. Bacon.

3. Actual and constant office.

Villiers had an intimation of the king's pleasure to be his cup-bearer at large; and the summer following he was admitted in ordinary. Wotton.

He at last accepted, and was soon after made chaplain in ordinary to his majesty. Fell.

4. Regular price of a meal.

Our courteous Antony,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast,
And for his ordinary pays his heart
For what his eyes eat only. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

5. A place of eating established at a certain price.

They reckon all their errours for accomplishments; and all the odd words they have picked up in a coffee-house, or a gaming ordinary, are produced as flowers of style. Swift.

To O'RDINATE. v. a. [ordinatus, Latin.] To appoint.

Finding how the certain right did stand,
With full consent this man did ordinate
The heir apparent to the crown and land. Daniel.

O'RDINATE, adj. [ordinatus, Latin.] Regular; methodical.

Ordinate figures are such as have all their sides, and all their angles equal. Ray on the Creation.

O'RDINATE.* n. s. A line drawn perpendicular to the axis of a curve, and terminating the curvilinear space.

Each preceding quantity in such series is as the area of a curvilinear figure, whereof the absciss is z, and the ordinate is the following quantity. Bp. Berkeley, Analyst, § 46.

O'RDINATELY.* adv. In a regular or methodical manner.

If I would apply
To write ordinately,
I wot not where to fynde
Terms to serve my mynde. Skelton, Poems, p. 237.

Necessary studies succeeding ordinately the lesson of poets. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 30.

ORDINA'TION. n. s. [ordinatio, Lat. from ordinate.]

1. Established order or tendency, consequent on a decree.

Every creature is good, partly by creation, and partly by ordination. Perkins.

Virtue and vice have a natural ordination to the happiness and misery of life respectively. Norris.

2. The act of investing any man with sacerdotal power.

Though ordained by Arian bishops, his ordination was never questioned. Stillingfleet.

St. Paul looks upon Titus as advanced to the dignity of a prime ruler of the church, and entrusted with a large diocese under the immediate government of their respective elders; and those deriving authority from his ordination. South.

O'RDINATIVE.* adj. [ordinatif, Fr.] Directing; giving order. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

O'RDNANCE. n. s. This was anciently written more frequently ordinance; but ordnance is used for distinction.] Cannon; great guns.

Have I not heard great ordnance in the field?
And heaven's artillery thunder in the skies? Shakspeare.

When a ship seels or rolls in foul weather, the breaking loose of ordnance is a thing very dangerous. Ralegh.

There are examples of wounded persons that have roared for anguish and torment at the discharge of ordnance, though at a very great distance. Bentley.

ORDO'NNANCE.*† n. s. [French.] Disposition of figures in a picture.

In a history-piece of many figures, the general design, the ordonnance or disposition of it, the relation of one figure to another, — are of difficult performance. Dryden; Life of Plutarch.

O'RDURE.† n. s. [ordure, French; from sordes, Lat. Skinner, and Dr. Johnson. — From the ancient French ord, nasty; which Borel derives from the Lat. sordidus, but Serenius from the Icel. aur, or, filth.] Dung; filth.

Gard'ners with ordure hide those roots
That shall first spring and be most delicate. Shakspeare.

Working upon human ordure, and by long preparation rendering it odoriferous, he terms it zibetta occidentalis. Brown.

We added fat pollutions of our own,
T' encrease the steaming ordures of the stage. Dryden.

Renew'd by ordure's sympathetick force,
As oil'd with magick juices for the course,
Vig'rous he rises. Pope.

ORE.† n. s. [ope, or opa, Saxon; oor, Dutch, a mine.]

1. Metal unrefined; metal yet in its fossil state.

Round about him lay on every side,
Great heaps of gold that never would be spent;
Of which some were rude ore not purify'd
Of Mulciber's devouring element. Spenser, F. Q.

They would have brought them the gold ore aboard their ships. Ralegh, Apol.

A hill not far,
Shone with a glossy scurf, undoubted sign
That in his womb was hid metallick ore,
The work of sulphur. Milton, P. L.

Who have labour'd more
To search the treasures of the Roman store,
Or dig in Grecian mines for purer ore? Roscommon.

Quick-silver ore of this mine is the richest of all ores I have yet seen, for ordinarily it contains in it half quick-silver, and in two parts of ore, one part of quick-silver, and sometimes in three parts of ore, two parts of quick-silver. Brown.

We walk in dreams on fairy land,
Where golden ore lies mixt with common sand. Dryden.

Those who unripe veins in mines explore,
On the rich bed again the warm turf lay,
Till time digests the yet imperfect ore,
And know it will be gold another day. Dryden.

Those profounder regions they explore,
Where metals ripen in vast cakes of ore. Garth.

2. Metal.

The liquid ore he drain'd
First his own tools; then what might else be wrought,

3. A coin. Obsolete.

These ores (which was a Saxon coin) are declared to be in value of our money 16d. a-piece; but after, by the variation of the standard, they valued 20d. a-piece. Blount, Anc. Ten. p. 159.

O'READ.* n. s. [from the Gr. ὄρος, a mountain.] A nymph of the mountains.

Thus saying from her husband's hand her hand
Soft she withdrew, and like a wood-nymph light,
Oread, or Dryad, or of Delia's train,
Betook her to the grove. Milton, P. L.

O'REWEED.} O'REWOOD.} n. s. A weed either growing upon the rocks under high water mark, or broken from the bottom of the sea by rough weather, and cast upon the next by the wind and flood.
Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

A chapilet. Chaucer, Rom. R. 562.

Item, a faire cope of clothe of golde, with an orphrese of clothe of sylver, and a running orphrese embrodered.
Life of Sir T. Pope, by Warton, p. 349.

O'RGAL. n. s. Lees of wine.

O'RGAN.† n. s. [organe, Fr. ὄργανον.]

1. Natural instrument; as the tongue is the organ of speech, the lungs of respiration.

When he shall hear she died upon his words,
The ever lovely organ of her life
Shall come apparell'd in more precious habit,
Than when she liv'd indeed. Shakspeare.

For a mean and organ, by which this operative virtue might be continued, God appointed the light to be united, and gave it also motion and heat. Ralegh.

The aptness of birds is not so much in the conformity of the organs of speech, as in their attention. Bacon.

Wit and will
Can judge and choose without the body's aid;
Tho' on such objects they are working still,
As through the body's organs are convey'd. Davies.

2. An instrument of musick consisting of pipes filled with wind, and of stops, touched by the hand. [Orgue, Fr. "instrument de musique fort ancien." Roquefort. "Navarr saith, that the use of organs was not received in Thomas Aquinas's time; who was born in the year 1221. But Bale and Mantuan attribute the bringing in of organs to the pope Vitalian. Then it must be about the year 660. But to make short, the organ is not of the western, but the eastern invention. Aymon saith, that the first organ they had in France was made more Græcorum, — after the year 813. — But Marianus Scotus, Martin Polonus, Platina, the Annals of France, Aventine, and the Pontifical itself, all agree, that the first organ that ever was seen in the west, was sent over into France to king Pepin from the Greek emperor Constantinus Copronymus, about the year 766. Res adhuc Germanis et Gallis incognita, saith Aventine, instrumentum musicæ maximum; organum appellant; cicutis ex albo plumbo compactum est, simul et follibus inflatur, et manuum pedumque digitis pulsatur. Annal. Boiorum, lib. 3. fol. 300. And so we have the antiquity of organs in the west. But in the east they cannot be less ancient than the Nicene council itself, as appeareth by the emperor Julian's epigram upon the instrument. Εἰς ΌΡΓΑΝΟΝ. Ἀλλοίην δονάκων, &c." Gregory's Posthuma, or Learned Tracts, 1650, p. 49.]

A hand of a vast extension, and a prodigious number of fingers playing upon all the organ pipes in the world; and making every one sound a particular note. Keil.

While in more lengthen'd notes, and slow,
The deep, majestick, solemn organs blow. Pope.

To O'RGAN.* v. a. [from the noun.] To form organically. Not in use.

Would'st thou be treated with in the ineffable dialect of heaven? Alas! fond creature, thou art elemented and organed for other apprehensions, for a lower commerce of perception. Mannyngham, Disc. (1681,) p. 89.

ORGA'NICAL. } ORGA'NICK. } adj. [organique, Fr. organicus, Lat.]

1. Consisting of various parts co-operating with each other.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.

He with serpent tongue
Organick, or impulse of vocal air,
His fraudulent temptation thus began. Milton, P. L.

The organical structure of human bodies, whereby they live and move and are vitally informed by the soul, is the workmanship of a most wise, powerful, and beneficent being. Bentley.

2. Instrumental; acting as instruments of nature or art, to a certain end.

Read with them those organick arts which enable men to discourse and write perspicuously, elegantly, and according to the fitted style of lofty, mean, or lowly. Milton on Education.

3. Respecting organs.

She could not produce a monster of any thing that hath more vital and organical parts than a rock of marble. Ray.

They who want the sense of discipline, or hearing, are by consequence deprived of speech, not by any immediate organical indisposition, but for want of discipline. Holder.

ORGA'NICALLY. adv. [from organical.] By means of organs or instruments; by organical disposition of parts.

All stones, metals, and minerals, are real vegetables; that is, grow organically from seeds, as well as plants. Locke.

ORGA'NICALNESS. n. s. [from organical.] State of being organical.

O'RGANISM. n. s. [from organ.] Organical structure.

How admirable is the natural structure or organism of bodies. Grew, Cosmol. Sac.

O'RGANIST. n. s. [organiste, Fr. from organ.] One who plays on the organ.

An organist serves that office in a publick choir. Boyle.

ORGANIZA'TION. n. s. [from organize.] Construction in which the parts are so disposed as to be subservient to each other.

Every man's senses differ as much from others in their figure, colour, site, and infinite other peculiarities in the organization, as any one man's can from itself, through divers accidental variations. Glanville, Scepsis.

That being then one plant, which has such an organization of parts in one coherent body, partaking of one common life, it continues to be the same plant, though that life be communicated to new particles of matter, in a like continued organization. Locke.

To O'RGANIZE. v. a. [organiser, Fr. from organ.] To construct so as that one part co-operates with another; to form organically.

As the soul doth organize the body, and give unto every member that substance, quantity, and shape, which nature seeth most expedient, so the inward grace of sacraments may teach what serveth best for their outward form. Hooker.

A genial and cherishing heat so acts upon the fit and obsequious matter, wherein it was harboured, as to organize and fashion that disposed matter according to the exigencies of its own nature. Boyle.

Those nobler faculties in the mind, matter organized could never produce. Ray on the Creation.

The identity of the same man consists in a participation of the same continued life, by constantly fleeting particles in succession vitally united to the same organized body. Locke.

O'RGANLOFT. n. s. [organ and loft.] The loft where the organs stand.

Five young ladies, who are of no small fame for their great severity of manners, — would go no where with their lovers but to an organloft in a church, where they had a cold treat and some few opera songs. Tatler, No. 61.

O'RGANPIPE. n. s. [organ and pipe.] The pipe of a musical organ.

The thunder,
That deep and dreadful organpipe, pronounc'd
The name of Prosper. Shakspeare, Tempest.

O'RGANY.† n. s. [opȝane, Saxon; origanum, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

Organie healeth scabs. Gerarde's Herball, (1597,) p. 542.

O'RGASM. n. s. [orgasme, Fr. ὀργασμός.] Sudden vehemence.

This rupture of the lungs, and consequent spitting of blood, usually arises from an orgasm, or immoderate motion of the blood. Blackmore.

By means of the curious lodgement and inosculation of the auditory nerves, the orgasms of the spirits should be allayed, and perturbations of the mind quieted. Derham.

*ORGEA'T. n. s. [French.] A liquor extracted from barley and sweet almonds. Mason.

O'RGEIS. n. s. A sea-fish, called likewise organling. Both seem a corruption of the orkenyling, as being taken on the Orkney coast. Ainsworth.

O'RGIES.† n. s. [orgies, Fr. orgia, Lat. ὄργια, Gr. from ὀργή, rage.] Mad rites of Bacchus; frantick revels.

These are nights
Solemn to the shining rites
Of the fairy prince and knights,
While the moon their orgies lights. B. Jonson.

She feign'd nocturnal orgies; left my bed,
And, mix'd with Trojan dames, the dances led. Dryden.

O'RGILLOUS.† adj. [orgueilleux, Fr. Dr. Johnson.— The modern editors of Shakspeare print this word orgulous, and Mr. Steevens has shewn that it is a very ancient word for proud or disdainful. The Saxons used opȝellice in the same manner.] Proud; haughty. Not in use.

From isles of Greece
The princes orgillous, their high blood chafed,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships.
Shakspeare, Hen. V. Prol.

O'RICHALCH.† n. s. [orichalcum, Lat. from the Gr. ὄρος, a mountain, and χαλκός, brass. Our word is sometimes improperly written aurichalc, as if it were connected with aurum, gold.] Brass.

Not Bilbo steel, nor brass from Corinth fet,
Nor costly orichalch from strange Phœnice,
But such as could both Phœbus' arrows ward,
And the hailing darts of heaven beating hard.
Spenser, Muiopotmos.

A massy idol of auricalk is placed upon a chariot with eight wheels richly gilded. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 345.

O'RIEL.* } O'RIOL. } n. s. [oriol, old Fr. "porche, allée, galerie," Lacombe; oriolum, low Latin. Du Cange says, that he knows not the origin of this word.] A little waste room next the hall, where particular persons dine. Such is the description by Coles, Dict. 1685. And the sense of oriolum is much the same in Du Cange. It was a sort of recess. In our ancient vocabulary, the Prompt. Parvulorum, oryel is translated into the Latin cancellus, interdicula. This may serve to explain "the oriel window," which is sometimes found in modern publications.

Oryal, oriolum:—we may justly presume that Oriel or Oryal college, in Oxford, took name from such room, or portico, or cloister. Cowel, in V. Oryel.

O'RIENCY.* n. s. [from orient.] Brightness of colour; strength of colour.

In that they [angels] are sinless, their created power is in its pristine vigour and oriency, immaculate. Waterhous on Fortescue, p. 221.

Black and thorny plum tree is of the deepest oriency. Evelyn, B. iii. ch. 4. § 12.

O'RIENT. adj. [oriens, Lat.]

1. Rising as the sun.

Moon that now meet'st the orient sun, now fly'st
With the fix'd stars. Milton, P. L.

When fair morn orient in heaven appear'd. Milton, P. L.

2. Eastern; oriental.

3. Bright; shining; glittering; gaudy; sparkling.

The liquid drops of tears that you have shed,
Shall come again transform'd to orient pearl;
Advantaging their loan with interest,
Oftentimes double gain of happiness. Shakspeare.

There do breed yearly an innumerable company of gnats whose property is to fly unto the eye of the lion, as being a bright and orient thing. Abbot on the World.

We have spoken of the cause of orient colours in birds; which is by the fineness of the strainer. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Morning light
More orient in yon western cloud, that draws
O'er the blue firmament a radiant white. Milton, P. L.

Bathing herself in origan and thyme. Spenser, F. Q.

O'RIGENIST.* n. s. A follower of Origen, a learned presbyter of Alexandria, in the third century. A denial of the co-equality of Persons in the Eternal Trinity, the pre-existence of the soul, the cessation of the torments of the damned, the restoration of all intelligent beings to order and happiness, and an unbounded love of allegory, have been principal distinctions of this sect.

He is an Origenist, and believes in the conversion of the devil. Burke, Lett. on a Regicide Peace.

O'RIGIN. } ORI'GINAL. } n. s. [origine, Fr. origo, Lat.]

1. Beginning; first existence.

The sacred historian only treats of the origins of terrestrial animals. Bentley, Serm.

2. Fountain; source; that which gives beginning or existence.

Nature which contemns its origin,
Cannot be border'd certain in itself. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

If any station upon earth be honourable, theirs was; and their posterity therefore have no reason to blush at the memory of such an original. Atterbury.

Some philosophers have placed the original of power in admiration, either of surpassing form, great valour, or superior understanding. Davenant.

Original of beings! pow'r divine!
Since that I live and that I think, is thine. Prior.

These great orbs,
Primitive founts, and origins of light. Prior.

3. First copy; archetype; that from which any thing is transcribed or translated. In this sense origin is not used.

Compare this translation with the original, the three first stanzas are rendered almost word for word, not only with the same elegance, but with the same turn of expression. Addison.

External material things, as the objects of sensation; and the operations of our minds within, as the objects of reflection; are the only originals from whence all our ideas take their beginnings. Locke.

4. Derivation; descent.

They, like the seed from which they sprung, accurst
Against the gods immortal hatred nurst;
An impious, arrogant, and cruel brood,
Expressing their original from blood. Dryden.

ORI'GINAL. adj. [originel, Fr. originalis, Latin.] Primitive; pristine; first.

The original question was, whether God hath forbidden the giving any worship to himself by an image? Stillingfleet.

Had Adam obeyed God, his original perfection, the knowledge and ability God at first gave him, would still have continued. Wake, Prep. for Death.

You still, fair mother, in your offspring trace
The stock of beauty destin'd for the race;
Kind nature, forming them the pattern took,
From heav'n's first work, and Eve's original look. Prior.

ORIGINA'LITY.* n. s. [from original.] Quality or state of being original.

Here also hangs the celebrated Madonna del Pesce of Raphael, one of the most valuable pictures in the world. I do not know how Amiconi came to doubt of its originality. Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 43.

The owners really believed these pictures to be original, and among the best of the respective masters, to whom they were attributed; and it would have been the highest affront to have expressed a doubt of their originality. Gough.

ORI'GINALLY. adv. [from original.]

1. Primarily; with regard to the first cause; from the beginning.

A very great difference between a king that holdeth his crown by a willing act of estates, and one that holdeth it originally by the law of nature and descent of blood. Bacon.

As God is originally holy in himself, so he might communicate his sanctity to the sons of men, whom he intended to bring unto the fruition of himself. Pearson.

A present blessing upon our fasts, is neither originally due from God's justice, nor becomes due to us from his veracity. Smalridge, Serm.

2. At first.

Hath vex'd the Red-Sea coast. Milton, P. L.

O'RISON.† n. s. [orison, old French; oraison, modern; oratio, Lat. See ORAISON. When written oraison, the accent is proper on the second syllable; not so, when written orisón. Cotton, for the sake of the rhyme, in a burlesque couplet among the following examples, has indeed forced the accent upon the second syllable of orison. The word is usually found in the plural number. Dyer uses oraison in the singular.] A prayer; a supplication.

Nymph, in thy orisons
Be all my sins remember'd. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Alas! your too much love and care of me
Are heavy orisons 'gainst this poor wretch. Shakspeare.

He went into St. Paul's church, where he had orisons and Te Deum sung. Bacon, Hen. VII.

My wakeful lay shall knock
At the oriental gates, and duly mock
The early larks shrill orisons, to be
An anthem at the day's nativity. Crashaw.

His daily orisons attract our ears. Sandys on Job.

Lowly they bow'd, adoring, and began
Their orisons, each morning duly paid. Milton, P. L.

So went he on with his orisons,
Which, if you mark them well, were wise ones. Cotton.

The mid-night-clock attests my fervent prayers,
The rising sun my orisons declares. Harte.

ORK.† n. s. A sea-fish. See ORC.

O'RLOP. n. s. [overloop, Dutch.] The middle deck. Skinner.

A small ship of the king's called the Pensie, was assailed by the Lyon, a principal ship of Scotland; wherein the Pensie so applied her shot, that the Lyon's orloop was broken, her sails and tackling torn; and lastly, she was boarded and taken. Hayward.

O'RNAMENT. n. s. [ornamentum, Lat. ornement, French.]

1. Embellishment; decoration.

So may the outward shows be least themselves;
The world is still deceiv'd with ornament. Shakspeare.

2. Something that embellishes.

Ivorie, wrought in ornaments to decke the cheekes of horse. Chapman.

The Tuscan chief, to me has sent
Their crown, and every regal ornament. Dryden.

No circumstances of life can place a man so far below the notice of the world, but that his virtues or vices will render him, in some degree, an ornament or disgrace to his profession. Rogers.

3. Honour; that which confers dignity.

They are abused and injured, and betrayed from their only perfection, whenever they are taught, that any thing is an ornament in them, that is not an ornament in the wisest amongst mankind. Law.

The persons of different qualities in both sexes, are indeed allowed their different ornaments; but these are by no means costly, being rather designed as marks of distinction than to make a figure. Addison on Italy.

To O'RNAMENT.* v. a. [from the noun. Dr. Johnson notices ornamented (without any example) as an adjective, which he thinks a word of late introduction, and not very elegant. Warburton, a little before the Dictionary of Dr. Johnson was published, appears to have employed it; and Shenstone had used it long before.] To embellish; to bedeck; to adorn.

Why droops my Damon, whilst he roves
Through ornamented fields and groves? Shenstone, Prog. of Taste, P. 4.

Those august towers of St. James's, which, though neither seemly nor sublime, yet ornament the place where the balances are preserved, which weigh out liberty and property to the nations all abroad. Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 60.

The font, remaining in its old situation near the chief entrance, is large and well ornamented.
Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 4.

ORNAME'NTAL. adj. [from ornament.] Serving to decoration; giving embellishment.

Some think it most ornamental to wear their bracelets on their wrists, others about their ancles. Brown.

If the kind be capable of more perfection, though rather in the ornamental parts of it, than the essential, what rules of morality or respect have I broken, in naming the defects that they may hereafter be amended? Dryden.

Even the Heathens have esteemed this variety not only ornamental to the earth, but a proof of the wisdom of the Creator.
Woodward, Nat. Hist.

If no advancement of knowledge can be had from universities, the time there spent is lost; every ornamental part of education is better taught elsewhere. Swift on Religion.

ORNAME'NTALLY. adv. [from ornamental.] In such a manner as may confer embellishment.

O'RNATE.† adj. [ornatus, Lat. This is an old word in our language; of which Milton seems to have been fond. It is in Huloet's Dictionary.] Bedecked; decorated; fine.

Not in rude and old language, but in polyshed and ornate terms. Pref. to the Boke of Encydos, Caxton, (1490.)

Men — ornate with virtue and wisdom.
Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 12. b.

A graceful and ornate rhetorick, taught out of the rule of Plato. Milton on Education.

What thing of sea or land,
Female of sex it seems,
That so bedeck'd, ornate and gay,
Comes this way sailing? Milton, S. A.

To O'RNATE.* v. a. [orno, Lat.] To adorn; to garnish. Huloet.

This is the exposition of the noble philosopher; which I have written, principally to the intent to ornate our language with using wordes in their proper signification.
Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 200.

O'RNATELY.* adv. [from ornate.] Finely; with decoration; with embellishment.

With proper captations of benevolence
Ornately pollyshed after your facultie. Skelton, Poems, p. 35.

ORNITHO'LOGIST.* n. s. [ornithologiste, Fr. from ornithology.] One who understands the nature of birds: a describer of birds.

Soon after Mr. Adamson's Voyage to Senegal, Mr. Collinson first in the philosophical translations, and after him, the most eminent ornithologists in Europe, seem to have considered this traveller's having caught four European swallows, on the 6th of October, not far from the African coast, as a decisive proof that the common swallows, when they disappear in Europe, make for Africa during the winter, and return again to us in the spring. Barrington, Ess. 4.

ORNITHO'LOGY. n. s. [ὄρνις and λόγος.] A discourse on birds.

O'RPHAN. n. s. [ὀρφανός; orphelin, Fr.] A child who has lost father or mother, or both.

Poor orphan in the wide world scattered,
As budding branch rent from the native tree,
And thrown forth until it be withered:
Such is the state of man. Spenser.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
To wring the widow from her custom'd right,
And have no other reason for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath? Shakspeare.

Sad widows, by thee rifled, weep in vain,
And ruin'd orphans of thy rapes complain. Sandys.

The sea with spoils his angry bullets strow,
Widows and orphans making as they go. Waller.

Pity, with a parent's mind,
This helpless orphan whom thou leav'st behind. Dryden.

Collections were made for the relief of the poor, whether widows or orphans. Nelson.

O'RPHAN. adj. [orphelin, Fr.] Bereft of parents.

This king left orphan both of father and mother, found his estate, when he came to age, so disjointed even in the noblest and strongest limbs of government, that the name of a king was grown odious. Sidney.

O'RPHANISM. }
Sherwood.

O'RPHANED.* adj. [from orphan.] Bereft of parents or friends.

So wept Lorenzo fair Clarissa's fate;
Who gave that angel boy, on whom he doats,
And died to give him, orphan'd in his birth.
Young, Night Th. 5.

For this orphaned world the Holy Spirit made the like charitable provision. Warburton, Serm. 20.

O'RPIMENT. n. s. [auripigmentum, Lat. orpiment, orpin, Fr.]

True and genuine orpiment is a foliaceous fossil, of a fine and pure texture, remarkably heavy, and its colour is a bright and beautiful yellow, like that of gold. It is not hard but very tough, easily bending without breaking. Orpiment has been supposed to contain gold, and is found in mines of gold, silver, and copper, and sometimes in the strata of marl. Hill.

For the golden colour, it may be made by some small mixture of orpiment, such as they use to brass in the yellow alchymy; it will easily recover that which the iron loseth. Bacon.

ORPHA'NOTROPHY. n. s. [ὀρφανὸς and τροφή.] An hospital for orphans.

O'RPINE. n. s. [orpin, Fr. telephon, Lat.] Liverer or rose root, anacampseros, Telephum, or Rhodia radis. A plant. Miller.

Cool violets, and orpine growing still.
Embathed balm, and cheerful galingale. Spenser.

O'RRERY. n. s. An instrument which by many complicated movements represents the revolutions of the heavenly bodies. It was first made by Mr. Rowley, a mathematician born at Litchfield, and so named from his patron the earl of Orrery: by one or other of this family almost every art has been encouraged or improved.

O'RRIS. n. s. [oris, Latin.] A plant and flower.
Miller.

The nature of the orris root is almost singular; for roots that are in any degree sweet, it is but the same sweetness with the wood or leaf; but the orris is not sweet in the leaf; neither is the flower any thing so sweet as the root. Bacon.

O'RRIS.† n. s. [old Fr.] A sort of gold or silver lace. Dr. Johnson. — If such a word as orris, in this sense, exists, (which I doubt,) it can only be a corruption of orfrais. See ORFRAIS.

ORT.* n. s. [See ORTS.] A fragment.

It is some poor fragment, some slender ort of his remainder. Shakspeare, Timon.

ORTHODOX. } adj. [ὀρθὸς and δοκέω; orthodox,
ORTHODOXAL. } French.] Sound in opinion and doctrine; not heretical. Orthodoxal is not now used.

Be you persuaded and settled in the true protestant religion professed by the church of England; which is as sound and orthodox in the doctrine thereof, as any Christian church in the world. Bacon.

An uniform profession of one and the same orthodoxal verity, which was once given to the saints in the holy Apostles days. White.

Eternal bliss is not immediately superstructed on the most orthodox beliefs; but as our Saviour saith, If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them; the doing must be first superstructed on the knowing or believing, before any happiness can be built on it. Hammond.

Origen and the two Clemens's, their works were originally orthodox, but had been afterwards corrupted, and interpolated by hereticks in some parts of them. Waterland.

O'RTHODOXLY. adv. [from orthodox.] With soundness of opinion.

The doctrine of the church of England, expressed in the thirty-nine articles, is so soundly and so orthodoxly settled, as cannot be questioned without extreme danger to the honour of our religion. Bacon.

O'RTHODOXNESS.* n. s. [from orthodox.] State of being orthodox.

I proceed now to the second thing implied in being faithful: and that is purity, and orthodoxness of doctrine. Killingbeck, Serm. p. 17.

O'RTHODOXY. n. s. [ὀρθοδοξία; orthodoxie, Fr. from orthodox.] Soundness in opinion and doctrine.

Basil himself bears full and clear testimony to Gregory's orthodoxy. Waterland.

I do not attempt explaining the mysteries of the christian religion, since Providence intended there should be mysteries, it cannot be agreeable to piety, orthodoxy, or good sense, to go about it. Swift.

O'RTHODROMICKS. n. s. [from ὀρθὸς and δρόμος.] The art of sailing in the arc of some great circle, which is the shortest or straightest distance between any two points on the surface of the globe. Harris.

O'RTHOEPY.* n. s. [ὄρθος, right, and ἔπος, a word, Gr.] The art of pronouncing words properly.

Of orthography, or orthoepy, treating of the letters and their pronunciation. Greenwood, Ess. on Eng. Grammar, (2d ed. 1722,) p. 235.

As it has been frequently represented to me, that the unusual, though proper, expression of Elements of Orthoepy, the original title of this work, has prevented many from comprehending its real intention, I have consented to the printing of a new title-page. Nares, Gen. Rules for the Pron. of the Eng. Lang. (1792,) Adv.

O'RTHOGON. n. s. [ὀρθὸς and γωνία.] A rectangled figure.

The square will make you ready for all manner of compartments; your cylinder for vaulted turrets and round buildings; your orthogon and pyramid, for sharp steeples. Peacham.

ORTHO'GONAL.† adj. [orthogonel, Fr. from orthogon.] Rectangular.

Finding the squares of an orthogonal triangle's side. Selden, Pref. to Drayton's Polyolbion.

ORTHO'GRAPHER. n. s. [ὀρθὸς and γράφω.] One who spells according to the rules of grammar.

He was wont to speak plain, like an honest man and a soldier; and now he is turn'd orthographer, his words are just so many strange dishes. Shakspeare.

ORTHOGRA'PHICAL. adj. [from orthography.]

1. Rightly spelled.

2. Relating to the spelling.

I received from him the following letter, which, after having rectified some little orthographical mistakes, I shall make a present of to the publick. Addison, Spect.

3. Delineated according to the elevation, not the ground-plot.

O'RTOLAN. n. s. [French.] A small bird accounted very delicious.

Nor ortolans nor godwits. Cowley.

ORTS.† n. s. seldom with a singular. [This word is derived by Skinner from ort, German, the fourth part of any thing; by Mr. Lye more reasonably from orda, Irish, a fragment. In Anglo Saxon, ord signifies the beginning; whence in some provinces odds and ends, for ords and ends, signify remnants, scattered pieces, refuse; from ord thus used probably came ort. Dr. Johnson. — Orts is, throughout all England, one of the most common words in our language; which has adopted nothing from the Irish, though we use two or three of their words, as Irish. Orts is merely the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb opettan, turpare, vilefacere, deturpare. Oret, ort, means (any thing, something,) made vile or worthless. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purley, ii. 328.] Refuse; things left or thrown away.

He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth;
A barren-spirited fellow, one that feeds
On abject orts and imitations. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

The fractions of her faith, orts of her love,
The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy reliques
Of her o'er eaten faith, are bound to Diomede. Shakspeare.

Much good do't you then;
Brave plush and velvet men
Can feed on orts. B. Jonson.

Thou son of crums and orts. B. Jonson, New Inn.

The polluted orts and refuse of Arcadias and romances. Milton, Eiconoclast. ch. 1.

Like lavish ancestors, his earlier years
Have disinherited his future hours,
Which starve on orts, and glean their former field. Young, Night Th. 3.

2. Unusual sleepiness; carelessness.

If persons of circumspect piety have been overtaken, what security can there be for our wreckless oscitancy? Gov. Ton.

It might proceed from the oscitancy of transcribers, who, to dispatch their work the sooner, used to write all numbers in cyphers. Addison, Spect.

O'SCITANT.† adj. [oscitans, Lat.]

1. Yawning; unusually sleepy.
2. Sleepy; sluggish.

His legal justice cannot be so fickle and so variable, sometimes like a devouring fire, and by and by connivent in the embers, or, if I may so say, oscitant and supine. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. ii. 3.

Our oscitant lazy piety gave vacancy for them, and they will now lend none back again. Decay of Chr. Piety.

O'SCITANTLY.* adv. [from oscitant.] Carelessly.

Which those drowsy nodders over the letter of the Scripture have very oscitantly collected. More, Conj. Cabb. Dedic.

OSCITA'TION. n. s. [oscito, Lat.] The act of yawning.

I shall defer considering this subject at large, till I come to my treatise of oscitation, laughter, and ridicule. Tatler, No. 63.

O'SIER. n. s. [osier, Fr. vitex.] A tree of the willow kind, growing by the water, of which the twigs are used for basket-work.

The rank of osiers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right hand, brings you to the place. Shakespeare.

Ere the sun advance his burning eye,
I must fill up this osier cage of ours
With baleful weeds and precious-juiced flowers. Shakspeare.

Care comes crown'd with ozier, segs and weeds. Drayton.

Bring them for food sweet boughs and osiers cut,
Nor all the winter long thy hay-rick shut. Dryden, Virgil.

Like her no nymph can willing osiers bend,
In basket-works, which painted streaks commend. Dryden.

Along the marshes spread,
We made the osier fringed bank our bed. Pope.

O'SMUND. n. s. A plant. It is sometimes used in medicine. It grows upon bogs in divers parts of England. Miller.

O'SNABURGS.* n. s. White and brown coarse linens imported from Osnaburg in Germany. A cloth resembling them is manufactured in Angus in Scotland. See Dr. Jamieson's Scot. Dict.

O'SPRAY.† n. s. [corrupted from ossifraga, Lat. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius derives it from the Goth. os, the mouth of a river, and prey.] A large, blackish hawk, with a long neck and blue legs. Its prey is fish, and it is sometimes seen hovering over the Tweed. Lambe, Notes to the Battle of Floddon. Sir T. Hanmer calls it the sea-eagle; of which it is reported, that when he hovers in the air, all the fish in the water turn up their bellies, and lie still for him to seize which he pleases; a marvel which our old poetry has repeatedly noticed. But Mr. Harris has observed, from Pennant, that the ospray is a different bird from the sea-eagle, though its prey is the same.

I think he'll be to Rome,
As is the ospray to the fish, who takes it
By sovereignty of nature. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Among the fowls shall not be eaten the eagle, the ossifrage, and the ospray. Lev. xi. 13.

O'SSELET. n. s. [French.] A little hard substance arising on the inside of a horse's knee, among the small bones; it grows out of a gummy substance which fastens those bones together. Farrier's Dict.

O'SSEOUS.* adj. [osseus, Lat.] Bony; resembling a bone.

To pursue the osseous and solid part of goodness, which gives stability and rectitude to all the rest. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 4.

A medullary, and consequently osseous, substance. Biblioth. Bibl. i. 157.

O'SSICLE. n. s. [ossiculum, Lat.] A small bone.

There are three very little bones in the ear, upon whose right constitution depends the due tension of the tympanum; and if the action of one little muscle, which serves to draw one of these ossicles, fixt to the tympanum, be lost or abated, the tension of that membrane ceasing, sound is hindered from coming into the ear. Holder on Speech.

OSSI'FICK. adj. [ossa and facio, Lat.] Having the power of making bones, or changing carneous or membranous to bony substance.

If the caries be superficial, and the bone firm, you may by medicaments consume the moisture in the caries, dry the bone, and dispose it, by virtue of its ossifick faculty, to thrust out callus, and make separation of its caries. Wiseman.

OSSIFICA'TION. n. s. [from ossify.] Change of carneous, membranous, or cartilaginous, into bony substance.

Ossifications or indurations of the artery, appear so constantly in the beginnings of aneurisms, that it is not easy to judge whether they are the cause or the effect of them. Sharp.

O'SSIFRAGE.† n. s. [ossifraga, Latin; ossifrague, Fr.] A kind of eagle, whose flesh is forbid under the name of gryphon. The ossifraga or ospray, is thus called, because it breaks the bones of animals in order to come at the marrow. It is said to dig up bodies in church-yards, and eat what it finds in the bones, which has been the occasion that the Latins call it avis bustaria. Calmet. See, however, Osprey.

Among the fowls shall not be eaten the eagle, the ossifrage, and the ospray. Lev. xi. 13.

To O'SSIFY. v. a. [ossa and facio.] To change to bone.

The dilated aorta every where in the neighbourhood of the cyst is generally ossified. Sharp, Surgery.

OSSI'VOROUS. adj. [ossa and voro.] Devouring bones.

The bore of the gullet is not in all creatures alike answerable to the body or stomach: as in the fox, which feeds on bones, and swallows whole, or with little chewing; and next in a dog and other ossivorous quadrupeds, it is very large. Derham, Phys. Theol.

O'SSUARY. n. s. [ossuarium, Lat.] A charnel house; a place where the bones of dead people are kept. Dict.

OST.† } n. s. A kiln, where hops or malt are dried.
OUST. } See OAST.

OSTE'NSIBLE.† adj. [ostendo, Lat.]

1. Such as is proper or intended to be shewn.

I take this opportunity of expressing my surprise, that this ostensible comment of the dumb shew should not regularly appear in the tragedies of Shakspeare. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 361.

2. Colourable; plausible.

He had, as dictator, an ostensible right to the custody and command of this; and under pretext of this ostensible, he by force of arms seized it. Pownall on Antiq. p. 114.

OSTE'NSIVE. adj. [ostentif, Fr. ostendo, Lat.] Showing; betokening.

OSTE'NT. n. s. [ostentum, Lat.]

1. Appearance; air; manner; mien.

Use all the observance of civility,
Like one well studied in a sad ostent,
To please his grandam. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

2. Show; token. These senses are peculiar to Shakspeare.

Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts
To courtship, and such fair ostents of love
As shall conveniently become you there. Shakspeare.

3. A portent; a prodigy; any thing ominous.

To stirre our zeales up, that admir'd, whereof a fact so cleane
Of all ill as our sacrifice, so fearfull an ostent
Should be the issue. Chapman.

Latinus, frighted with this dire ostent,
For counsel to his father Faunus went;
And sought the shades renown'd for prophecy,
Which near Albunia's sulphurous fountain lie. Dryden.

To OSTE'NTATE.* v. a. [ostento, Latin.] To make an ambitious display of; to display boastingly.

It cannot avoid the brand of arrogancy, as well as hypocrisy, to challenge and ostentate that beauty or handsomeness of complexion as ours, which indeed is none of ours by any genuine right, or property. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 96.

Who is so open-hearted and simple, but they either conceal their defects, or ostentate their sufficiencies, short or beyond what either of them really are? Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 169.

So far I must needs ostentate my reading, as to assure you, that I have viewed with my own eyes, and transcribed from all the originals, whatever I have set down. Fleetwood, Chron. Pretiosum, Pref.

OSTENTA'TION. n. s. [ostentation, Fr. ostentatio, Lat.]

1. Outward show; appearance.

If these shows be not outward, which of you
But is four Volscians? —
— March on my fellows;
Make good this ostentation, and you shall Divide in all with us. Shakspeare, Coriol.

You are come
A market-maid to Rome, and have prevented
The ostentation of our love. Shakspeare.

2. Ambitious display; boast; vain show. This is the usual sense.

If all these secret springs of detraction fail, yet a vain ostentation of wit sets a man on attacking an established name, and sacrificing it to the mirth and laughter of those about him. Addison, Spect.

He knew that good and bountiful minds were sometimes inclined to ostentation, and ready to cover it with pretence of inciting others by their example, and therefore checks this vanity: Take heed, says he, that you do not your alms before men, to be seen. Atterbury.

With all her lustre, now, her lover warms;
Then out of ostentation, hides her charms. Young.

The great end of the art is to strike the imagination. The painter is therefore to make no ostentation of the means by which this is done; the spectator is only to feel the result in his bosom. Reynolds.

3. A show; a spectacle. Not in use.

The king would have me present the princess with some delightful ostentation, show, pageant, antick, or firework. Shakspeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

OSTENTA'TIOUS. adj. [ostento, Lat.] Boastful; vain; fond of show; fond to expose to view.

Your modesty is so far from being ostentatious of the good you do, that it blushes even to have it known; and therefore I must leave you to the satisfaction of your own conscience, which, though a silent panegyrick, is yet the best. Dryden.

They let Ulysses into his disposition, and he seems to be ignorant, credulous, and ostentatious. Broome on the Odyssey.

OSTENTA'TIOUSLY. adv. [from ostentatious.] Vainly; boastfully.

OSTENTA'TIOUSNESS. n. s. [from ostentatious.] Vanity; boastfulness.

OSTENTA'TOR.† n. s. [ostentateur, Fr. ostento, Lat.] A boaster; a vain setter to show. Sherwood.

OSTE'NTOUS.* adj. [from ostento, Lat. See OSTENT.] Fond of show; fond to expose to view.

Sometimes we ought to be thankful for an enemy. He gives us occasion to shew the world our parts and piety, which else, perhaps, in our dark graves would sleep and moulder with us quite unknown; or could not otherwise well be seen without the vanity of a light and an ostentous mind. Feltham, Res. ii. 53.

Such rude and imperfect draughts being far better in their esteem, than such as are adorned with more pomp, and ostentous circumstances. Evelyn, Pomon. Pref.

OSTE'OCOLLA. n. s. [ὀστέον and κολλάω; osteocolle, Fr.] Osteocolla is frequent in Germany, and has long been famous for bringing on a callus in fractured bones. Hill, Mat. Med.

Osteocolla is a spar, generally coarse, concreted with earthy or stony matter, precipitated by water, and incrusted upon sticks, stones, and other like bodies. Woodward.

OSTEO'COPE. n. s. [ὀστέον and κόπτω; osteocope, French.] Pains in the bones, or rather in the nerves and membranes that encompass them. Dict.

OSTEO'LOGER.* n. s. [from osteology.] A describer of the bones.

Osteologers have very well observed, that the parts appertaining to the bones, which stand out at a distance from the bodies, are either the adnate or the enate parts. Smith on Old Age, p. 176.

OSTEO'LOGY. n. s. [ὀστέον and λέγω; osteologie, Fr.] A description of the bones.

Richard Farloe, well known for his acuteness in dissection of dead bodies, and his great skill in osteology, has now laid by that practice. Tatler.

O'STIARY.† n. s. [ostium, Lat.]

1. The opening at which a river disembogues itself.

It is received that the Nilus hath seven ostiaries, that is by seven channels disburtheneth itself into the sea. Brown.

2. Formerly an ecclesiastical officer. [ostiarius, Lat. from ostium.]

The office of the ostiaric was to open and shut the church doors, to look to the decent keeping of the church, and the holy ornaments laid up in the vestrie. Weever.

O'STLER. n. s. [hostelier, Fr.] The man who takes care of horses at an inn.

The smith, the ostler, and the boot-catcher, ought to partake. Swift, Direct. to the Groom.

O'STLERY. n. s. [hostelerie, Fr.] The place belonging to the ostler.

O'STMEN.* n. s. pl. [from eastmen, as coming from a country east of Ireland. Ostmanni, low Lat. V. Du Cange.] Danish settlers in Ireland.

Anlave was chief of the Ostmen in that island, and stiled king of Dublin. Ld. Lyttelton.

O'STRACISM. n. s. [ὀςρακισμὸς; ostracisme, Fr.] A manner of passing sentence, in which the note of acquittal or condemnation was marked upon a shell which the voter threw into a vessel. Banishment; publick censure.

Virtue in courtiers' hearts
Suffers an ostracism, and departs;
Profit, ease, fitness, plenty, bid it go,
But whither, only knowing you, I know. Donne.

Publick envy is as an ostracism, that eclipseth men when they grow too great; and therefore it is a bridle to keep them within bounds. Bacon, Ess.

Hyperbolus by suffering did traduce
The ostracism, and sham'd it out of use. Cleaveland.

This man, upon a slight and false accusation of favouring arbitrary power, was banished by ostracism; which in English would signify, that they voted he should be removed from their presence and council for ever. Swift.

O'STRACITES. n. s. Ostracites expresses the common oyster in its fossil state. Hill, Mat. Med.

To O'STRACIZE.* v. a. [from ostracism.] To banish; to expel.

Therefore the democratick stars did rise,
And all that worth from hence did ostracise.
And. Marvel, Lachrym. Mus. (1650.)

O'STRICH. n. s. [autruche, French; struthio, Latin.] Ostrich is ranged among birds. It is very large, its wings very short, and the neck about four or five spans. The feathers of its wings are in great esteem, and are used as an ornament for hats, beds, canopies: they are stained of several colours, and made into pretty tufts. They are hunted by way of course, for they never fly; but use their wings to assist them in running more swiftly. The ostrich swallows bits of iron or brass, in the same manner as other birds will swallow small stones or gravel, to assist in digesting or comminuting their food. It lays its eggs upon the ground, hides them under the sand, and the sun hatches them. Calmet.

I'll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part. Shakspeare.

Gavest thou the goodly wings unto the peacock? or wings and feathers unto the ostrich? Job, xxxix. 13.

The Scots knights errant fight, and fight to eat,
Their ostrich stomachs make their swords their meat. Cleaveland.

Modern ostriches are dwindled to meer larks, in comparison with those of the ancients. Arbuthnot.

OTACOU'STICK.† } n. s. [ὦτα and ἀκέω; otacoustique,
OTACOU'STICON. } French.] An instrument to facilitate hearing.

Not vouchsafing to see or hear any thing but by perspectives and otacousticks. Hammond, Works, iv. 933.

In a hare, which is very quick of hearing, it is supplied with a bony tube; which, as a natural otacoustick, is so directed backward, as to receive the smallest and most distant sound that comes behind her. Grew, Cosmol.

Using some otacousticon, and placing the mouth of it towards the sound. Smith on Old Age, p. 146.

O'THER.† pron. [anthr, Goth. oðer, Sax. othar, Alem. autre, Fr. ετερος, ατερος, Greek.]

1. Not the same; not this; different. In this sense it seems an adjective, yet in the plural, when the substantive is suppressed, it has contrarily to the nature of adjectives a plural termination: as, of last week three days were fair, the others rainy.

Of good actions some are better than other some. Hooker.

Will it not be received
That they have done't,
Who dares receive it other? Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The dismayed matrons and maidens, some in their houses, other some in the churches, with floods of tears and lamentable cries, poured forth their prayers to the Almighty, craving his help in that their hard distress. Knolles.

He that will not give just occasion to think, that all government in the world is the product only of force and violence, and that men live together by no other rules but that of beasts, where the strongest carries; and so lay a foundation for perpetual disorder and mischief, tumult, sedition, and rebellion; things that the followers of that hypothesis so loudly cry out against, must of necessity find out another state of government. Locke.

No leases shall ever be made other than leases for years not exceeding thirty-one, in possession, and not in reversion or remainder. Swift.

2. Not I, or he, but some one else: in this sense it is a substantive, and has a genitive and plural.

Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
Desire his jewels and this other's house. Shakspeare.

Physicians are some of them so conformable to the humour of the patient, as they press not the cure of the disease; and some other are so regular in proceeding according to art, as they respect not the condition of the patient. Bacon.

The confusion arises, when the one will put their sickle into the other's harvest. Leslie.

Never allow yourselves to be idle, whilst others are in want of any thing that your hands can make for them. Law.

The king had all he crav'd, or could compel,
And all was done — let others judge how well. Daniel.

3. Not the one, not this, but the contrary.

There is that controlling worth in goodness, that the will cannot but like and desire it; and on the other side, that odious deformity in vice, that it never offers itself to the affections of mankind, but under the disguise of the other. South.

4. Correlative to each.

In lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves. Phil. ii. 3.

Scotland and thou did each in other live,
Nor would'st thou her, nor could she thee survive. Dryden.

5. Something besides.

The learning of Latin being nothing but the learning of words, join as much other real knowledge with it as you can. Locke on Education.

6. The next.

Thy air,
Thou other gold bound brow, is like the first;
A third is like the former. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The third part.

Bind my hair up: as 'twas yesterday?
No, nor the t'other day. B. Jonson

3. It is sometimes put elliptically for other thing; something different.

I can expect no other from those that judge by single sights and rash measures, than to be thought fond or insolent. Glanville.

O'THERGATES, adv. [other and gate, for way.] In another manner.

If sir Toby had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

O'THERGUISE.† adj. [other and guise. This is often pronounced and sometimes written otherguess.] Of another kind. It is a common expression in several parts of England; and in Cheshire forms part of the following proverb: "I have otherguess fish to fry than snigs [eels] without butter:" i. e. my time is better employed, I have something better to do than what you propose.

O'THERWHERE. adv. [other and where.] In other places.

As Jews they had access to the temple and synagogues, but as Christians they were of necessity forced otherwhere to assemble themselves. Hooker.

His godlike acts, and his temptations fierce,
And former sufferings, otherwhere are found. Milton.

O'THERWHILE.† } adv. [other and while.] At other
O'THERWHILES. } times.

Some adversities shall follow; and otherwhiles, now one discommodity, now another shall appear. Homilies, Serm. on Matrimony.

Sometimes he shaves, — otherwhiles he cauterizes, he scarifies, lets blood. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

Sometimes he was taken forth — to be set in the pillory, otherwhile in the stocks. Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. p. 93.

O'THERWISE. adv. [other and wise.]

1. In a different manner.

They only plead, that whatsoever God revealeth, as necessary for all Christian men to do and believe, the same we ought to embrace, whether we have received it by writing or otherwise, which no man denieth. Hooker.

The whole church hath not tied the parts unto one and the same thing, they being therein left each to their own choice, may either do as others do, or else otherwise, without any breach of duty at all. Hooker.

The evidences for such things are not so infallible, but that there is a possibility, that the things may be otherwise. Wilkins.

In these good things, what all others should practise, we should scarce know to practise otherwise. Sprat.

Thy father was a worthy prince,
And merited, alas! a better fate;
But heaven thought otherwise. Addison, Cato.

2. By other causes.

Sir John Norris failed in the attempts of Lisborn, and returned with the loss, by sickness and otherwise, of eight thousand men. Ralegh.

3. In other respects.

It is said truly, that the best men otherwise, are not always the best in regard of society. Hooker.

Men seldom consider God any otherwise than in relation to themselves, and therefore want some extraordinary benefits to excite their attention and engage their love. Rogers.

O'TTER. n. s. [oꞇeꞃ, Saxon; lutra, Lat.] An amphibious animal that preys upon fish.

The toes of the otter's hinder feet, for the better swimming, are joined together with a membrane, as in the bevir; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canin; and in his tail, which is felin, or a long taper: so that he may not be unfitly called putoreus aquaticus, or the water polecat. He makes himself burrows on the water side, as a bevir; is sometimes tamed and taught, by nimbly surrounding the fishes to drive them into the net. Grew.

At the lower end of the hall is a large otter's skin stuffed with hay. Addison, Spect.

Would you preserve a numerous finny race?
Let your fierce dogs the ravenous otter chase;
The amphibious monster ranges all the shores,
Darts through the waves, and every haunt explores. Gay.

O'VAL. adj. [ovale, Fr. ovum, an egg.] Oblong; resembling the longitudinal section of an egg.

The mouth is low and narrow, but, after having entered pretty far in the grotto, opens itself on both sides in an oval figure of an hundred yards. Addison on Italy.

Mercurius, nearest to the central sun,
Does in an oval orbit, circling run;
But rarely is the object of our sight,
In solar glory sunk. Blackmore.

O'VAL. n. s.

A triangle is that which has three angles, or an oval is that which has the shape of an egg. Watts, Logick.

OVA'RIOUS. adj. [from ovum.] Consisting of eggs.

He to the rocks
Dire clinging gathers his ovarious food. Thomson.

O'VARY. n. s. [ovaire, Fr. ovarium, Lat.] The part of the body in which impregnation is performed.

The ovary or part where the white involveth it, is in the second region of the matrix, which is somewhat long and inverted. Brown, Vulg. Err.

O'VATE.* adj. [ovatus, Lat.] Of an oval figure; marked ovally.

Two rows on each side of the belly consist of larger scales, ovate and imbricate. Russell, Acc. of Indian Serpents, p. 7.

OVA'TION.† n. s. [ovation, Fr. ovatio, Lat.] A lesser triumph among the Romans allowed to those commanders who had won a victory without much bloodshed, or defeated some less formidable enemy. Dict.

His ovation being the prime of his strength; his noise and report of his victories being the only means to persuade the reader that he hath obtained them. Hammond, Works, ii. 167.

Ovation was allow'd
For conquest purchas'd without blood. Hudibras, ii. ii.

Rest not in an ovation but a triumph over thy passions. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 2.

O'UBAT. } n. s. [eruca pilosa.] A sort of caterpillar;
O'UBUST. } an insect. Dict.

OUCH.† n. s. [nusca, nuca, low Lat. fibula; whence perhaps nowch, or nouch, and so ouch. Tyrwhitt.] An ornament of gold or jewels; a carcanet; the collet in which precious stones are set. Dr. Johnson has cited an example from Bacon, in which the word is oes, not ouches. See O.

A Persian mitre on her head
She wore, with crowns and ouches garnished. Spenser, F. Q. i. ii. 13.

Thou shalt make them to be set in ouches of gold. Exod. xxviii. 11.

OUCH of a boar. The blow given by a boar's tusk. Ainsworth.

O'VEN.† n. s. [aufn, Goth. ofn, Icel. oꝼen, Sax. "Aphah (Heb.) signifieth to bake, and to seethe, and to dress meat: oven seemeth to be derived of this word." Leigh, Crit. Sacra. 1650, p. 15.] An arched cavity heated with fire to bake bread.

He loudly bray'd, that like was never heard,
And from his wide devouring oven sent
A flake of fire, that flashing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd. Spenser.

Here's yet in the world hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heat of the oven, and the baking. Shakspeare.

Bats have been found in ovens and other hollow close places, matted one upon another; and therefore it is likely that they sleep in the winter, and eat nothing. Bacon.

O'VER hath a double signification in the names of places, according to the different situations of them. If the place be upon or near a river, it comes from the Saxon ofre, a brink or bank: but if there is in the neighbourhood another of the same name, distinguished by the addition of nether, then over is from the Gothick ufar, above. Gibson's Camden.

O'VER. prep. [ufar, Gothick; ofer, Saxon.]

1. Above; with respect to excellence or dignity.

How happy some, o'er other some can be!
Through Athens I am thought as fair as she. Shakspeare.

Young Pallas shone conspicuous o'er the rest;
Gilded his arms, embroider'd was his vest. Dryden.

High, over all, was your great conduct shown,
You sought our safety, but forgot your own. Dryden.

The commentary which attends this poem, will have one advantage over most commentaries, that it is not made upon conjectures. Pope.

It will afford field enough for a divine to enlarge on, by shewing the advantages which the Christian world has over the Heathen. Swift.

2. Above, with regard to rule or authority. Opposed to under.

The church has over her bishops, able to silence the factious, no less by their preaching than by their authority. South.

Captain, yourself are the fittest to live and reign not over, but next and immediately under the people. Dryden.

3. Above in place. Opposed to below.

He was more than over shoes in love. Shakspeare.

The street should see as she walkt over head. Shakspeare.

Thrice happy is that humble pair,
Beneath the level of all care;
Over whose heads those arrows fly,
Of sad distrust and jealousy. Waller.

4. Across; from side to side: as, he leaped over the brook.

Come o'er the brook Bessey to me,
She dares not come over to thee. Shakspeare.

Certain lakes and pits, such as that of Avennes, poison birds which fly over them. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The geese fly o'er the barn, the bees in arms
Drive headlong from their waxen cells in swarms. Dryden.

5. Through, diffusively.

All the world over, those that received not the commands of Christ and his doctrines of purity and perseverance, were signally destroyed. Hammond.

6. Upon.

Wise governours have as great a watch over fames, as they have of the actions and designs. Bacon.

Angelick quires
Sung heavenly anthems of his victory
Over temptation and the tempter proud. Milton, P. R.

7. Before. This is only used in over night.

On their intended journey to proceed,
And over night what thereto did need. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

8. It is in all senses written by contraction o'er.

O'VER. adv.

1. Above the top.

Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down and shaken together and running over, shall men give. St. Luke, vi. 38.

2. More than a quantity assigned.

Even here likewise the laws of nature and reason be of necessary use; yet somewhat over and besides them is necessary, namely human and positive law. Hooker.

When they had mete it, he that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack. Ex. xvi. 18.

The ordinary soldiers having all their pay, and a month's pay over, were sent into their countries. Hayward.

The eastern people determined their digit by the breadth of barley-corns, six making a digit, and twenty-four a hand's breadth: a small matter over or under. Arbuthnot.

3. From side to side.

The fan of an Indian king, made of the feathers of a peacock's tail, composed into a round form, bound altogether with a circular rim, above a foot over. Grew.

4. From one to another.

This golden cluster the herald delivereth to the Tirsan, who delivereth it over to that son that he had chosen. Bacon.

5. From a country beyond the sea.

It hath a white berry, but is not brought over with the coral. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

They brought new customs and new vices o'er;
Taught us more arts than honest men require. Philips.

6. On the surface.

The first came out red all over, like an hairy garment. Genesis.

7. Past. This is rather the sense of an adjective.

Soliman pausing upon the matter, the heat of his fury being something over, suffered himself to be intreated. Knolles.

Meditate upon the effects of anger; and the best time to do this, is to look back upon anger when the fit is over. Bacon.

What the garden choicest bears
To sit and taste, till this meridian heat
Be over, and the sun more cool decline. Milton.

The act of stealing was soon over, and cannot be undone, and for it the sinner is only answerable to God or his vicegerent. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

He will, as soon as his first surprize is over, begin to wonder how such a favour came to be bestowed on him. Atterbury.

There youths and nymphs in consort gay,
Shall hail the rising, close the parting day;
With me, alas! with me those joys are o'er,
For me the vernal garlands bloom no more. Pope.

8. Throughout; completely.

Well,
Have you read o'er the letters I sent you? Shakspeare.

Let them argue over all the topicks of divine goodness and human weakness, yet how trifling must be their plea! South, Serm.

9. With repetition; another time.

He o'er and o'er divides him,
'Twixt his unkindness and his kindness. Shakspeare.

Sitting or standing still confin'd to roar,
In the same verse, the same rules o'er and o'er. Dryden.

Longing they look, and gaping at the sight,
Devour her o'er and o'er with vast delight. Dryden.

Thou, my Hector, art thyself alone,
My parents, brothers, and my lord in one:
O kill not all my kindred o'er again,
Nor tempt the dangers of the dusty plain;
But in this tower, for our defence, remain. Dryden.

When children forget, or do an action aukwardly, make them do it over and over again, till they are perfect. Locke.

If this miracle of Christ's rising from the dead, be not sufficient to convince a resolved libertine, neither would the rising of one now from the dead be sufficient for that purpose; since it would only be the doing that over again which hath been done already. Atterbury.

The most learned will never find occasion to act over again what is fabled of Alexander the Great, that when he had conquered the eastern world, he wept for want of more worlds to conquer. Watts.

He cramm'd his pockets with the precious store,
And every night review'd it o'er and o'er. Harte.

10. Extraordinary; in a great degree.

The word symbol should not seem to be over difficult. Baker.

11. OVER and above. Besides; beyond what was first supposed or immediately intended.

Moses took the redemption money of them that were over and above. Numb. iii. 49.

He gathered a great mass of treasure, and gained over and above the good will and esteem of all people wherever he came. L'Estrange.

12. OVER against. Opposite; regarding in front.

In Ticinum is a church with windows only from above. It reporteth the voice thirteen times, if you stand by the close end of the wall, over against the door. Bacon.

I visit his picture, and place myself over against it whole hours together. Addison, Spect.

Over against this church stands a large hospital, erected by a shoemaker. Addison on Italy.

13. To give over. To cease from.

These when they praise, the world believes no more,
Than when they promise to give scribling o'er. Pope.

14. To give over. To attempt to help no longer; as, his physicians have given him over; his friends, who advised him, have given him over.

15. In composition it has a great variety of significations; it is arbitrarily prefixed to nouns, adjectives, or other parts of speech in a sense equivalent to more than enough; too much.

Devilish Macbeth,
By many of these trains hath sought to win me
Into his power: and modest wisdom plucks me
From overcredulous haste. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

St. Hierom reporteth, that he saw a satyr; but the truth hereof I will not rashly impugn, or overboldly affirm. Peacham.

These overbusy spirits, whose labour is then only reward, hunt a shadow and chase the wind. Decay of Chr. Piety.

If the ferment of the breast be vigorous, an overfermentation in the part, produceth a phlegmon. Wiseman.

A gangrene doth arise in phlegmons, through the unseasonable application of overcold medicaments. Wiseman.

Poets, like lovers, should be bold and dare,
They spoil their business with an overcare:
And he who servilely creeps after sense,
Is safe, but ne'er will reach an excellence. Dryden.

Wretched man o'erfeeds
His cramm'd desires with more than nature needs. Dryden.

Bending o'er the cup, the tears she shed,
Seem'd by the posture to discharge her head,
O'erfill'd before. Dryden.

As they are likely to overflourish their own case, their flattery is hardest to be discovered: for who would imagine himself guilty of putting tricks upon himself? Collier.

He has afforded us only the twilight of probability; suitable to that state of mediocrity he has placed us in here; wherein to check our overconfidence and presumption, we might, by every day's experience, be made sensible of our shortsightedness. Locke.

This part of grammar has been much neglected, as some others overdiligently cultivated. It is easy for men to write one after another, of cases and genders. Locke.

It is an ill way of establishing this truth, and silencing atheists, to take some men's having that idea of God in their minds, for the only proof of a deity; and out of an overfondness of that darling invention, cashier all other arguments. Locke.

A grown person surfeiting with honey, no sooner hears the name of it, but his fancy immediately carries sickness and qualms to his stomach: had this happend to him by an overdose of honey, when a child, all the same effects would have followed, but the cause would have been mistaken, and the antipathy counted natural. Locke.

Take care you overburn not the turf; it is only to be burnt so as may make it break. Mortimer.

Don't overfatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and thereby nauseate and grow tir'd of a particular subject. Watts.

The memory of the learner should not be too much crowded with a tumultuous heap of ideas, one idea effaces another. An overgreedy grasp does not retain the largest handful. Watts.

O'VER.* adj. Upper. So overleather is upper leather. See OVERLEATHER.

Her over lippe wiped she so clene,
That in her cuppe was no ferthing sene
Of grease, when she dronken had her draught. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

For these my hands from this my face shall rip,
Even with this knife, my nose and over lip. Mu. for Mag. p. 237.

To O'VER.* v. a. To get over; to get through: an elliptical expression in the north: as, I am afraid he'll not over it, i.e. will not recover from his illness. Pegge.

To OVERABO'UND. v. n. [over and abound.] To abound more than enough.

Both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'erabound. Philips.

The learned, never overabounding in transitory coin, should not be discontented. Pope, Lett.

To OVERA'CT. v. a. [over and act.] To act more than enough.

Princes courts may overact their reverence, and make themselves laughed at for their foolishness and extravagant relative worship. Stillingfleet.

Good men often blemish the reputation of their piety, by overacting some things in religion; by an indiscreet zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned. Tillotson.

He overacted his part; his passions, when once let loose, were too impetuous to be managed. Atterbury.

To OVERA'CT.* v. n. To act more than is requisite.

You overact, when you should underdo:
A little call yourself again, and think. B. Jonson.

There while they acted and overacted, among other young scholars, I was a spectator; they thought themselves gallant men, and I thought them fools; they made sport, and I laughed. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnuus.

To OVERA'GITATE.* v. a. [over and agitate.] To discuss or controvert too much.

What is fit to be determined in a business so overagitated, I shall shut up in these propositions. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 3. C. 7.

To OVERA'RCH. v. a. [over and arch.] To cover as with an arch.

Where high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'erarching shades and pendant woods. Pope.

To OVERA'WE. v. a. [over and awe.] To keep in awe by superiour influence.

The king was present in person to overlook the magistrates, and to overawe these subjects with the terror of his sword. Spenser on Ireland.

Her graceful innocence, her every air
Of gesture, or least action, overaw'd
His malice. Milton, P. L.

I could be content to be your chief tormentor, ever paying you mock reverence, and sounding in your ears, the empty title which inspired you with presumption, and overawed my daughter to comply. Addison, Guardian.

A thousand fears
Still overawe when she appears. Granville.

To OVERBA'LANCE. v. a. To weigh down; to preponderate.

Not doubting but by the weight of reason I should counterpoise the overbalancings of any factions. King Charles.

The hundred thousand pounds per annum, wherein we overbalance them in trade, must be paid us in money. Locke.

When these important considerations are set before a rational being, acknowledging the truth of every article, should a bare single possibility be of weight enough to overbalance them. Rogers.

OVERBA'LANCE. n. s. [over and balance.] Something more than equivalent.

Our exported commodities would, by the return, encrease the treasure of this kingdom above what it can ever be by other means, than a mighty overbalance of our exported to our imported commodities. Temple.

The mind should be kept in a perfect indifference, not inclining to either side, any further than the overbalance of probability gives it the turn of assent and belief. Locke.

OVERBA'TTLE.† adj. [Of this word I know not the derivation; batten is to grow fat, and to battle, is at Oxford to feed on trust. Dr. Johnson. — The explanation and etymology may be referred to the verb battel, and to the adjective battel; which see, in the present dictionary.] Too fruitful; exuberant.

In the church of God sometimes it cometh to pass, as in overbattle grounds; the fertile disposition whereof is good, yet because it exceedeth due proportion, it bringeth abundantly through too much rankness, things less profitable, whereby that which principally it should yield, either prevented in place or defrauded of nourishment, faileth. Hooker.

To OVERBE'AR. v. a. [over and bear.] To repress; to subdue; to whelm; to bear down.

What more savage than man, if he see himself able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to overbear the laws? Hooker.

My desire
All continent impediment would overbear,
That did oppose my will. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The ocean over-peering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head
O'erbears your officers. Shakspeare.

Our counsel, it pleas'd your highness
To overbear. Shakspeare, K. John.

Glo'ster, thou shalt well perceive,
That nor in birth or for authority,
The bishop will be overborne by thee. Shakspeare.

The Turkish commanders, with all their forces, assailed the city, thrusting their men into the breaches by heaps, as if they would, with very multitude, have discouraged or overborn the Christians. Knolles.

The point of reputation, when news first came of the battle lost, did overbear the reason of war. Bacon.

Yet fortune, valour, all is overborn,
By numbers; as the long resisting bank
By the impetuous torrent. Denham.

A body may as well be overborn by the violence of a shallow, rapid stream, as swallowed up in the gulph of smooth water. L'Estrange.

Crowding on the last the first impel;
Till overborn with weight the Cyprians fell. Dryden.

The judgement, if swayed by the overbearing of passion, and stored with lubricous opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, will be erroneous. Glanville, Scepsis.

Take care that the memory of the learner be not too much crowded with a tumultuous heap, or overbearing multitude of documents at one time. Watts.

The horrour or loathsomness of an object may overbear the pleasure which results from its greatness, novelty, or beauty. Addison, Spect.

To OVERBE'ND.* v. a. [over and bend.] To stretch too intensely.

Consumptions, upon intemperances and licentiousness; madness, upon misplacing or overbending our natural faculties, proceed from ourselves. Donne, Devot. p. 290.

To OVERBI'D. v. a. [over and bid.] To offer more than equivalent.

You have o'erbid all my past sufferings,
And all my future too. Dryden, Span. Friar.

To OVERBLO'W. v. n. [over and blow.] To be past its violence.

Led with delight, they thus beguile the way,
Until the blustering storm is overblown. Spenser.

All those tempests being overblown, there long after arose a new storm which overran all Spain. Spenser.

This ague fit of fear is overblown,
An easy task it is to win our own. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Seiz'd with secret joy,
When storms are overblown. Dryden, Virg.

To OVERBLO'W. v. a. [over and blow.] To drive away as clouds before the wind.

Some angel that beholds her there,
Instruct us to record what she was here;
And when this cloud of sorrow's overblown,
Through the wide world we'll make her graces known. Waller.

O'VERBOARD. adv. [over and board. See BOARD.] Off the ship; out of the ship.

The great assembly met again; and now he that was the cause of the tempest being thrown overboard, there were hopes a calm should ensue. Howell.

A merchant having a vessel richly fraught at sea, in a storm, there is but one certain way to save it, which is, by throwing its rich lading overboard. South.

The trembling dotard, to the deck he drew,
And hoisted up and overboard he threw;
This done, he seized the helm. Dryden.

He obtained liberty to give them only one song before he leaped overboard, which he did, and then plunged into the sea. L'Estrange.

Though great ships were commonly bad sea-boats, they had a superiour force in a sea engagement: the shock of them being sometimes so violent, that it would throw the crew on the upper deck of lesser ships overboard. Arbuthnot.

To OVERBRO'W.* v. a. [over and brow.] To hang over.

Strange shades o'erbrow the vallies deep. Collins, Ode 4.

On either side

To OVERBU'LK. v. a. [over and bulk.] To oppress by bulk.

The feeding pride,
In rank Achilles, must or now be cropt,
Or shedding, breed a nursery of like evils,
To overbulk us all. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

To OVERBU'RDEN. v. a. [over and burthen.] To load with too great weight.

If she were not cloyed with his company, and that she thought not the earth overburthened with him, she would cool his fiery grief. Sidney.

To OVERBU'Y.† v. a. [over and buy.] To buy too dear.

He overbought it upon the false pretence of an appendant commodity. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. i. C. 5.

He, when want requires, is only wise,
Who slights not foreign aids, nor overbuys;
But on our native strength, in time of need, relies. Dryden.

To OVERCA'NOPY.* v. a. [over and canopy.] To cover as with a canopy.

A bank —
Quite overcanopied with luscious woodbine. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

Where'er the rude and moss-grown beech
O'ercanopies the glade. Gray.

To OVERCA'RRY. v. a. [over and carry.] To hurry too far; to be urged to any thing violent or dangerous.

He was the king's uncle, but yet of no capacity to succeed; by reason whereof his natural affection and duty was less easy to be overcarried by ambition. Hayward.

To OVERCA'ST. v. a. part. overcast [over and cast.]

1. To cloud; to darken; to cover with gloom.

As they past,
The day with clouds was sudden overcast. Spenser.

Hie Robin, overcast the night;
The starry welkin cover thou anon,
With drooping fogs, as black as Acheron. Shakspeare.

Our days of age are sad and overcast, in which we find that of all our vain passions, and affections past, the sorrow only abideth. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

I of fumes and humid vapours made,
No cloud in so serene a mansion find,
To overcast her ever shining mind. Waller.

Those clouds that overcast our morn shall fly,
Dispell'd to farthest corners of the sky. Dryden.

The dawn is overcast, the morning lours,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day. Addison.

2. To cover. This sense is hardly retained but by needle-women, who call that which is incircled with a thread, overcast.

When malice would work that which is evil, and in working avoid the suspicion of an evil intent, the colour wherewith it overcasteth itself is always a fair and plausible pretence of seeking to further that which is good. Hooker.

Their arms abroad with gray moss overcast,
And their green leaves trembling with every blast. Spenser.

3. To rate too high in computation.

The king in his accompt of peace and calms, did much overcast his fortunes, which proved full of broken seas, tides, and tempests. Bacon, Hen. VII.

To OVERCHA'RGE. v. a. [over and charge.]

1. To oppress; to cloy; to surcharge.

On air we feed in every instant, and on meats but at times; and yet the heavy load of abundance, wherewith we oppress and overcharge nature, maketh her to sink unawares in the mid-way. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

A man may as well expect to grow stronger by always eating, as wiser by always reading. Too much overcharges nature, and turns more into disease than nourishment. Collier.

2. To load; to crowd too much.

Our language is overcharged with consonants. Pope.

3. To burthen.

He whispers to his pillow,
The secrets of his overcharged soul. Shakspeare.

4. To rate too high.

Here's Glo'ster, a foe to citizens,
O'ercharging your free purses with large fines. Shakspeare.

5. To fill too full.

Her heart is but o'ercharg'd; she will recover. Shakspeare.

The fumes of passion do as really intoxicate, and confound the judging and discerning faculty, as the fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brain of a man overcharged with it. South.

If they would make distinct abstract ideas of all the varieties in human actions, the number must be infinite, and the memory overcharged to little purpose. Locke.

The action of the Iliad and Æneid in themselves exceeding short, are so beautifully extended by the invention of episodes, that they make up an agreeable story sufficient to employ the memory without overcharging it, Addison, Spect.

6. To load with too great a charge.

They were
As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks. Shakspeare.

Who in deep mines, for hidden knowledge toils,
Like guns o'ercharg'd, breaks, misses, or recoils. Denham.

To OVERCLI'MB.* v. a. [over and climb.] To climb over.

The fatal gin thus overclambe our walls,
Stuft with arm'd men. Ld. Surrey, Tr. of Virg. Æn. 4.

The childhood of the cheerful morn
Is almost grown a youth, and overclimbs
Yonder gilt eastern hills. Brewer, Com. of Lingua.

To OVERCLO'UD.† v. a. [over and cloud.] To cover with clouds.

The labour of wicked men is to turn blessing itself into a curse, to overcloud joy with sorrow at least, if not desolation. Abp. Laud, Serm. p. 84.

The silver empress of the night,
O'erclouded, glimmers in a fainter light. Tickell.

To OVERCLO'Y. v. a. [over and cloy.] To fill beyond satiety.

A scum of Britons and base lackey peasants,
Whom their o'ercloyed country vomits forth
To desperate adventures and destruction. Shakspeare.

To OVERCO'ME. v. a. pret. I overcame; part. pass. overcome; anciently overcomen, as in Spenser. [overcomen, Dutch.]

1. To subdue; to conquer; to vanquish.

They, overcomen, were deprived
Of their proud beauty, and the one moiety
Transform'd to fish, for their bold surquedry. Spenser.

This wretched woman, overcome
Of anguish, rather than of crime, hath been. Spenser.

Of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage. 2 Pet. ii. 19.

Fire by thicker air o'ercome,
And downward forc'd in earth's capacious womb,
Alters its particles; is fire no more. Prior.

2. To surmount.

Miranda is a constant relief to poor people in their misfortunes and accidents; there are sometimes little misfortunes that happen to them, which of themselves they could never be able to overcome. Law.

3. To overflow; to surcharge.

The unfallow'd glebe
Yearly o'ercomes the granaries with stores. Philips.

4. To come over or upon; to invade suddenly. Not in use.

Can such things be
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To OVERCO'ME. v. n. To gain the superiority.

That thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and mightest overcome when thou art judged. Rom. iii. 4.

OVERCO'MER.† n. s. [from the verb.] He who overcomes.

Great rewards and rich gifts were appointed for the overcomers. Powell, Hist. of Wales, (1584,) p. 237.

OVERCO'MINGLY.* adv. [from the part. overcoming.] With superiority; in the manner of a conquerour.

That they should so boldly and overcomingly dictate to him such things as are not fit. More, Conj. Cabb. (1653,) p. 73.

To OVERCO'UNT. v. a. [over and count.] To rate above the true value.

Thou know'st how much
We do o'ercount thee. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To OVERCO'VER. v. a. [over and cover.] To cover compleatly.

Shut me nightly in a charnel-house,
O'ercover'd quite with dead men's rattling bones,
With reeky shanks and yellow chapless skulls. Shakspeare.

To OVERCRO'W.† v. a. [over and crow.] To crow as in triumph. Spenser has also written overcraw, for the sake of the rhyme.

So spake this bold breure with great disdain:
Little him answer'd the oak again,
But yielded, with shame and grief adawed,
That of a weed he was overcrawed. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

A base varlet, that being but of late grown out of the dunghil, beginneth now to overcrow so high mountains, and make himself the great protector of all outlaws. Spenser.

Shall I, the embassadress of gods and men, —
Be overcrow'd, and breathe without revenge.
Brewer, Com. of Lingua.

To OVERDA'TE.* v. a. [over and date.] To reckon or date beyond the proper period.

Had he redeemed his overdated minority from a pupilage under bishops, he would much less have mistrusted his parliament. Milton, Eiconoclast. ch. 11.

OVERDI'GHT.* part. adj. [over and dight.] Covered over.

Day discover'd heaven's face
To sinfull men with darkness overdight. Spenser, F. Q.

To OVERDO'. v. a. [over and do.] To do more than enough.

Any thing so overdone is from the purpose of playing; whose end is to hold the mirrour up to nature. Shakspeare.

When the meat is overdone, lay the fault upon your lady who hurried you. Swift.

To OVERDO'.* v. n. To do too much.

Nature — much oftener overdoes than underdoes: — you shall find twenty eggs with two yolks for one that has none. Grew.

To OVERDRE'SS. v. a. [over and dress.] To adorn lavishly.

In all, let nature never be forgot;
But treat the goddess like a modest fair,
Nor overdress, nor leave her wholly bare. Pope.

To OVERDRI'NK.* v. n. [over and drink: this was a Saxon compound, oƿeꞃ-ꝺꞃincan.] To drink too much; to become drunk.

To OVERDRI'VE. v. a. [over and drive.] To drive too hard, or beyond strength.

The flocks and herds with young if men should overdrive one day, all will die. Gen. xxxiii. 13.

To OVERDRY'.* v. a. [over and dry.] To dry too much.

Meats condite, powdered, and overdried.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 70.

OVERE'AGER.* adj. [over and eager.] Too vehement in desire.

I have seen sad examples of extravagance in the more modest and private, but overeager pursuits of these recreations, [games of chance.] Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. i.

OVERE'AGERLY.* adv. [from overeager.] With too much haste or vehemence.

Pursuing them overeagerly into York.
Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 5.

To OVEREY'E.† v. a. [over and eye.]

1. To superintend.

My love hath lasted from mine infancy,
And still increased, as I grew myself:
When did Perseda pastime in the streets,
But her Erastus overey'd her sports?
When didst thou, with thy sampler, in the sun,
Sit sewing with thy feres, but I was by,
Marking thy lily hand's dexterity.
Trag. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

2. To observe; to remark.

I am doubtful of your modesties,
Lest overeyeing of his odd behaviour,
You break into some merry passion. Shakspeare.

To OVERE'MPTY. v. a. [over and empty.] To make too empty.

The women would be loth to come behind the fashion in new-fangledness of the manner, if not in costliness of the matter, which might overempty their husbands' purses. Carew.

O'VERFAL. n. s. [over and fall.] Cataract.

Tostatus addeth, that those which dwell near those falls of water, are deaf from their infancy, like those that dwell near the overfals of Nilus. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

To OVERFLO'AT.† v. a. [over and float.] To cover as with water.

The town is fill'd with slaughter, and o'erfloats,
With a red deluge, their increasing moats. Dryden.

To OVERFLO'W. v. n. [over and flow.]

1. To be fuller than the brim can hold.

While our strong walls secure us from the foe,
E'er yet with blood our ditches overflow. Dryden.

Had I the same consciousness that I saw Noah's flood, as that I saw the overflowing of the Thames last winter, I could not doubt, that I who saw the Thames overflowed, and viewed the flood at the general deluge, was the same self. Locke.

2. To exuberate; to abound.

A very ungrateful return to the author of all we enjoy, but such as an overflowing plenty too much inclines men to make. Rogers.

To OVERFLO'W.† v. a. The participle overflown is, among the examples, used, we see, by such excellent writers as Swift and Bentley; yet flown is not the participle of flow, but of fly.

1. To fill beyond the brim.

Suppose thyself in as great a sadness as ever did load thy spirit, wouldst thou not bear it cheerfully if thou wert sure that some excellent fortune would relieve and recompense thee so as to overflow all thy hopes. Bp. Taylor.

New milk that all the winter never fails,
And all the summer overflows the pails. Dryden.

Sweaty and overlabour'd, home. Dryden.

To OVERLA'DE. v. a. [over and lade.] To overburthen.

Thus to throng and overlade a soul
With love, and then to have a room for fear,
That shall all that controul,
What is it but to rear
Our passions and our hopes on high,
That thence they may descry
The noblest way how to despair and die? Suckling.

OVERLA'RGE. adj. [over and large.] Larger than enough.

Our attainments cannot be overlarge, and yet we manage a narrow fortune very unthriftily. Collier.

To OVERLA'SH.* v. n. [over and lash.] To exaggerate. Dr. Johnson calls overlashingly a mean word, not aware that Barrow had used overlash.

We are not accountable for every hyperbolical flash or flourish occurring in the Fathers; it being well known that they, in their encomiastick speeches, as orators are wont, following the heat and gaiety of fancy, do sometimes overlash.
Barrow, on the Pope's Supr. iv. § 2.

OVERLA'SHINGLY. adv. [over and lash.] With exaggeration. A mean word, now obsolete.

Although I be far from their opinion who write too overlashingly, that the Arabian tongue is in use in two third parts of the inhabited world, yet I find that it extendeth where the religion of Mahomet is professed. Brerewood.

To OVERLA'Y. v. a. [over and lay.]

1. To oppress by too much weight or power.

Some commons are barren, the nature is such,
And some overlayeth the commons too much. Tusser.

Not only that mercy which keepeth from being overlaid and opprest, but mercy which saveth from being touched with grievous miseries. Hooker.

When any country is overlaid by the multitude which live upon it, there is a natural necessity compelling it to disburthen itself and lay the load upon others. Ralegh.

We praise the things we hear with much more willingness than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past; thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and overlaid by the other. B. Jonson.

Good laws had been antiquated by the course of time, or overlaid by the corruption of manners. King Charles.

Our sins have overlaid our hopes. King Charles.

The strong Emetrius came in Arcite's aid,
And Palamon with odds was overlaid. Dryden.

2. To smother with too much or too close covering.

The new born babes by nurses overlaid. Dryden.

3. To smother; to crush; to overwhelm.

They quickly stifled and overlaid those infant principles of piety and virtue, sown by God in their hearts; so that they brought a voluntary darkness and stupidity upon their minds.
South, Serm.

The gods have made your noble mind for me,
And her insipid soul for Ptolemy:
A heavy lump of earth without desire,
A heap of ashes that o'erlays your fire. Dryden.

The stars, no longer overlaid with weight,
Exert their heads from underneath the mass,
And upward shoot. Dryden.

Season the passions of a child with devotion, which seldom dies; though it may seem extinguished for a while, it breaks out as soon as misfortunes have brought the man to himself. The fire may be covered and overlaid, but cannot be entirely quenched and smothered. Addison, Spec.

In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust to the fund of their own reason, advanced but not overlaid by commerce with books. Swift.

4. To cloud; to overcast.

Phœbus' golden face it did attaint,
As when a cloud his beams doth overlay. Spenser.

To fortify thus far, and overlay,
With this portentous bridge, the dark abyss. Milton, P. L.

OVERLA'YING.* n. s. [from overlay.] A superficial covering.

The overlaying of their chapiters [was] of silver, and all the pillars of the court were filleted with silver. Exod. xxxviii. 17.

To OVERLE'AP. v. a. [over and leap.] To pass by a jump.

A step
On which I must fall down or else o'erleap,
For in my way it lies. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

In vain did Nature's wise command
Divide the waters from the land;
If daring ships and men profane,
The eternal fences overleap,
And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.

OVERLE'ATHER. n. s. [over and leather.] The part of the shoe that covers the foot.

I have sometimes more feet than shoes; or such shoes as my toes look through the overleather. Shakspeare.

To OVERLE'AVEN.* v. a. [over and leaven.]

That your attempts may overlive the hazard
And fearful meeting of their opposite. Shakspeare.

They overlived that envy, and had their pardons afterwards. Hayward.

To OVERLI'VE. v. n. To live too long.

Why do I overlive?
Why am I mock'd with death, and lengthen'd out
To deathless pain? Milton, P. L.

OVERLI'VER. n. s. [from overlive.] Survivor; that which lives longest.

A peace was concluded, to continue for both the kings' lives, and the overliver of them. Bacon, Hen. VII.

To OVERLO'AD. v. a. [over and load.] To burthen with too much.

The memory of youth is charged and overloaded, and all they learn is meer jargon. Felton.

Men overloaded with a large estate
May spill their treasure in a nice conceit;
The rich may be polite, but oh! 'tis sad,
To say you're curious, when we swear you're mad. Young.

OVERLO'NG. adj. [over and long.] Too long.

I have transgressed the laws of oratory, in making my periods and parentheses overlong. Boyle.

To OVERLO'OK. v. a. [over and look.]

1. To view from a higher place.

The pile o'erlook'd the town, and drew the sight,
Surpris'd at once with reverence and delight. Dryden.

In the greater out parishes many of the poor parishioners through neglect do perish, for want of some heedful eye to overlook them. Graunt.

4. To review.

The time and care that are required,
To overlook and file, and polish well,
Fright poets from that necessary toil. Roscommon.

5. To pass by indulgently.

This part of good-nature which consists in the pardoning and overlooking of faults, is to be exercised only in doing ourselves justice in the ordinary commerce of life. Addison.

In vain do we hope that God will overlook such high contradiction of sinners, and pardon offences committed against the plain convictions of conscience. Rogers.

6. To neglect; to slight.

Of the two relations, Christ overlooked the meaner, and denominated them solely from the more honourable. South.

To overlook the entertainment before him, and languish for that which lies out of the way, is sickly and servile. Collier.

The suffrage of our poet laureat should not be overlooked. Addison.

Religious fear, when produced by just apprehensions of a divine power, naturally overlooks all human greatness that stands in competition with it, and extinguishes every other terror. Addison.

The happiest of mankind, overlooking those solid blessings which they already have, set their hearts upon somewhat they want. Atterbury.

They overlook truth in the judgements they pass on adversity and prosperity. The temptations that attend the former they can easily see, and dread at a distance; but they have no apprehensions of the dangerous consequences of the latter. Atterbury.

OVERLO'OKER.† n. s. [over and look.] The original word signifies an overlooker, or one who stands higher than his fellows and overlooks them. Watts.

The Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, overlookers, and watchmen over the flock of Christ. Bp. of Chichester, Two Serm. (1576,) E. 6.

God then is present, and his angel seeth thee: O wicked and dampned man, if thou contemne such overlookers! Woolton, Chr. Manual, (1576,) I. i. b.

O'VERLOOP. n. s. The same with orlop.

In extremity we carry our ordnance better than we were wont, because our nether overloops are raised commonly from the water; to wit, between the lower part of the port and the sea. Ralegh.

To OVERLO'VE.* v. a. [over and love.] To prize or value too much.

I cannot so overlove this issue of my own brain, as to hold it worthy of your majesty's judicious eyes. Bp. Hall, Dedic.

O'VERLY.* adj. [ouerlice, Sax. negligently. This is also a Scottish adjective; and Dr. Jamieson, noticing it, observes that overly must have been formerly used in English, as Somner mentions it in rendering the Saxon word. I will satisfy him, that it was a very common word; though Dr. Johnson has wholly overpassed it.] Careless; negligent; inattentive; slight.

The courteous citizen bade me to his feast,
With hollow words, and overly request. Bp. Hall, Sat. iii. 3.

Not fearing the frowns of that overly host, she thrusts herself into Simon's house to find Jesus. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4

But his o'ermasted gally check'd his haste. Dryden.

To OVERMA'STER. v. a. [over and master.] To subdue; to govern.

For your desire to know what is between us,
O'ermaster it as you may. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

So sleeps a pilot, whose poor bark is prest
With many a merciless o'ermast'ring wave. Crashaw.

They are overmastered with a score of drunkards, the only soldiery left about them, or else comply with all the rapines and violences. Milton on Education.

To OVERMA'TCH. v. a. [over and match.] To be too powerful; to conquer; to oppress by superior force.

I have seen a swan
With bootless labour swim against the tide,
And spend her strength with overmatching waves. Shakspeare.

Sir William Lucy, with me,
Set from our o'ermatch'd forces forth for aid. Shakspeare.

Assist, lest I, who erst
Thought none my equal, now be overmatch'd. Milton, P. R.

How great soever our curiosity be, our excess is greater, and does not only overmatch, but supplant it. Decay of Chr. Piety.

He from that length of time dire omens drew,
Of English overmatch'd, and Dutch too strong,
Who never fought three days but to pursue. Dryden.

It moves our wonder, that a foreign guest
Should overmatch the most, and match the best. Dryden.

OVERMA'TCH. n. s. [over and match.] One of superior powers; one not to be overcome.

Spain is no overmatch for England, by that which leadeth all men; that is, experience and reason. Bacon.

Eve was Eve;
This far his overmatch, who self-deceiv'd
And rash, before-hand had no better weigh'd
The strength he was to cope with or his own. Milton, P. R.

In a little time there will scarce be a woman of quality in Great Britain, who would not be an overmatch for an Irish priest. Addison, Freeholder.

To OVERME'ASURE.* v. a. [over and measure.] To measure or estimate too largely.

An argument, fit for great and mighty princes to have in their hand, to the end, that neither by overmeasuring their forces they lose themselves in vain enterprises; nor, on the other side, by undervaluing them, descend to fearful and pusillanimous counsels. Bacon, Ess. 29.

OVERME'ASURE. n. s. [over and measure.] Something given over the due measure.

To OVERMI'X. v. a. [over and mix.] To mix with too much.

An overmuch use of salt, besides that it occasions thirst and overmuch drinking, has other ill effects. Locke.

OVERMU'CH. adv. In too great a degree.

The fault which we find in them is, that they overmuch abridge the church of her power in these things. Whereupon they re-charge us, as if in these things we gave the church a liberty which hath no limits or bounds. Hooker.

Perhaps
I also erred, in overmuch admiring
What seem'd in thee so perfect, that I thought
No evil durst attempt thee. Milton, P. L.
Deject not then so overmuch thyself,
Who hast of sorrow thy full load besides. Milton, S. A.

OVERMU'CH. n. s. More than enough.

By attributing overmuch to things
Less excellent, as thou thyself perceiv'st. Milton, P. L.

With respect to the blessings the world enjoys, even good men may ascribe overmuch to themselves. Grew.

OVERMU'CHNESS. n. s. [from overmuch.] Exuberance; superabundance. A word not used, nor elegant.

There are words that do as much raise a style, as others can depress it; superlation and overmuchness amplifies. It may be above faith, but never above a mean. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

To OVERMU'LTITUDE.* v. a. [over and multitude.] To exceed in number.

Nature — would be surcharg'd with her own weight,
And strangled in her waste fertility;
The earth cumber'd, and the wing'd air dark'd with plumes,
The herds would overmultitude their lords. Milton, Comus.

OVERNI'GHT. n. s. [over and night. This seems to be used by Shakspeare as a noun, but by Addison more properly, as I have before placed it, as a noun with a preposition.] Night before bed-time.

If I had given you this at overnight,
She might have been o'erta'en. Shakspeare.

Will confesses, that for half his life his head ached every morning with reading men overnight. Addison.

OVEROFFI'CIOUS. adj. [over and officious.] Too busy; too importunate.

This is an overofficious truth, and is always at a man's heels; so that if he looks about him, he must take notice of it. Collier on Reason.

To OVERPA'INT.* v. a. [over and paint.] To colour or describe too strongly.

Him whom no verse overpaints. A. Hill.

To OVERPA'SS. v. a. [over and pass.]

1. To cross.

I stood on a wide river's bank,
Which I must needs o'erpass,
When on a sudden Torrismond appear'd,
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er. Dryden.
What have my Scyllas and my Syrtes done,
When these they o'erpass, and those they shun? Dryden.

2. To overlook; to pass with disregard.

The complaint about psalms and hymns might as well be overpast without any answer, as it is without any cause brought forth. Hooker.

I read the satire thou entitlest first,
And laid aside the rest, and overpast,
And swore, I thought the writer was accurst,
That his first satire had not been his last. Harington.
Remember that Pellean conquerour,
A youth, how all the beauties of the east
He slightly view'd, and slightly overpass'd. Milton, P. R.

3. To omit in a reckoning.

Arithmetical progression demonstrates how fast mankind would increase, overpassing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Israelites who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years, from seventy to sixty thousand able men. Ralegh.

4. To omit; not to receive; not to comprise.

If the grace of him which saveth overpass some, so that the prayer of the church for them be not received, this we may leave to the hidden judgements of righteousness. Hooker.

OVERPA'ST. part. adj. [from overpass.] Gone; past.

What canst thou swear by now? —
— By time to come, —
That thou hast wronged in the time overpast. Shakspeare.

To OVERPA'Y. v. a. [over and pay.] To reward beyond the price.

Take this purse of gold,
And let me buy your friendly help thus far,
Which I will overpay, and pay again,
When I have found it. Shakspeare.

He ceases to oblige who can upbraid. Dryden.
Wilt thou with pleasure hear thy lover's strains,
And with one heavenly smile o'erpay his pains. Prior.

To OVERPE'ER. v. a. [over and peer.] To overlook; to hover above. It is now out of use.

The ocean overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste,
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'erbears your officers. Shakspeare, Hamlet.
Your Argosies with portly sail,
Do overpeer the petty traffickers,
That curt'sy to them, do them reverence. Shakspeare.
Mountainous error wou'd be too highly heapt,
For truth to o'erpeer. Shakspeare, Coriol.
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whose top branch o'erpeer'd Jove's spreading tree,
And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful wind. Shakspeare.

They are invincible by reason of the overpeering mountains that back the one, and slender fortifications of the other to landward. Sandys, Journey.

To OVERPE'RCH. v. a. [over and perch.] To fly over.

With love's light wings did I o'erperch these walls,
For stony limits cannot hold love out. Shakspeare.

To OVERPI'CTURE.* v. a. [over and picture.] To exceed the representation or picture.

She did lie
In her pavilion, (cloth of gold, of tissue,)
O'erpicturing that Venus, where we see
The fancy outwork nature. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

O'VERPLUS. n. s. [over and plus.] Surplus; what remains more than sufficient.

Some other sinners there are, from which that overplus of strength in persuasion doth arise. Hooker, Ecc. Pol. Pref.

A great deal too much of it was made, and the overplus remained still in the mortar. L'Estrange.

It would look like a fable to report, that this gentleman gives away all which is the overplus of a great fortune. Addison.

To OVERPLY'. v. a. [over and ply.] To employ too laboriously.

What supports me, dost thou ask?
The conscience, friend, to have lost them overply'd,
In liberty's defence. Milton, Sonnet.

To OVERPO'ISE. v. a. [over and poise.] To outweigh.

Whether cripples who have lost their thighs will float; their lungs being able to waft up their bodies, which are in others overpoised by the hinder legs; we have not made experiment. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The scale
O'erpois'd by darkness, lets the night prevail;
And day, that lengthen'd in the summer's height,
Shortens till winter, and is lost in night. Creech.

OVERPO'ISE. n. s. [from the verb.] Preponderant weight.

Horace, in his first and second book of odes, was still rising, but came not to his meridian till the third. After which his judgement was an overpoise to his imagination. He grew too cautious to be bold enough, for he descended in his fourth by slow degrees. Dryden.

Some overpoise of sway, by turns they share,
In peace the people, and the prince in war. Dryden.

To OVERPO'LISH.* v. a. [over and polish.] To finish too nicely.

A judicious ear would be offended with a style overpolished. Blackwall, Sac. Class. i. 85.

OVERPO'NDEROUS.* adj. [over and ponderous.] Too weighty; too depressing.

Neither can I think that, so reputed and so valued as you are, you would, to the forfeit of your own discerning ability, impose upon me an unfit and overponderous argument. Milton on Education.

To OVERPO'ST.* v. a. [over and post.] To get quickly over.

You may thank the unquiet time for your quiet o'erposting that action. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

To OVERPO'WER. v. a. [over and power.] To be predominant over; to oppress by superiority.

Now in danger try'd, now known in arms
Not to be overpower'd. Milton, P. L.

As much light overpowers the eye, so they who have weak eyes, when the ground is covered with snow, are wont to complain of too much light. Boyle.

Reason allows none to be confident, but him only who governs the world, who knows all things, and can do all things; and can neither be surprised nor overpowered. South.

After the death of Crassus, Pompey found himself outwitted by Cæsar; he broke with him, overpowered him in the senate, and caused many unjust decrees to pass against him. Dryden, Ded. to Æn.

The historians make these mountains the standards of the rise of the water; which they could never have been, had they not been standing, when it did so rise and overpower the earth. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

Inspiration is, when such an overpowering impression of any proposition is made upon the mind by God himself, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it. Watts, Logick.

To OVERPRE'SS.† v. a. [over and press.]

1. To bear upon with irresistible force; to overwhelm; to crush.

Having an excellent horse under him, when he was overpressed by some, he avoided them. Sidney.

Michael's arm main promontories flung,
And overpress'd whole legions weak with sin. Roscommon.

When a prince enters on a war, he ought maturely to consider whether his coffers be full, his people rich by a long peace and free trade, not overpressed with many burthensome taxes. Swift.

2. To overcome by entreaty; to press or persuade too much.

To OVERPRI'ZE. v. a. [over and prize.] To value at too high price.

Parents overprize their children, while they behold them through the vapours of affection. Wotton.

OVERPRO'MPTNESS.* n. s. [over and promptness.] Hastiness; precipitation.

[There is] an overpromptness in many young men, who desire to be counted men of valour and resolution, upon every slight occasion to raise a quarrel, and admit of no other means of composing and ending it but by sword and single combat. Hales, Serm. on Duels, Rem. p. 71.

OVERQUI'ETNESS.* n. s. [over and quietness.] A state of too much quiet.

To strenuous minds there is an inquietude in overquietness, and no laboriousness in labour. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 33.

OVERRA'NK. adj. [over and rank.] Too rank.

It produces overrank binds. Mortimer, Husb.

To OVERRA'TE. v. a. [over and rate.] To rate at too much.

While vain shows and scenes you overrate,
'Tis to be fear'd, ——
That as a fire the former house o'erthrew,
Machines and tempests will destroy the new. Dryden.

To avoid the temptations of poverty, it concerns us not to overrate the conveniencies of our station, and in estimating the proportion fit for us, to fix it rather low than high; for our desires will be proportioned to our wants, real or imaginary, and our temptations to our desires. Rogers.

To OVERREA'CH. v. a. [over and reach.]

1. To rise above.

The mountains of Olympus, Atho, and Atlas, overreach and surmount all winds and clouds. Ralegh.

Sixteen hundred years after the earth was made, it was overflowed in a deluge of water in such excess, that the floods overreached the tops of the highest mountains. Burnet.

2. To deceive; to go beyond; to circumvent. A sagacious man is said to have a long reach.

What more cruel than man, if he see himself able by fraud to overreach, or by power to overbear the laws whereunto he should be subject. Hooker.

I have laid my brain in the sun and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent so gross overreaching. Shakspeare.

Shame to be overcome, or overreach'd,
Would utmost vigour raise, and rais'd unite. Milton, P. L.

A man who had been matchless held
In cunning, overreach'd where least he thought,
To salve his credit, and for very spite
Still will be tempting him who foils him still. Milton, P. R.

There is no pleasanter encounter than a trial of skill betwixt sharpers to overreach one another. L'Estrange.

Forbidding oppression, defrauding and overreaching one another, perfidiousness and treachery. Tillotson.

We may no more sue for them than we can tell a lie, or swear an unlawful oath, or overreach in their cause, or be guilty of any other transgression. Kettleworth.

Such a principle is ambition; or a desire of fame, by which many vicious men are overreached, and engaged contrary to their natural inclinations in a glorious and laudable course of action. Addison, Spect.

John had got an impression that Lewis was so deadly cunning a man, that he was afraid to venture himself alone with him; at last he took heart of grace; let him come up, quoth he, it is but sticking to my point, and he can never overreach me. Hist. of John Bull.

To OVERRE'ACH. v. n. A horse is said to overreach, when he brings his hinder feet too far forwards, and strikes his toes against his fore shoes. Farrier's Dict.

Hanging the head with Ceres' plenteous load? Shakspeare.

To OVERRO'AST. v. a. [over and roast.] To roast too much.

'Twas burnt and dried away,
And better 'twere, that both of us did fast,
Since of ourselves, ourselves are cholerick,
Than feed it with such overroasted flesh. Shakspeare.

To OVERRU'LE. v. a. [over and rule.]

1. To influence with predominant power; to be superior in authority.

Which humour perceiving to overrule me, I strave against it. Sidney.

That which the church by her ecclesiastical authority shall probably think and desire to be true or good, must in congruity of reason overrule all other inferior arguments whatsoever. Hooker.

Except our own private, and but probable resolutions, be by the law of publick determinations overruled, we take away all possibility of sociable life in the world. Hooker.

What if they be such as will be overruled with some one, whom they dare not displease. Whitgift.

His passion and animosity overruled his conscience. Clarendon.

A wise man shall overrule his stars, and have a greater influence upon his own content, than all the constellations and planets of the firmament. Taylor.

He is acted by a passion which absolutely overrules him; and so can no more recover himself, than a bowl rolling down an hill stop itself in the midst of its career. South.

'Tis temerity for men to venture their lives upon unequal encounters; unless where they are obliged by an overruling impulse of conscience and duty. L'Estrange.

A man may, by the influence of an overruling planet, be inclined to lust, and yet by the force of reason overcome that bad influence. Swift.

2. To govern with high authority; to superintend.

Wherefore does he not now come forth and openly overrule, as in other matters he is accustomed? Hayward.

3. To supersede: as in law to overrule a plea, is to reject it as incompetent.

Thirty acres make a farthing land, nine farthings a Cornish acre, and four Cornish acres a knight's fee. But this rule is overruled to a greater or lesser quantity, according to the fruitfulness or barrenness of the soil. Carew.

OVERRU'LER.* n. s. [over and ruler.] Director; governour.

Then did proof, the overruler of opinions, make manifest that all these are but serving sciences. Sidney, Def. of Poesy.

1. To harass by incursions; to ravage; to rove over in a hostile manner.

Those barbarous nations that overran the world, possessed those dominions, whereof they are now so called. Spenser.

Till the tears she shed,
Like envious floods o'erran her lovely face,
She was the fairest creature in the world. Shakspeare.

They err, who count it glorious to subdue
By conquest far and wide, to overrun
Large countries, and in field great battles win,
Great cities by assault. Milton, P. R.

The nine
Their fainting foes to shameful flight compell'd,
And with resistless force o'errun the field. Dryden.

Gustavus Adolphus could not enter this part of the empire after having overrun most of the rest. Addison.

A commonwealth may be overrun by a powerful neighbour, which may produce bad consequences upon your trade and liberty. Swift, Miscell.

2. To outrun; to pass behind.

Pyrocles being come to sixteen, overrun his age in growth, strength, and all things following it, that not Musidorus could perform any action on horse or foot more strongly, or deliver that strength more nimbly, or become the delivery more gracefully, or employ all more virtuously. Sidney.

We may outrun
By violent swiftness, that which we run at,
And lose by overrunning. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Ahimaz ran by the way of the plain, and overran Cushi. 2 Sam. xviii. 23.

Galilæus noteth, that if an open trough, wherein water is, be driven faster than the water can follow, the water gathereth upon an heap towards the hinder end, where the motion began; which he supposeth, holding the motion of the earth to be the cause of the ebbing and flowing of the ocean; because the earth overrunneth the water. Bacon.

3. To overspread; to cover all over.

With an overrunning flood he will make an utter end of the place. Nah. i. 8.

This disposition of the parts of the earth, shews us the footsteps of some kind of ruin which happened in such a way, that at the same time a general flood of waters would necessarily overrun the whole earth. Burnet.

His tears defac'd the surface of the well,
And now the lovely face but half appears,
O'errun with wrinkles and deform'd with tears. Addison.

4. To mischief by great numbers; to pester.

To flatter foolish men into a hope of life where there is none, is much the same with betraying people into an opinion, that they are in a virtuous and happy state, when they are overrun with passion and drowned in their lusts. L'Estrange.

Were it not for the incessant labours of this industrious animal, Egypt would be overrun with crocodiles. Addison.

Such provision made, that a country should not want springs as were convenient for it; nor be overrun with them, and afford little or nothing else; but a supply every where suitable to the necessities of each climate and region of the globe. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

5. To injure by treading down.

6. Among printers, to be obliged to change the disposition of the lines and words in correcting, by reason of the insertions.

No lucky opportunity,
Will go to council to advise
Which way to encounter, or surprise. Hudibras.

OVERSE'EN. part. [from oversee.] Mistaken; deceived.

A common received errour is never utterly overthrown, till such times as we go from signs unto causes, and shew some manifest root or fountain thereof common unto all, whereby it may clearly appear how it hath come to pass that so many have been overseen. Hooker.

Such overseers, as the overseers of this building, would be so overseen as to make that which is narrower, contain that which is larger. Holyday.

They rather observed what he had done, and suffered for the king and for his country, without farther enquiring what he had omitted to do, or been overseen in doing. Clarendon.

OVERSE'ER. n. s. [from oversee.]

1. One who overlooks; a superintendent.

There are in the world certain voluntary overseers of all books, whose censure would fall sharp on us. Hooker.

Jehiel and Azariah were overseers unto Cononiah. 2 Chron. xxxi. 13.

To entertain a guest, with what a care,
Would he his household ornaments prepare;
Harrass his servants, and as o'erseer stand,
To keep them working with a threatening wand.
Clean all my plate, he cries. Dryden.

2. An officer who has the care of the parochial provision for the poor.

The churchwardens and overseers of the poor might find it possible to discharge their duties, whereas now in the greater outparishes many of the poorer parishioners, through neglect, do perish for want of some heedful eye to overlook them. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

To OVERSE'T. v. a. [over and set.]

1. To turn bottom upwards; to throw off the basis; to subvert.

The tempests met,
The sailers master'd, and the ship o'erset. Dryden.

It is forced through the hiatus's at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into horrible perturbation, even when there is not the least breath of wind; oversetting ships in the harbours, and sinking them. Woodward.

Would the confederacy exert itself, as much to annoy the enemy, as they do for their defence, we might bear them down with the weight of our armies, and overset the whole power of France. Addison on the War.

2. To throw out of regularity.

His action against Catiline ruined the consul, when it saved the city; for it so swelled his soul, that ever afterwards it was apt to be overset with vanity. Dryden.

To OVERSE'T. v. n. To fall off the basis; to turn upside down.

Part of the weight will be under the axle-tree, which will [illegible] counterpoise what is above it, that it will very much [illegible] oversetting. Mortimer.

To overvalue human power is likewise an argument of human weakness. Holyday.

To Overvei'l.† v. a. [over and veil.] To cover.

The day begins to break, and night is fled;
Whose pitchy mantle overveil'd the earth. Shakspeare.

Thou mak'st the night to overveil the day;
Then savage beasts creep from the silent wood:
Then lions' whelps lie roaring for their prey,
And at thy powerful hand demand their food.
Sir H. Wotton, Ps. 104. Rem. p. 386.

To OVERVO'TE. v. a. [over and vote.] To conquer by plurality of votes.

The lords and commons might be content to be overvoted by the major part of both houses, when they had used each their own freedom. King Charles.

To OVERWA'TCH. v. n. [over and watch.] To subdue with long want of rest.

Morpheus is dispatch'd;
Which done, the lazy monarch overwatch'd,
Down from his propping elbow drops his head,
Dissolv'd in sleep, and shrinks within his bed. Dryden.

OVERWA'TCHED. adj. Tired with too much watching.

While the dog hunted in the river, he had withdrawn himself to pacify with sleep his overwatched eyes. Sidney, Arc. b. 2.

OVERWEA'K. adj. [over and weak.] Too weak; too feeble.

Paternal persuasions, after mankind began to forget the original giver of life, became in all overweak to resist the first inclination of evil; or after, when it became habitual, to constrain it. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

To OVERWEA'RY. v. a. [over and weary.] To subdue with fatigue.

Might not Palinurus fall asleep and drop into the sea, having been overwearied with watching. Dryden.

To OVERWEA'THER. v. a. [over and weather.] To batter by violence of weather.

How like a younker or a prodigal,
The skarfed bark puts from her native bay,
Hugg'd and embraced by the strumpet wind!
How like the prodigal doth she return,
With overweather'd ribs and ragged sails,
Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the strumpet wind. Shakspeare.

To OVERWE'EN. v. n. [over and ween.] To think too highly; to think with arrogance.

To reach beyond the truth of any thing in thought; especially in the opinion of a man's self. Hanmer.

Run back and bite, because he was with-held. Shakspeare.

My master hath sent for me, to whose feeling sorrows I might be some allay, or I o'erween to think so. Shakspeare.

Lash hence these overweening rags of France,
These famish'd beggars, weary of their lives. Shakspeare.

My eyes too quick, my heart o'erweens too much,
Unless my hand and strength could equal them. Shakspeare.

Take heed of overweening, and compare
Thy peacock's feet with thy gay peacock's train;
Study the best and highest things that are,
But of thyself an humble thought retain. Davies.

They that overween,
And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
No anger find in thee. Milton, Sonnet.

Satan might have learnt
Less overweening, since he fail'd in Job,
Whose constant perseverance overcame
Whate'er his cruel malice could invent. Milton, P. R.

No man is so bold, rash, and overweening of his own works, as an ill painter and a bad poet. Dryden.

Enthusiasm, though founded neither on reason nor revelation, but rising from the conceits of a warmed or overweening brain, works more powerfully on the persuasions and actions of men, than either or both together. Locke.

Men of fair minds and not given up to the overweening of self-flattery, are frequently guilty of it: and, in many cases, one with amazement hears the arguings, and is astonished at the obstinacy of a worthy man who yields not to the evidence of reason. Locke.

Now enters overweening pride,
And scandal ever gaping wide. Swift.

OVERWEE'NINGLY.† adv. [from overween.] With too much arrogance; with too high an opinion.

To OVERWE'IGH. v. a. [over and weigh.] To preponderate.

Sharp and subtile discourses of wit, procure many times very great applause, but being laid in the balance with that which the habit of sound experience delivereth, they are overweighed. Hooker.

My unsoil'd name, the austereness of my life,
Will so your accusation overweigh,
That you shall stifle in your own report. Shakspeare.

OVERWEI'GHT. n. s. [over and weight.] Preponderance.

Sinking into water is but an overweight of the body, in respect of the water. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To OVERWHE'LM.† v. a. [over and whelm.]

1. To crush underneath something violent and weighty.

What age is this, where honest men,
Plac'd at the helm,
A sea of some foul mouth or pen,
Shall overwhelm? B. Jonson.

Back do I toss these treasons to thy head,
With the hell hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart. Shakspeare.

How trifling an apprehension is the shame of being laughed at by fools, when compared with that everlasting shame and astonishment which shall overwhelm the sinner, when he shall appear before the tribunal of Christ. Rogers.

Blind they rejoice, though now even now they fall;
Death hastes amain; one hour o'erwhelms them all. Pope.

2. To overlook gloomily.

Let the brow o'erwhelm it,
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base. Shakspeare.

An apothecary late I noted,
In tatter'd weeds with overwhelming brows,
Culling of simples. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

3. To put over.

And overwrestled his strong enimy. Spenser, F. Q. i. vii. 24.

OVERWROU'GHT. part. [over and wrought.]

1. Laboured too much.

Apelles said of Protogenes, that he knew not when to give over. A work may be overwrought, as well as underwrought: too much labour often takes away the spirit, by adding to the polishing; so that there remains nothing but a dull correctness, a piece without any considerable faults, but with few beauties. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. Worked all over.

Of Gothick structure was the northern side,
O'erwrought with ornaments of barbarous pride. Pope.

3. It has in Shakspeare a sense which I know not well how to reconcile to the original meaning of the word, and therefore conclude it misprinted for overraught; that is, overreached or cheated.

By some device or other,
The villain is o'erwrought of all my money:
They say this town is full of cozenage. Shakspeare.

OVERYEA'RED. adj. [over and year.] Too old.

Among them dwelt
A maid, whose fruit was ripe, not overyeared. Fairfax.

OVERZE'ALED.* adj. [over and zeal.] Ruled by too much zeal. Not in use.

Thus was this good king's judgement overzealed. Fuller, Holy War, p. 214.

OVERZEA'LOUS. adj. [over and zealous.] Too zealous.

It is not of such weighty necessity to determine one way or the other, as some overzealous for or against the immateriality of the soul, have been forward to make the world believe. Locke.

OUGHT.† n. s. [aphɩt, that is, a whit, Saxon. This word is therefore more properly written aught. See AUGHT. The difference has arisen, as Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed, merely from the different usages of writing a or o for one: Sax. ophɩt, oht. See also NOUGHT.] Any thing; not nothing.

For ought that I can understand, there is no part but the bare English pale, in which the Irish have not the greatest footing. Spenser on Ireland.

He asked him if he saw ought. St. Mark, viii. 23.

To do ought good never will be our task;
But ever to do ill our sole delight. Milton, P. L.

Universal Lord! be bounteous still
To give us only good; and if the night
Have gather'd ought of evil, or conceal'd,
Disperse it, as now light dispels the dark. Milton, P. L.

OUGHT.† verb imperfect; in the second person oughtest. [This word the etymologists make the preterite of owe, but it has often a present signification.]

1. [Preterite of owe.] Owed; was bound to pay; have been indebted.

Apprehending the occasion, I will add a continuance to that happy motion, and besides give you some tribute of the love and duty I long have ought you. Spelman.

This blood which men by treason sought,
That followed, sir, which to myself I ought. Dryden.

2. [Preterite of owe, in the sense of own.] Had a right to.

Where is the booty,—
And where is eke your friend which halfe it ought? Spenser, F. Q. vi. vii. 16.

The knight, the which that castle ought. Spenser, F. Q. vi. iii. 2.

3. To be obliged by duty.

Know how thou oughtest to behave. 1 Tim. iii. 15.

Speak boldly as I ought to speak. Ephes. vi. 20.

She acts just as she ought,
But never, never reach'd one gen'rous thought. Pope.

Thy brave Melantius in his gallantry?
Our greatest ladies love to see their scorn
Outdone by thine, in what themselves have worn. Waller.
Heavenly love shall outdo hellish hate,
Giving to death, and dying to redeem,
So dearly to redeem, what hellish hate
So easily destroy'd. Milton, P. L.
Here let those, who boast in mortal things,
Learn how their greatest monuments of fame,
And strength, and art, are easily outdone
By spirits reprobate. Milton, P. L.
An impostor outdoes the original. L'Estrange.
Now all the gods reward and bless my son;
Thou hast this day thy father's youth outdone. Dryden.
I must confess the encounter of that day
Warm'd me indeed, but quite another way;
Not with the fire of youth, but generous rage,
To see the glories of my youthful age
So far outdone. Dryden.
The boy's mother despised for not having read a system of logick, outdoes him in it. Locke.
I grieve to be outdone by Gay,
In my own humourous biting way. Swift.

To heap more vengeance on that wretched wight. Spenser.

They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss,
Outrageous as a sea, dark, wasteful, wild. Milton, P. L.

When he knew his rival freed and gone,
He swells with wrath; he makes outragious moan:
He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground;
The hollow tow'r with clamours rings around. Dryden.

2. Excessive; passing reason or decency.

The outragious decking of temples and churches with gold and silver. Homilies, Serm. against Idolatry, P. i.

My characters of Antony and Cleopatra, though they are favourable to them, have nothing of outragious panegyrick. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

3. Enormous; atrocious.

Think not, although in writing I prefer'd
The manner of thy vile outragious crimes,
That therefore I have forg'd. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

OUTRA'GIOUSLY.† adv. [from outragious.]

1. Violently; tumultuously; furiously.

To OUTRA'ZE.* v. a. [out and raze.] To root out entirely.

Yet shall the axe of justice hew him down,
And level with the root his lofty crown:
No eye shall his outraz'd impression view,
Nor mortal know where such a glory grew.
Sandys, Paraphr. of Job.

OUTRE'.* adj. [French.] Extravagant; overstrained. A most affected and needless introduction of modern times.

Although this panegyric be somewhat outré, I am willing to subscribe to it. Dr. Geddes, Lett. to the Bp. of London, (1787.)

To OUTRE'ASON.* v. a. [out and reason.] To excel in reasoning; to reason beyond.

They step forth men of another spirit, great linguists, powerful disputants, able to cope with the Jewish Sanhedrim, to baffle their profoundest Rabbies, and to outreason the very Athenians. South, Serm. vii. 35.

To OUTRE'ACH. v. a. [out and reach.] To go beyond.

This usage is derived from so many descents of ages, that the cause and author outreach remembrance. Carew.

Our forefathers could never dream so high a crime as parricide, whereas this outreaches that fact, and exceeds the regular distinctions of murder. Brown.

To OUTRE'CKON.* v. a. [out and reckon.] To exceed in assumed computation.

The Egyptian priests pretended an exact chronology for some myriads of years; and the Chaldeans and Assyrians far outreckon them. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

To OUTREI'GN.* v. a. [out and reign.] To reign through the whole of.

In wretched prison long he did remaine,
Till they outreigned had their utmost date.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. x. 45.

To OUTRI'DE.† v. a. [out and ride.] To pass by riding.

It boots not to persuade your majesty to betake yourself to your chariot, to outride the shower.
Bp. Hall, Way of Peace, Ded. to the King.

If you will send me to the farthest sea
To fetch you pearls, the sun shall not outride
My restlesse course; nor any jewels be
Treasur'd so deep in the profoundest main,
But I will dig them thence, and come again.
Beaumont, Psyche, (1651,) p. 11.

This advantage age from youth hath won,
As not to be outridden, though out-run. Dryden.

To OUTRI'DE.* v. n. To travel about on horseback, or in a vehicle.

By distance of place being rendered incapable of paying our respects to him, I am become a suitor to you to constitute an outriding lion, or (if you please) a jackall or two, to receive and remit our homage in a more particular manner than is hitherto provided. Addison, Guard. No. 118.

OUTRI'DER.† n. s. [from out and rider.]

1. A summoner whose office is to cite men before the sheriff. Dict.

2. One who travels about on horseback or in a vehicle.

There is needful to be an outrider, or riding surveyor, whose business should be to visit the ports and fleets.
Maydman, Naval Speculat. (1691,) p. 119.

OUTRI'GGER.* n. s. A naval word, signifying both a strong beam of timber fixed on the side of a ship to secure the mast in the act of careening, and a small boom occasionally used on the tops.

OUTRI'GHT. adv. [out and right.]

He neigh'd outright, and all the steed exprest. Addison.

To OUTRI'VAL.* v. a. [out and rival.] To surpass in excellence.

There have been finer things spoken of Augustus than of any other man, all the wits of his age having tried to outrival one another upon that subject. Addison, Guard. No. 138.

OU'TROAD. n. s. [out and road.] Excursion.

He set horsemen and footmen, to the end that, issuing out, they might make outroads upon the ways of Judea. 1 Mac. xv. 41.

To OUTRO'AR. v. a. [out and roar.] To exceed in roaring.

O that I were
Upon the hill of Basan, to outroar
The horned herd! Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To OUTRO'OT. v. a. [out and root.] To extirpate; to eradicate.

Pernicious discord seems
Outrooted from our more than iron age;
Since none, not ev'n our kings, approach their temples
With any mark of war's destructive rage,
But sacrifice unarm'd. Rowe, Amb. Stepmother.

To OUTRU'N. v. a. [out and run.]

1. To leave behind in running.

By giving the house of Lancaster leave to breathe,
It will outrun you, father, in the end. Shakspeare.
The expedition of my violent love
Outruns the pauser reason. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
We may outrun,
By violent swiftness, that which we run at. Shakspeare.

When things are come to the execution, there is no secrecy comparably to celerity, like the motion of a bullet in the air, which flieth so swift as it outruns the eye. Bacon.

This advantage age from youth hath won,
As not to be out-ridden, though outrun. Dryden.

2. To exceed.

We outrun the present income, as not doubting to reimburse ourselves out of the profits of some future project. Addison.

It would soon improve to such a height as to outsell our neighbours, and thereby advance the proportion of our exported commodities. Temple.

2. To gain a higher price.

Her pretty action did outsel her gift,
And yet enrich'd it too. Shakspeare, Cymb.

OU'TSET.* n. s. [out and set.] Opening; beginning.

These masters, at least in the outset of their strains, were careful to preserve air. Mason on Ch. Musick, p. 140.

To OUTSHI'NE. v. a. [out and shine.]

1. To emit lustre.

Witness my son, now in the shade of death;
Whose bright outshining beams thy cloudy wrath
Hath in eternal darkness folded up. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

2. To excel in lustre.

By Shakspeare's, Jonson's, Fletcher's lines,
Our stage's lustre Rome's outshines. Denham.

Beauty and greatness are so eminently joined in your royal highness, that it were not easy for any but a poet to determine which of them outshines the other. Dryden.

Homer does not only outshine all other poets in the variety, but also in the novelty of his characters. Addison.

We should see such as would outshine the rebellious part of their fellow-subjects, as much in their gallantry as in their cause. Addison, Freeholder.

Such accounts are a tribute due to the memory of those only, who have outshone the rest of the world by their rank as well as their virtues. Atterbury.

Happy you!
Whose charms as far all other nymphs outshine,
As other's gardens are excell'd by thine. Pope.

To OUTSHO'OT. v. a. [out and shoot.]

1. To exceed in shooting.

The forward youth
Will learn to outshoot you in your proper bow. Dryden.

2. To shoot beyond.

Men are resolved never to outshoot their forefathers' mark; but write one after another, and so the dance goes round in a circle. Norris.

To OUTSHU'T.* v. a. [out and shut.] To exclude.

He outshuts my prayer. Donne, Div. Poems, ch. 3.

OUTSI'DE. n. s. [out and side.]

1. Superficies; surface; external part.

What pity that so exquisite an outside of a head should not have one grain of sense in it. L'Estrange.

The leathern outside, boisterous as it was,
Gave way and bent. Dryden.

2. Extreme part; part remote from the middle.

Hold an arrow in a flame for the space of ten pulses, and when it cometh forth, those parts which were on the outsides of the flame are blacked and turned into a coal. Bacon.

3. Superficial appearance.

You shall find his vanities forespent
Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus,
Covering discretion with a coat of folly. Shakspeare.

The ornaments of conversation, and the outside of fashionable manners, will come in their due time. Locke.

Created beings see nothing but our outside, and can therefore only frame a judgment of us from our exterior actions. Addison, Spect.

4. The utmost. A barbarous use.

Two hundred load upon an acre, they reckon the outside of what is to be laid. Mortimer, Husb.

5. Person; external man.

Fortune forbid, my outside have not charm'd her. Shakspeare.

Your outside promiseth as much as can be expected from a gentleman. Bacon.

What admir'st thou, what transports thee so?
An outside? fair, no doubt, and worthy well
Thy cherishing and thy love. Milton, P. L.

6. Outer side; part not inclosed.

I threw open the door of my chamber, and found the family standing on the outside. Spectator.

To OUTSI'T. v. a. [out and sit.] To sit beyond the time of any thing.

To OUTSTRE'TCH. v. a. [out and stretch.] To extend; to spread out.

Make him stand upon the mole-hill,
That caught at mountains with out-stretched arms. Shakspeare.
Out-stretched he lay on the cold ground and oft
A mountain, at whose verdant feet
A spacious plain, out-stretch'd in circuit wide,
Lay pleasant. Milton, P. R.
Does Theseus burn,
And must not she with out-stretch'd arms receive him?
And with an equal ardour meet his vows? Smith.

To OUTSTRI'DE.* v. a. [out and stride.] To surpass in striding.

Outstriding the colossus of the sun.
B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

To OU'TSTRIP.† v. a. [This word Skinner derives from out and spritzen, to spout, German. I know not whether it might not have been originally out-trip, the s being afterward inserted. Dr. Johnson.—It can hardly have been out-trip; and I should think the derivation of Skinner, plausible as it is, might give place to out and the Sax. ſpꞃýtan, to shoot out, to sprout, and thence to spring forward, or beyond, might easily be adopted.] To outgo; to leave behind in a race.

If thou wilt out-strip death, go cross the seas,
And live with Richmond from the reach of hell. Shakspeare.
Do not smile at me, that I boast her off;
For thou shalt find she will out-strip all praise,
And make it halt behind her. Shakspeare, Tempest.
Thou both their graces in thyself hast more
Out-stript than they did, all that went before. B. Jonson.
My soul, more earnestly releas'd,
Will out-strip hers; as bullets flown before
A later bullet may o'ertake, the powder being more. Donne.
A fox may be outwitted, and a hare outstript. L'Estrange.

He got the start of them in point of obedience, and thereby out-stript them at length in point of knowledge. South.

With such array Harpalice bestrode
Her Thracian courser, and out-strip'd the rapid flood. Dryden.

To OUTSWEA'R. v. a. [out and swear.] To overpower by swearing.

We shall have old swearing,
But we'll outface them, and outswear them too. Shakspeare.

To OUTSWE'ETEN. v. a. [out and sweeten.] To excel in sweetness.

The leaf of eglantine, which not to slander,
Out-sweeten'd not thy breath. Shakspeare, Cymb.

To OUTSWE'LL.* v. a. [out and swell.] To overflow.

A sad text in a sadder time; in which the rivers of Babylon swelled not so high with inundation of water in the letter, as the waters in the metaphor, outswelling and breaking down their banks, have overflown both our church and state.
Hewyt, Serm. (1658,) p. 185.

OUTTAKE.* prep. [out and take.] Except. Obsolete.

Of every witte somwhat he can,
Outtake that hym lacketh rule
His own estate to guyde. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.
All was golde men myght se,
Outtake the fethers and the tre. Chaucer, Rom. R.

This gentleman will outtalk us all. Shakspeare.

To OUTTO'NGUE. v. a. [out and tongue.] To bear down by noise.

Let him do his spite,
My services which I have done the signiory
Shall outtongue his complaints. Shakspeare, Othello.

To OUTTO'P.* v. a. [out and top.] To overtop; to make of less importance; to obscure.

The treasurer began then to outtop me; and appeared to my thoughts likely enough, by his daring and boldness, in time to do as much to your grace. Ld. Keeper Williams, Lett. 1624, Cab. p. 94.

To OUTVA'LUE. v. a. [out and value.] To transcend in price.

He gives us in this life an earnest of expected joys, that outvalues and transcends all those momentary pleasures it requires us to forsake. Boyle.

To OUTVE'NOM. v. a. [out and venom.] To exceed in poison.

'Tis slander;
Whose edge is sharper than the sword, whose tongue
Outvenoms all the worms of Nile. Shakspeare, Cymb.

To OUTVI'E.† v. a. [out and vie. Dr. Johnson.—Bp. Hurd has made the following sound observation upon Addison's use of this word. "To vye is to contend with; to out-vye, to out-do any one, in vyeing with him. But the word seems to be of an ill composition, and should not, I think, be used thus absolutely. If employed at all, it should be in some such way as this: 'in the affectation of pomp and pageantry he outvied others, i. e. in this respect, he strove or contended beyond them.' I know not if Addison had any authority for the use of it: he had, perhaps, done better to use the common word outstrip." Note on Addison's Remarks on Italy.] To exceed; to surpass; to outstrip.

For folded flocks on fruitful plains,
Fair Britain all the world outvies. Dryden.

One of these petty sovereigns will be still endeavouring to equal the pomp of greater princes, as well as to outvie those of his own rank. Addison.

To OUTVI'LLAIN. v. a. [out and villain.] To exceed in villany.

He hath outvillain'd villainy so far, that the rarity redeems him. Shakspeare, All's Well.

To OUTVOI'CE. v. a. [out and voice.] To out-roar; to exceed in clamour.

The English beach
Pales in the flood with men, with wives and boys,
Whose shouts and claps out-voice the deep-mouth'd sea. Shakspeare.

To OUTVO'TE. v. a. [out and vote.] To conquer by plurality of suffrages.

They were out-voted by other sects of philosophers, neither for fame, nor number less than themselves. South.

To OUTWA'LK.† v. a. [out and walk.]

1. To leave one in walking.
2. To exceed the walking of a spectre. See the 5th sense of To WALK.

Have I ——— outwatch'd,
Yea, and outwalked any ghost alive
In solitary circle, worn my boots,
Knees, arms, and elbows out! B. Jonson, Fortunate Isles.

OUTWA'LL. n. s. [out and wall.]

1. Outward part of a building.
2. Superficial appearance.

For confirmation that I am much more
Than my outwall, open this purse and take
What it contains. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

OU'TWARD. adj. [urpeapd, Saxon.]

1. Materially external.
2. External; opposed to inward: visible.

If these shews be not outward, which of you
But is four Volscians? Shakspeare, Coriol.
Oh what may man within him hide,
Though angel on the outward side! Shakspeare.

His calls and invitations of us to that repentance, not only outward, in the ministry of the word, but also inward, by the motions of the spirit. Wh. Duty of Man.

He took a low'ring leave: but who can tell
What outward hate might inward love conceal? Dryden.

3. Extrinsick; adventitious.

Princes have their titles for their glories,
An outward honour, for an inward toil. Shakspeare.
Part in peace, and having mourn'd your sin
For outward Eden lost, find paradise within. Dryden.

4. Foreign, not intestine.

It was intended to raise an outward war to join with some sedition within doors. Hayward.

5. Tending to the out-parts.

The fire will force its outward way,
Or, in the prison pent, consume the prey. Dryden.

6. [In theology.] Carnal; corporeal; not spiritual.

When the soul being inwardly moved to lift itself up by prayer, the outward man is surprized in some other posture; God will rather look to the inward motions of the mind, than to the outward form of the body. Duppa.

We may also pray against temporal punishments, that is, any outward affliction, but this with submission to God's will, according to the example of Christ. Wh. Duty of Man.

OU'TWARD. n. s. External form.

I do not think
So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but him. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

OU'TWARD. adv.

1. To foreign parts: as, a ship outward bound.
2. To the outer parts.

OU'TWARDLY. adv. [from outward.]

1. Externally: opposed to inwardly.

That which inwardly each man should be, the church outwardly ought to testify. Hooker.

Griev'd with disgrace, remaining in their fears:
However seeming outwardly content,
Yet th' inward touch their wounded honour bears. Daniel.

2. In appearance not sincerely.

Many wicked men are often touched with some inward reverence for that goodness which they cannot be persuaded to practise; nay, which they outwardly seem to despise. Sprat.

OU'TWARDS. adv. Towards the outparts.

Do not black bodies conceive heat more easily from light than those of other colours do, by reason that the light falling on them is not reflected outwards, but enters the bodies, and is often reflected and refracted within them until it be stifled and lost? Newton, Opt.

To OUTWA'TCH.* v. a. [out and watch.] To surpass in watchfulness.

Have I —— outwatch'd,
Yea, and outwalked any ghost alive! B. Jonson, Fort. Isles.
Or let my lamp at midnight hour
Be seen in some high lonely tower,
Where I may oft out-watch the Bear
With thrice-great Hermes. Milton, Il Pens.

To OUTWE'AR.† v. a. [out and wear.]

1. To wear out.

He —
To live, and to encrease his race, himself outwears. Donne, Progr. of the Soul.

2. To pass tediously.

By the stream, if I the night out-wear,
Thus spent already how shall nature bear
The dews descending and nocturnal air. Pope.

3. To last longer than something else.

To OUTWE'ED. v. a. [out and weed.] To extirpate as a weed.

Wrath is a fire, and jealousy a weed:
The sparks soon quench, the springing weed out-weed. Spenser.

To OUTWE'EP.* v. a. [out and weep.] To exceed in weeping.

Meanwhile he sadly suffers in their grief,
Outweeps a hermit, and outprays a saint. Dryden, Ann. Mir.
His cries outwept his widest wound. Davenant, Gondibert, B. ii. C. 2.

To OUTWE'IGH. v. a. [out and weigh.]

1. To exceed in gravity.

These instruments require so much strength for the supporting of the weight to be moved, as may be equal unto it, besides that other super-added power whereby it is outweighed and moved. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

2. To preponderate; to excel in value or influence.

If any think brave death out-weighs bad life,
Let him express his disposition. Shakspeare, Coriol.
All your care is for your prince I see,
Your truth to him out-weighs your love to me. Dryden

Whenever he finds the hardship of his slavery out-weigh the value of his life, it is in his power, by resisting the will of his master, to draw on himself the death he desires. Locke.

The marriage of the clergy is attended with the poverty of some of them, which is balanced and out-weighed by many single advantages. Atterbury.

To OUTWE'LL. v. a. [out and well.] To pour out. Not in use.

As when old father Nilus gins to swell,
With timely pride about the Ægyptian vale,
His fattie waves do fertile sline outwell,
And overflow each plain and lowly dale. Spenser.

OUTWE'NT.* See To OUTGO.

To OUTWI'N.* v. a. [out and win.] To get out of.

It is a darksome delve far under ground,
With thorns and barren brakes environd round,
That none the same may easily outwin;
Yet many waies to enter may be found,
But none to issue forth when one is in. Spenser, F. Q. iv. i. 20.

To OUTWI'ND.* v. a. [out and wind.] To extricate; to unloose.

When shalt thou once outwind
Thyself from this sad yoke? More, Life of the Soul, ii. 71.

His courser springs
O'er hills and lawns, and even a wish outwings.
Garth, Ov. Met. 14.

My song the midnight raven has outwing'd.
Young, Night Th. 9.

To OUTWI'T. v. a. [out and wit.] To cheat; to overcome by stratagem.

The truer hearted any man is, the more liable he is to be imposed on; and then the world calls it out-witting a man, when he is only out-knaved. L'Estrange.

Justice forbids defrauding, or going beyond our brother in any manner, when we can over-reach and out-wit him in the same. Kettlewell.

After the death of Crassus, Pompey found himself out-witted by Cæsar and broke with him. Dryden.

Nothing is more equal in justice, and indeed more natural in the direct consequence of effects and causes, than for men wickedly wise to out-wit themselves; and for such as wrestle with Providence, to trip up their own heels. South.

OU'TWORK.† n. s. [out and work.] Parts of a fortification next the enemy; any work raised outwardly to fortify or defend.

Take care of our out-work, the navy royal, which are the walls of the kingdom; and every great ship is an impregnable fort; and our many safe and commodious ports as the redoubts to secure them. Bacon.

When the soul is beaten from its first station, and the mounds and outworks of virtue are once broken down, it becomes quite another thing from what it was before. South, Serm. ii. 369.

Death hath taken in the out-works,
And now assails the fort; I feel, I feel him,
Gnawing my heart-strings. Denham.

OUTWO'RN. part. [from out-wear.] Consumed or destroyed by use.

Better at home lie bed-rid, idle,
Inglorious, unemploy'd, with age out-worn. Milton, S. A.

To OUTWO'RTH. v. a. [out and worth.] To excel in value.

A beggar's book
Outworths a noble's blood. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

To OUTWRE'ST. v. a. [out and wrest.] To extort by violence.

The growing anguish
Rankled so sore and fester'd inwardly,
Till that the truth thereof I did outwrest. Spenser.

OUTWROU'GHT. part. [out and wrought.] Outdone; exceeded in efficacy.

In your violent acts,
The fall of torrents and the noise of tempests,
The boyling of Carybdis, the sea's wildness,
The eating force of flames, and wings of winds,
Be all outwrought by your transcendent furies. B. Jonson.

To OUTZA'NY.* v. a. [out and zany.] To exceed in buffoonery.

O, run not proud of this: yet, take thy due:
Thou dost outzany Cokely. B. Jonson, Epigr. 130.

To OWE. v. a. [eg aa, I owe, or I ought, Icelandick.]

1. To be obliged to pay; to be indebted.

I owe you much, and, like a witless youth,
That which I owe is lost. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Let none seek needless causes to approve
The faith they owe. Milton, P. L.

A son owes help and honour to his father; and is a subject less indebted to the king. Holyday.

All your parts of pious duty done,
You owe your Ormond nothing but a son. Dryden.

Thou hast deserv'd more love than I can show,
But 'tis thy fate to give, and mine to owe. Dryden

If, upon the general balance of trade, English merchants owe to foreigners one hundred thousand pounds, if commodities do not, our money must go out to pay it. Locke.

2. To be obliged to ascribe; to be obliged for.

By me upheld, that he may know how frail
His fall'n condition is, and to me owe
All his deliverance, and to none but me. Milton, P. L.

3. To have from any thing as the consequence of a cause.

O deem thy fall not ow'd to man's decree,
Jove hated Greece, and punish'd Greece in thee. Pope.

4. To possess; to be the right owner of. For owe, which is, in this sense, obsolete, we now use own.

Thou dost here usurp
The name thou ow'st not, and hast put thyself
Upon this island as a spy. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Fate, shew thy force; ourselves we do not owe;
What is decreed must be; and be this so. Shakspeare.

Nor poppy nor mandragora,
Not all the drowsy sirups of the world,
Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou owed'st yesterday. Shakspeare, Othello.

If any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry,
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe
The winged wand'rer. Crashaw.

To OWE.* v. n. To be bound or obliged.

The ryche man oweth of dutye to doo his mercy upon the poore creature. Bp. Fisher, Ps. p. 14.

OWING. part. [from owe. A practice has long prevailed among writers, to use owing, the active participle of owe, in a passive sense, for owed or due. Of this impropriety some writers were aware, and having no quick sense of the force of English words, have used due, in the sense of consequence or imputation, which by other writers is only used of debt. We say that money is due to me; they say likewise, the effect is due to the cause.]

1. Consequential.

This was owing to an indifference to the pleasures of life, and an aversion to the pomps of it. Atterbury.

2. Due as a debt. Here due is undoubtedly the proper word.

You are both too bold;
I'll teach you all what's owing to your queen. Dryden.

The debt, owing from one country to the other, cannot be paid without real effects sent thither to that value. Locke.

3. Imputable to, as an agent.

If we estimate things, what in them is owing to nature, and what to labour, we shall find in most of them $\frac{99}{100}$ to be on the account of labour. Locke.

The custom of particular impeachments was not limited any more than that of struggles between nobles and commons, the ruin of Greece was owing to the former, as that of Rome was to the latter. Swift.

OWL.† } n. s. [ule, Saxon; hulote, French and O'WLET. } Scottish. Dr. Johnson. — Icel. yla or ylgia, an owl, from yla, to cry out. See To HOWL.] A bird that flies about in the night and catches mice.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing
For a charm. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Return to her!
No! rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl. Shakspeare.

'Twas when the dog-star's unpropitious ray
Smote ev'ry brain, and wither'd every bay;
Sick was the sun, the owl forsook his bower. Pope, Dunciad.

Then lady Cynthia, mistress of the shade,
Goes, with the fashionable owls, to bed. Young.

OWL-LIGHT.* n. s. [owl and light.] Glimmering light; twilight.

Church-history making an important part of our theologic studies, the antiquarian, who delights to solace himself in the benighted days of monkish owl-light, sometimes passes for the divine. Warburton, Charge to the Clergy, (1761.)

Owl-like.* adj. Resembling an owl in look or quality.

Now like an owl-like watchman he must walk. Donne, Sat. 2.
At this deep Sidrophel look'd wise;
And, staring round with owl-like eyes,
He put his face into a posture
Of sapience, and began to bluster. Hudibras, ii. iii.

O'wler. n. s. One who carries contraband goods: in the legal sense, one that carries out wool illicitely. Perhaps from the necessity of carrying on an illicit trade by night: but rather, I believe, a corruption of wooller, by a colloquial neglect of the w, such as is often observed in woman, and by which goodwife is changed to goody. Wooler, ooller, owler.

By running goods, these graceless owlers gain. Swift.
We understand, by some owlers, old people die in France. Tatler.

O'wling.* n. s. An offence against publick trade.

Offences against publick trade are felonious, or not felonious. Of the first sort is owling, so called from its being usually carried on in the night, which is the offence of transporting wool or sheep out of the kingdom. Blackstone.

O'wlish.* adj. [from owl.] Resembling an owl.

Every one, while it lasted, was very gay and busy in the morning, and very owlish and very tipsy at night. Gray to Dr. Wharton, (1749.)

OWN.† n. s. [aȝen, Saxon; eygen, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — M. Goth. aigin, aihn; Icel. aigan, from eigia, possidere. Serenius. Thus own from the obsolete owe, to possess.]

1. This is a word of no other use than as it is added to the possessive pronouns, my, thy, his, our, your, their. It seems to be a substantive; as, my own, my peculiar: but is, in reality, the participle passive of the verb owe, in the participle owe or own: my own; the thing owned by, or belonging to me.

Inachus in his cave alone,
Wept not another's losses, but his own. Dryden.

2. It is added generally by way of emphasis or corroboration.

I yet never was forsworn,
Scarcely have coveted what was my own. Shakspeare.
Every nation made gods of their own, and put them in high places. 2 Kings, xvii. 29.
For my own share one beauty I design,
Engage your honours that she shall be mine. Dryden.
It is conceit rather than understanding, if it must be under the restraint of receiving and holding opinions by the authority of any thing but their own perceived evidence. Locke.
Will she thy linen wash, or hosen darn,
And knit thee gloves made of her own spun yarn. Gay.
Passion and pride were to her soul unknown,
Convinc'd that virtue only is our own. Pope.

3 Sometimes it is added to note opposition or contradistinction; domestick; not foreign: mine, his, or yours; not another's.

These toils abroad, these tumults with his own,
Fell in the revolution of one year. Daniel.
There's nothing sillier than a crafty knave outwitted, and beaten at his own play. L'Estrange.

To Own. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To acknowledge; to avow for one's own.

When you come, find me out,
And own me for your son. Dryden, Cleom.

2. To possess; to claim; to hold by right.

Tell me, ye Trojans, for that name you own;
Nor is your course upon our coasts unknown. Dryden.
Others on earth o'er human race preside,
Of these the chief, the care of nations own,
And guard with arms divine the British throne. Pope.

3. To avow.

Nor hath it been thus only amongst the most civilized nations; but the barbarous Indians likewise have owned that tradition. Wilkins.
I'll venture out alone,
Since you, fair princess, my protection own. Dryden.

4. To confess; not to deny.

Make this truth so evident, that those who are unwilling to own it may yet be ashamed to deny it. Tillotson.
Others will own their weakness of understanding. Locke.
It must be owned, that, generally speaking, good parents are never more fond of their daughters, than when they see them too fond of themselves. Law.

O'wnership. n. s. [from owner.] Property; rightful possession.

In a real action, the proximate cause is the property or ownership of the thing in controversy. Ayliffe, Parergon.

O'wner. n. s. [from own.] One to whom any thing belongs; master; rightful possessor.

A bark
Stays but till her owner comes aboard. Shakspeare.
It is not enough to break into my garden,
Climbing my walls in spight of me the owner,
But thou wilt brave me. Shakspeare.
Here shew favour, because it happeneth that the owner hath incurred the forfeiture of eight years' profit of his lands, before he cometh to the knowledge of the process against him. Bacon.
They intend advantage of my labours
With no small profit daily to my owners. Milton, S. A.
These wait the owners last despair,
And what's permitted to the flames invade. Dryden.
A freehold, though but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it. Addison, Freeholder.
That small muscle draws the nose upwards, when it expresses the contempt which the owner of it has upon seeing any thing he does not like. Addison, Spect.
Victory hath not made us insolent, nor have we taken advantage to gain any thing beyond the honour of restoring every one's right to their just owners. Atterbury.
What is this wit, which must our cares employ?
The owner's wife, that other men enjoy. Pope.

Owre. n. s. [urus jubatus, Lat.] A beast. Ainsworth.

OX.† n. s. plur. oxen. [oxa, Saxon; oxe, Danish. Dr. Johnson. — " M. Goth. auhs; Icel. oxe, uxe, taurus; Cambr. ych, bos; ab Icel. aka, Sueth. aeka, currum agere. Sic Sueth. ock, jumentum; Icel. oke, jugales; ab aukan; Sueth. oeka, augere, ut sit quasi multiplicator gregis. Wacht." Serenius. — " Videri possunt affinia Græco ἄυξω vel αὐξάνω, augeo; quòd proavi nostri, quorum opes in gregibus potissimùm atque armentis consistebant, rem suam familiarem ex frequentiore bubuli pecoris foeturâ ingens incrementum capere judicarent. Ex auhs (Goth.) interim factum est ox; nam hs (Goth.) plerumque mutatur in x." Junii Goth. Gloss.]

1. The general name for black cattle.

The black ox hath not trod on his foot. Camden.
Sheep run not half so tim'rous from the wolf,
Or horse or oxen from the leopard,
As you fly from your oft-subdued slaves. Shakspeare.
I saw the river Clitumnus, celebrated by the poets for making cattle white that drink of it. The inhabitants of that country have still the same opinion, and have a great many oxen of a whitish colour to confirm them in it. Addison.

2. A castrated bull.

The horns of oxen and cows are larger than the bulls; which is caused by abundance of moisture. Bacon.
Although there be naturally more males than females, yet artificially, that is, by making geldings, oxen, and weathers, there are fewer. Graunt.
The field is spacious I design to sow,
With oxen far unfit to draw the plough. Dryden.

The frowning-bull
And ox half-raised. Thomson, Summer.

O'X-LIKE.* adj. Resembling an ox in look or quality.

I made the might elephant,
Who, ox-like, feeds on every herb and plant.
Sandys, Paraphr. of Job.
With ox-like eyes. Pope, Dunciad.

OXBANE. n. s. [buphonos.] A plant. Ainsworth.

O'XEYE.† n. s. [buphthalmus.] A plant. Miller.

Bring corn-flag, tulips, and Adonis' flower,
Fair oxeye, goldy-locks, and columbine. B. Jonson, Masques.

O'XEYED.* adj. [ox and eye.] Having large or full eyes, like those of an ox.

Homer useth that epithet of oxeyed, in describing Juno, because a round black eye is the best.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 472.

O'XFLY. n. s. [from ox and fly; talbanus, Lat.] A fly of a particular kind.

O'XGANG of land.† n. s. Ordinarily taken for fifteen acres. It is sometimes called oxgate; and in the north, corruptly, osken.

A carucate of land contains 100 acres; eight oxgangs make a carucate; and every oxgang contains fifteen acres.
Kelham, Domesday Book Illustr. p. 169.

O'XHEAL. n. s. [hellebori nigri radix.] A plant.
Ainsworth.

O'XLIP.† n. s. [Sax. oxan-ſlippa, primula veris. This word should therefore be written oxslip; though Dr. Johnson, overpassing the Saxon word, has given it oxlip; as the editors of Shakspeare also have.] The same with cowslip, a vernal flower.

A bank whereon the wild thyme blows,
Where oxlip and the nodding violet grows. Shakspeare.
The cowslip then they couch, and th' oxslip, for her meet.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. 15.

O'XSTALL. n. s. [ox and stall.] A stand for oxen.

O'XYGEN.* n. s. [ὀξὺς and γείνομαι, Gr. oxygene, Fr.] A principle existing in the air, of which it forms the respirable part, and which is also necessary to combustion. Oxygen, by combining with bodies, makes them acid; whence its name, signifying generator of acids.

O'XYGON.* n. s. [ὀξὺς and γώνια, Gr. oxygone, Fr.] A triangle having three acute angles.

O'XYMEL.† n. s. [oxumelle, Saxon; oximel, old Fr. ὀξύμελι, Gr. ὀξὺς, and μέλι.] A mixture of vinegar and honey.

In fevers, the aliments prescribed by Hippocrates, were ptisans and decoctions of some vegetables, with oxymel or the mixture of honey and vinegar. Arbuthnot.

OXYMO'RON.† n. s. [ὀξύμωρον.] A rhetorical figure, in which an epithet of a quite contrary signification is added to any word.

Some elegant figures, and tropes of rhetorick, biting sarcasms, sly ironies, strong metaphors, lofty hyperboles, paronomasies, oxymorons, lie very near upon the confines of jocularity. Barrow, vol. i. S. 14.

OXY'RRHODINE. n. s. [ὀξυῤῥόδινον, ὀξὺς and ῥόδον.] A mixture of two parts of oil of roses with one of vinegar of roses.

The spirits, opiates, and cool things, readily compose oxyrrhodines. Floyer on the Humours.

O'YER. n. s. [oyer, old French, to hear.] A court of oyer and terminer, is a judicature where causes are heard and determined.

OYE'S. [oyez, hear ye, Fr.] Is the introduction to any proclamation or advertisement given by the publick criers both in England and Scotland. It is thrice repeated.

Fairies, black, grey, green, and white,
Attend your office and your quality.
Crier hobgoblin make the fairy O yes. Shakspeare.
O yes! if any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry;
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag. Crashaw.

O'YLETHOLE. n. s. See EYELET. [It may be written olyet, from oeillet, French; but eyelet seems better.]

Distinguish'd slashes deck the great,
As each excels in birth or state;
His oyletholes are more and ampler,
The king's own body was a sampler. Prior.

O'YSTER.† n. s. [oſtra, oſtre, Saxon; oystre, old Fr.] A bivalve testaceous fish.

I will not lend thee a penny—
—Why then the world's mine oyster which I with sword will open. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

Rich honesty dwells like your miser, sir, in a poor house; as your pearl in your foul oyster. Shakspeare.

Another mass held a kind of oyster shell, and other bivalves. Woodward on Fossils.

There may be many ranks of beings in the invisible world as superior to us, as we are superior to all the ranks of being in this visible world; though we descend below the oyster to the least animated atoms discovered by microscopes.
Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

Where oyster tubs in rows
Are rang'd beside the posts, there stay thy haste. Gay.

O'YSTERWENCH.† }
O'YSTERWIFE. }

PACE. n. s. [pas, Fr.]

1. Step; single change of the foot in walking.

Behind her Death,
Close following pace for pace, not mounted yet
On his pale horse. Milton, P. L.

2. Gait; manner of walk.

He himself went but a kind of languishing pace, with his eyes sometimes cast up to heaven, as though his fancies strove to mount higher. Sidney.

He saw Menalcas come with heavy pace;
Wet were his eyes, and cheerless was his face. Addison.

3. Degree of celerity. To keep or hold pace, is not to be left behind.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusky death. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Bring me word
How the world goes, that to the pace of it
I may spur on my journey. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Nor her winged speede
The faulcon gentle could for pace exceed. Chapman.

His teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness; that his brothers, under the same training, might hold pace with him. Wotton, D. of Buckingham.

The beggar sings ev'n when he sees the place,
Beset with thieves, and never mends his pace. Dryden.

4. Step; gradation of business. A gallicism.

The first pace necessary for his majesty to make, is to fall into confidence with Spain. Temple.

5. A measure of five feet. The quantity supposed to be measured by the foot from the place where it is taken up to that where it is set down.

Measuring land by walking over it, they styled a double step; i. e. the space from the elevation of one foot, to the same foot set down again, mediated by a step of the other foot; a pace equal to five foot; a thousand of which paces made a mile. Holder on Time.

The violence of tempests never moves the sea above six paces deep. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

6. A particular movement which horses are taught, though some have it naturally, made by lifting the legs on the same side together.

They rode, but authors having not
Determined whether pace or trot;
That's to say, whether tollutation,
As they do term it, or succussation. Hudibras.

To PACE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To move on slowly.

He soft arrived on the grassie plain,
And fairly paced forth with easy pain. Spenser.
As we pac'd along
Upon the giddy footing of the hatches,
Methought, that Glo'ster stumbled. Shakspeare, Rich. III.
I beheld
Crispinus, both in birth and manners vile,
Pacing in pomp with cloak of Tyrian dye,
Chang'd oft a day. Dryden, Juv.

The moon rose in the clearest sky I ever saw, by whose solemn light I paced on slowly without interruption. Pope.

The nymph, obedient to divine command,
To seek Ulysses, pac'd along the sand. Pope.

2. To move.

Remember well, with speed so pace,
To speak of Perdita. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

3. [Used of horses.] To move by raising the legs on the same side together.

To PACE. v. a.

1. To measure by steps.

Where is the horse that doth untread again
His tedious measures with th' unbated fire,
That he did pace them first. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

2. To direct to go; to regulate in motion.

If you can, pace your wisdom
In that good path that I would wish it go,
And you shall have your bosom on this wretch. Shakspeare.

PA'CED.† adj. [from pace.]

1. Having a particular gait.

Revenge is sure, though sometimes slowly pac'd;
Awake, awake, or sleeping sleep thy last. Dryden.

2. Perfect in paces; spoken of horses; and thence applied to persons, generally in a bad sense, as thorough-paced. See THOROUGHPACED.

She's not paced yet; you must take some pains to work her to your manage. Shakspeare, Pericles.

PA'CER.† n. s. [from pace.]

1. One that paces.
2. A horse that is perfect in paces.

His horse too, which was a pacer, was adorned after the same airy manner, and seemed to share in the vanity of the rider. Spectator, No. 104.

PACI'FICAL.* adj. [pacificus, Lat.] Mild; gentle; peace-making.

For what sin was I sent hither among soldiers, being by my profession academical, and by my charge pacifical?
Sir H. Wotton, (Lett. 1615,) Rem. p. 439.

PACIFICA'TION. n. s. [pacification, Fr. from pacify.]

1. The act of making peace.

He sent forthwith to the French king his chaplain, chusing him because he was a churchman, as best sorting with an embassy of pacification. Bacon, Hen. VII.

David, by an happy and seasonable pacification, was took off from acting that bloody tragedy. South.

2. The act of appeasing or pacifying.

A world was to be saved by a pacification of wrath, through the dignity of that sacrifice which should be offered. Hooker.

PACI'FICATOR.† n. s. [pacificateur, Fr. from pacify.] Peace-maker.

He set and kept on foot a continual treaty of peace; besides he had in consideration the bearing the blessed person of a pacificator. Bacon, Hen. VII.

We have seen England become the pacificator of the continent, and rival monarchs sue for our alliance.
Warburton, Serm. 34.

PACI'FICATORY.† adj. [from pacificator.] Tending to make peace.

All churches did maintain intercourse and commerce with each other by formed communicatory, pacificatory, commendatory, synodical epistles. Barrow, Unity of the Church.

PACI'FICK. adj. [pacifique, Fr. pacificus, Lat.] Peace-making; mild; gentle; appeasing.

The Most High is not pacified for sin by the multitude of sacrifices. Eccles. xxxiv. 19.

In his journey he heard news of the victory, yet he went on as far as York, to pacify and settle those countries. Bacon.

O villain! to have wit at will upon all other occasions, and not one diverting syllable now at a pinch to pacify our mistress. L'Estrange.

Nor William's pow'r, nor Mary's charms
Could or repel, or pacify his arms. Prior.

PACK.† n. s. [pack, Teut.]

1. A large bundle of any thing tied up for carriage.

Themistocles said to the king of Persia, that speech was like cloth of Arras, opened and put abroad, whereby the imagery appears in figures; whereas in thought they lie but as in packs. Bacon.

Had sly Ulysses, at the sack
Of Troy, brought thee his pedlar's pack. Cleaveland.
Our knight did bear no less a pack,
Of his own buttocks on his back. Hudibras.

2. A burden; a load.

I rather chose,
To cross my friend in his intended drift,
Than, by concealing it, heap on your head
A pack of sorrows. Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

But when they took notice how stupid a beast it was, they loaded it with packs and burdens, and set boys upon the back of it. L'Estrange.

3. A due number of cards. See the third sense of To PACK.

Women to cards may be compar'd, we play
A round or two, when us'd we throw away,
Take a fresh pack. Granville.

It is wonderful to see persons of sense passing away a dozen hours together in shuffling and dividing a pack of cards. Addison.

4. A number of hounds hunting togethe.

Two ghosts join their packs to hunt her o'er the plain. Dryden.

The fury fires the pack; they vent,
And feed their hungry nostrils with the scent. Dryden.
The savage soul of game is up at once,
The pack full-opening various. Thomson, Summer.

5. A number of people confederated in any bad design or practice. See the seventh sense.

You panderly rascals! there's a knot, a gang, a pack, a conspiracy, against me. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Wind.

Never such a pack of knaves and villains, as they who now governed in the parliament. Clarendon.

Bickerstaff is more a man of honour, than to be an accomplice with a pack of rascals that walk the streets on nights. Swift.

6. Any great number, as to quantity and pressure: as, a pack or world of troubles. Ainsworth. This is often corrupted by the vulgar into a peck of troubles.

7. A loose or lewd person. [pæca, from pæcan, Sax. to deceive by false appearances. Mr. H. Tooke.] I have seen many instances of this word, all accompanied with naughty. It was probably a cant term.

Some losels, some naughty packes. Skelton, Poems, p. 15.
Young wanton wenches, and beguines, nunnes, and naughty packs. World of Wonders, p. 184.

To PACK.† v. a. [packen, Teut.]

1. To bind up for carriage.

A poor merchant driven on unknown land,
That had by chance pack'd up his choicest treasure
In one dear casket, and sav'd only that. Otway.

Each saddled with his burden on his back. Dryden.

What we looked upon as brains, were an heap of strange materials, packed up with wonderful art in the skull. Addison.

2. To send in a hurry.

He cannot live, I hope, and must not die,
Till George be pack'd with post horse up to heav'n. Shakspeare.

3. To sort the cards so as that the game shall be iniquitously secured. It is applied to any iniquitous procurement of collusion. [This and the following sense are to be referred, as Mr. H. Tooke has shewn, to the Saxon pæcan, to counterfeit, to act collusively, to cheat.]

She, Eros, has
Packt cards with Cæsar's, and false play'd my glory
Unto an enemy's triumph. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

There be that can pack cards and yet cannot play well; so there are some that are good in canvasses and factions, that are otherwise weak men. Bacon, Ess.

The judge shall job, the bishop bite the town,
And mighty dukes pack cards for half a crown. Pope.

4. To unite picked persons in some bad design.

When they have pack'd a parliament,
We'll once more try the expedient:
Who can already muster friends,
To serve for members to our ends. Hudibras.

Brutes, called men, in full cry packed by the court or country, run down in the house of commons, a deserted horned beast of the court. Wycherly.

So many greater fools than they,
Will pack a crowded audience the third day. Southern.

The expected council was dwindling into a conventicle; a packed assembly of Italian bishops, not a free convention of fathers from all quarters. Atterbury.

To PACK. v. n.

1. To tie up goods.

The marigold, whose courtier's face
Echoes the sun, and doth unlace
Her at his rise, at his full stop
Packs and shuts up her gaudy shop. Cleaveland.

2. To go off in a hurry; to remove in haste.

New farmer thinketh each hour a day,
Until the old farmer be packing away. Tusser.

Rogues, hence, avaunt!
Seek shelter, pack. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor

The wind no sooner came good, but away pack the gallies with all the haste they could. Carew.

A thief kindled his torch at Jupiter's altar, and then robbed the temple; as he was packing away with his sacrilegious burden, a voice pursued him. L'Estrange.

If they had been an hundred more, they had been all sent packing with the same answer. Stillingfleet.

Pack hence, and from the cover'd benches rise,
This is no place for you. Dryden.
Poor Stella must pack off to town,
From purling streams and fountains bubbling,
To Liffy's stinking tide at Dublin. Swift.

3. To concert bad measures; to confederate in ill; to practise unlawful confederacy or collusion.

That this so profitable a merchandize, riseth not to a proportionable enhauncement with other less beneficial commodities, they impute partly to the eastern buyers packing, partly to the owners not venting the same. Carew.

Go, pack with him. Titus Andronicus.

PA'CKCLOTH. n. s. [pack and cloth.] A cloth in which goods are tied up.

PA'CKER. n. s. [from pack.] One who binds up bales for carriage.

PA'CKET. n. s. [pacquet, French.]

1. A small pack; a mail of letters.

In the dark
Grop'd I to find out them,
Finger'd their packet, and in fine withdrew. Shakspeare.

There passed continually packets and dispatches between the two kings. Bacon, Hen. VII.

His packets returned with large accessions of objections and advertisements. Fell.

Upon your late command
To guard the passages, and search all packets,
This to the prince was intercepted. Denham.

2. A small bundle, as of a mountebank's medicines.

3. The post ship, the ship that brings letters periodically.

People will wonder how the news could come, especially if the wind be fair when the packet goes over. Swift.

To PA'CKET. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind up in parcels.

My resolution is to send you all your letters, well sealed and packeted. Swift.

PA'CKHORSE. n. s. [pack and horse.] A horse of burden; a horse employed in carrying goods.

Ere you were queen, ay, or your husband king,
I was a packhorse in his great affairs. Shakspeare.

It is not to be expected that a man, who drudges on in a laborious trade, should be more knowing in the variety of things done in the world, than a packhorse who is driven constantly forwards and backwards to market, should be skilled in the geography of the country. Locke.

PA'CKING.* n. s. [from To pack, in the sense of cheating.] A trick; a cheat; a falsehood.

Ludovicus the seconde was tormented in purgatorye, saye they, only for that he would not regard the admonishments of Gabriel the archangel against priestes' marriage: — Mark these packynges! Bale, Acts of Eng. Vot. (1550,) P. i.

Here's packing, with a witness, to deceive us all!
Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

We do hope to find out all your tricks,
Your plots and packing.
Milton on the New Forcers of Conscience.

What excuse
Can we make to the duke, what mercy hope for,
Our packing being laid open?
Massinger, Gr. Duke of Florence.

PA'CKSADDLE. n. s. [pack and saddle.] A saddle on which burdens are laid.

Your beards deserve not so honourable a grave as to stuff a butcher's cushion, or to be entombed in an ass's packsaddle. Shakspeare, Coriol.

That brave prancing courser, hath been so broken and brought low by her, that he will patiently take the bit and bear a pack-saddle or panniers. Howell, Voc. For.

The bunch on a camel's back may be instead of a packsaddle to receive the burthen. More against Atheism.

PA'CKSTAFF.* n. s. [pack and staff.] A staff by which a pedlar occasionally supports his pack. It is probable, that the phrase, "as plain as a pikestaff," is a corruption of the word before us. Yet none of our lexicographers have noticed packstaff.

Some say, my satires over loosely flow,
Nor hide their gall enough from open show;
Not, riddle like, obscuring their intent;
But, packstaffe plaine, uttering what thing they ment.
Bp. Hall, Sat. B. 3. Prol.

A packstaffe epithet, and scorned name.
Marston, Scourge of Vill. ii. 5.

PA'CKTHREAD. n. s. [pack and thread.] Strong thread used in tying up parcels.

About his shelves
Remnants of packthread, and old cakes of roses
Were thinly scatter'd. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Girding of the body of the tree about with packthread, restraineth the sap. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I can compare such productions to nothing but rich pieces of patchwork, sewed together with packthread. Felton.

His horse is vicious, for which reason I tie him close to his manger with a packthread. Addison, Spect.

The cable was about as thick as packthread. Swift.

PA'CKWAX.† n. s. [More frequently written pax-wax.] Several parts peculiar to brutes, are wanting in man; as the strong aponeuroses of the neck, called packwax. Ray.

Along each side of the neck of large quadrupeds runs a stiff, robust cartilage, which butchers call the pax-wax.
Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 13. § 1.

PACT. n. s. [pact, Fr. pactum, Latin.] A contract; a bargain; a covenant.

The queen, contrary to her pact and agreement concerning the marriage of her daughter, delivered her daughters out of sanctuary unto king Richard. Bacon.

PA'CTION. n. s. [paction, Fr. pactio, Latin.] A bargain; a covenant.

The French king sent for Matthew earl of Levenox, to remove the earl of Arraine from the regency of Scotland, and reverse such pactions as he had made. Hayward.

There never could be any room for contracts or pactions, between the Supreme Being and his intelligent creatures.
Cheyne.

PA'CTIONAL.* adj. [from paction.] By way of bargain or covenant.

The several duties, that by God's ordinance are to be performed by persons that stand in mutual relation either to other, are not pactional and conditional, as are the leagues and agreements made between princes; but are absolute and independent: wherein each person is to look to himself, and the performance of the duty that lyeth upon him, though the other party should fail in the performance of his.
Sanderson, Cases of Consc. p. 126.

PACTI'TIOUS. adj. [pactio, Lat.] Settled by covenant.

PAD. n. s. [from paad, Sax. whence likewise path, or paað.]

1. The road; a foot-path.

We have seen this to be the discipline of the state, as well as of the pad. L'Estrange.

The squire of the pad and the knight of the post,
Find their pains no more baulk'd, and their hopes no more crost.
Prior.

2. An easy paced horse.

Let him walk a foot with his pad in his hand; but let not them be accounted no poets who mount and shew their horsemanship. Dryden, Ded. to Juv.

A grey pad is kept in the stable with great care, out of regard to his past services. Addison.

I would have set you on an easier pad, and relieved the wandering knight with a night's lodging. Pope, Lett.

3. A robber that infests the roads on foot.

4. A low soft saddle; a cushion or bolster; properly a saddle or bolster stuffed with straw. [Pajado, Spanish, of paja, straw.]

Tremellius was called scropha or sow, because he hid his neighbour's sow under a pad, and commanded his wife to lie thereon; he sware that he had no sow but the great sow that lay there, pointing to the pad and the sow his wife. Camden.

We shall not need to say what lack
Of leather was upon his back;
For that was hidden under pad. Hudibras.

To PAD.† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To travel gently.

2. To rob on foot; to lurk about the highways in order to rob.

Sermons, said I; give them me; my boy shall carry them in his portmanteau, and ease you of that luggage. But, said he, suppose your boy should be robbed. That's pleasant, said I; do you think there are parsons padding upon the road for sermons? Dr. Pope, Life of Bp. Ward, (1697,) p. 144.

3. To beat a way smooth and level.

PA'DAR. n. s. Grouts; coarse flour.

In the bolting and sifting of near fourteen years of such power and favour, all that came out could not be expected to be pure and fine meal, but must have amongst it padar and bran in this lower age of human fragility. Wotton.

PA'DDER. n. s. [from pad.] A robber; a foot highwayman.

Spurr'd as jockies use, to break,
Or padders to secure a neck. Hudibras.

Worse than all the clattering tiles, and worse
Than thousand padders, is the poet's curse;
Rogues that in dog days cannot rhime forbear;
But without mercy read, to make you hear. Dryden.

If he advanced himself by a voluntary engaging in unjust quarrels, he has no better pretence to honour than what a resolute and successful padder may challenge. Collier.

To PA'DDLE.† v. n. [patouiller, Fr.]

1. To row; to beat water as with oars.

As the men were paddling for their lives. L'Estrange.
Paddling ducks the standing lake desire. Gay.

2. To play in the water.

The brain has a very unpromising aspect for thinking: it looks like an odd sort of bog for fancy to paddle in. Collier.

A wolf lapping at the head of a fountain, spyed a lamb paddling a good way off. L'Estrange.

3. To finger.

Or paddling in your neck with his damn'd fingers.
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

To PA'DDLE.* v. a. To feel; to play with; to toy with.

But to be paddling palms and pinching fingers,
As now they are, and making practis'd smiles,
As in a looking-glass; — O, that is entertainment
My bosom likes not. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

PA'DDLE. n. s. [pattal, Welsh.]

1. An oar, particularly that which is used by a single rower in a boat.

2. Any thing broad like the end of an oar.

Have a paddle upon thy weapon. Deut. xxiii. 13.

PA'DDLER.† n. s. [from paddle.] One who paddles.

He may make a paddler i' the world,
From hand to mouth, but never a brave swimmer.
Beaum. and Fl. Wit at Sev. Weapons.

PA'DDLE-STAFF.† n. s. [paddle and staff.] A staff headed with broad iron.

Besides the paddle-staff and other ceremonies.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 254.

PA'DDOCK. n. s. [paba, Saxon; padde, Dutch.] A great frog or toad.

Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
Working her formall rooms in waxen frame;
The grisly toad-stool grown there mought I see,
And loathed paddocks lording on the same. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

The paddock, or frog paddock, breeds on the land, is bony and big, especially the she. Walton.

The water-snake, whom fish and paddocks fed,
With staring scales lies poison'd. Dryden.

Pa'ddock.† n. s. [pappuc, Sax. of which paddock is a corruption; pappuc is a park.] A small inclosure for deer or other animals.

Pæ'an.† n. s. [from the songs sung at festivals to Apollo, beginning Io pæan.]

1. A song of triumph.

O may I live to hail the glorious day,
And sing loud pæans through the crowded way Roscommon.

See from each clime the learn'd their incense bring:
Hear, in all tongues consenting pæans ring. Pope.

2. A classical and compound foot in verse of four syllables; written also pæon; of which there were four kinds; two, as described by Harris in the example; the other two consisting of one short, one long, and two short syllables; and two short, one long, and one short.

The foot thus described is no other than the pæan, consisting either of one long syllable and three short, or three short and one long. Harris, Philolog. Inquiries.

PA'GAN.† n. s. [paʒanıſc, Saxon; paganus, Latin; from pagus, a village; the villages continuing heathen after the cities were christian.] A Heathen; one not a Christian.

Religion did first take place in cities; and in that respect was a cause why the name of pagans, which properly signifieth a country people, came to be used in common speech for the same that infidels and unbelievers were. Hooker, Ecc. Pol. v. § 80.

Neither having the accent of christians, nor the gait of christian, pagan, nor man. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Pa'gan, adj. Heathenish.

Their cloaths are after such a pagan cut too,
That sure they have worn out Christendom. Shakspeare.

The secret ceremonies I conceal,
Uncouth, perhaps unlawful to reveal;
But such they were as pagan use required. Dryden.

Pa'ganish.* adj. [paʒanıſc, Saxon.] Heathenish.

The peremptory knife of popish, worse than paganish, pruners. Bp. King, Vitis Palat. (1614,) p. 34.

They observed and solemnized their paganish pastime and worship. Bourne, Antiq. Comm. People, p. 137.

He [Pope Gregory] would not suffer verse to be sung, or rather, perhaps, would not let it be sung as verse, which his Canto Firmo, or notes of equal length, would most effectually prevent, because it was gay and paganish. Mason on Church Musick, p. 238.

Pa'ganism. n. s. [paganism, French; from pagan.] Heathenism.

The name of popery is more odious than very paganism, amongst divers of the more simple sort. Hooker.

Our labarum, in a state of paganism, you have on a coin of Tiberius. It stands between two other ensigns. Addison.

To Pa'ganize. v. a. [from pagan.] To render heathenish.

God's own people were sometimes so miserably depraved and paganized, as to sacrifice their sons and daughters unto devils. Hallywell, Melampr. (1681,) p. 29.

This way of paganizing a future state, was unavoidable in the plan of Telemachus, as it was also in that of Fontenelle's Dialogues. But it was something to be serious in his paganism. Thus much may be said for the French Homer. Hurd on Addison's Tatler, No. 156.

To Pa'ganize. v. n. To behave like a pagan.

This was that which made the old christians paganize. Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

1. One side of the leaf of a book.

If a man could have opened one of the pages of the divine counsel, and seen the event of Joseph's being sold, he might have dried up the young man's tears. Bp. Taylor.

Thy name to Phœbus and the muses known,
Shall in the front of every page be shown. Dryden.

A printer divides a book into sheets, the sheets into pages, the pages into lines, and the lines into letters. Watts.

2. [page, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Tooke contends, that "pack, patch, and page, are the past participle pack, (differently pronounced, and therefore differently written with k, ch, or ge,) of the Saxon verb pæcan, to deceive by false appearances; — and as servants were contemptuously called harlot, varlet, valet, and knave; so were they contemptuously called pack, patch, and Page. And from the same source is the French page, and the Italian paggio." Divers. of Purley, ii. 369, 370. This etymon, ingenious as it may seem, is hardly the true one of page. Henry Stephens and others have derived it from the Greek παῖς, at first signifying a boy, afterwards, a servant. Fauchet thus speaks of the French word: "Le mot de page, jusques au temps des rois Charles VI. and VII., sembloit être seulement donné à de viles personnes, comme à garçons de pied. Car encore aujourdhuy les tuilliers appellent pages ces petits valets, qui sur des pallettes portent seicher les tuilles vertes." Hence perhaps the derivation of it by others, from the Lat. pagus, a village; with the remark that in Languedoc and Gascony, a countryman is called page. See this appellation confirmed in Dict. de la Langue Toulousaine, 1638. "Pagès, paisan, vilageois. Fa la pageso, faire le pot à deux anses, mettre les mains sur les roignons, se quarrer; c'est un terme de nourrice." However, Fauchet and Menage agree that page at first signified a boy; so the Su. Goth. poike, a boy, as Serenius has observed, as well as the Greek παῖς: and the Goth. word, as Wachter also remarks, seems to be the parent of the French and Italian. To assign for the etymon, therefore, what merely might denote the secondary sense of the word, and to take no notice of the primary, is at least an irregular deduction. Page, in our own language also, like knave and knight, at first signified a boy-child; then a boy-servant, or attendant; though neither Dr. Johnson nor Mr. Tooke have thought proper to notice this distinction.] A boy-child.

A doughter hadden they betwix them two,
Of twenty yere, without any mo,
Saving a child that was of half yere age,
In cradle it lay, and was a propre page. Chaucer, Reve's Tale.

3. A boy-servant; a young boy attending, rather in formality than servitude, on a great person.

Free was Dan John, and namely of dispence; —
He not foryate to yeve the leste page
In all that hous; but after their degree,
He yave the lord, and sithen his meinee.
Chaucer, Shipm. Tale.

The fair goddess, Fortune,
Fall deep in love with thee, and her great charms
Misguide thy opposers' swords!
Prosperity be thy page! Shakspeare, Coriol.

Pages following him,
Even at the heels, in golden multitudes. Shakspeare.

He had two pages of honour, on either hand one. Bacon.

Where is this mankind now? who lives to age
Fit to be made Methusalem his page. Donne.

This day thou shalt my rural pages see,
For I have dress'd them both to wait on thee. Dryden.

Philip of Macedon had a page attending in his chamber, to tell him every morning, Remember, O king, that thou art mortal. Wake, Prep. for Death.

To PAGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mark the pages of a book.
2. To attend as a page.

Will these moss'd trees,
That have outliv'd the eagle, page thy heels,
And skip when thou point'st out? Shakspeare.

PA'GEANT.✝ n. s. [Of this word the etymologists give no satisfactory account. It may perhaps be payen geant, a pagan giant, a representation of triumph used at return from holy wars; as we have yet the Saracen's head. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. H. Tooke considers pageant as merely the present participle pæcceand, of the Sax. pæcan, to deceive; pacheand, pacheant, pageant. Div. of Purl. 370.]

1. A statue in a show.
2. Any show; a spectacle of entertainment.

When all our pageants of delight were plaid,
Our youth got me to play the woman's part,
And I was trimm'd in madam Julia's gown. Shakspeare.

I'll play my part in fortune's pageant. Shakspeare.

This wide and universal theatre,
Presents more woeful pageants than the scene
Wherein we play. Shakspeare As you like it.

Strange and unnatural, let's stay and see
This pageant of a prodigy. Cowley.

The poets contrived the following pageant or machine for the pope's entertainment; a huge floating mountain that was split in the top in imitation of Parnassus. Addison.

3. It is used in a proverbial and general sense for any thing shewy without stability or duration.

Thus unlamented pass the proud away,
The gaze of fools, and pageant of a day. Pope.

The breath of others raises our renown,
Our own as soon blows the pageant down. Young.

PA'GEANT. adj. Showy pompous; ostentatious; superficial.

Were she ambitious, she disdain'd to own
The pageant pomp of such a servile throne. Dryden.

To PA'GEANT.✝ v. a. [from the noun.] To exhibit in show; to represent.

With ridiculous and aukward action,
Which, slanderer, he imitation calls,
He pageants us. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

That feast of love and heavenly-admitted friendship, the seal of filial grace, became the subject of horrour and glouting admiration, pageanted about like a dreadful idol.
Milton, Of Reform. B. I.

PA'GEANTRY. n. s. [from pageant.] Pomp; shew.

Inconveniences are consequent to dogmatizing, supposing men in the right; but if they be in the wrong, what a ridiculous pageantry is it to see such a philosophical gravity set man out a solecism. Gov. of the Tongue.

Such pageantry be to the people shown;
There boast thy horse's trappings and thy own. Dryden.

PA'GINAL. adj. [pagina, Latin.] Consisting of pages.

An expression proper unto the paginal books of our times, but not so agreeable unto volumes or rolling books, in use among the Jews. Brown, Vulg. Err.

PA'GOD.✝ } n. s. [a corruption of poutghad, which in PAGO'DA. } the Persian signifies a house of idols. Fryer's Travels. Dr. Johnson. — Sir T. Herbert writes it pagotha: " Many pagothaes or idol places for worship." Travels, p. 48. " Within these is built a pagotha." Ib. p. 116. " They adore pagothas, in shape not unlike Pan and Priapus." Ib. p. 373. He also uses pagod. The word is now somes called pagoda.]

1. An Indian idol.

Miserable Indians idolatrously adoring their devilish pagodes. Bp. Hall, Character of Man.

They worship idols called pagods, after such a terrible representation as we make of devils. Stillingfleet.

2. The temple of the idol.

See thronging millions to the pagod run,
And offer country, parent, wife, or son. Pope.

3. The name of an Indian coin, both of gold and silver; usually called pagoda.

PAID. the preterite and participle passive of pay.

This punishment pursues the unhappy maid,
And thus the purple hair is dearly paid. Dryden.

PAI'GLE.✝ n. s. [paralysis, Lat.] A kind of cowslip; the double cowslip.

Blue harebells, pagles, pansies, calaminth.
B. Jonson, Masques.

PAIL. n. s. [paila, Spanish.] A wooden vessel in which milk or water is commonly carried.

In the country when wool is new shorn, they set pails of water in the same room to increase the weight. Bacon.

New milk that all the winter never fails,
And all the summer overflows the pails. Dryden.

PAI'LFUL.✝ n. s. [pail and full.] The quantity that a pail will hold.

Yond same cloud cannot chuse but fall by pailfuls.
Shakspeare.

When an house is on fire, we must every one cast in his pailful to the quenching of the flames. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 60.

PAILMA'IL.✝ n. s. The same with pallmall, a beater or mall to strike the ball. See PALLMALL.

A stroke with a pailmail beetle upon a bowl, makes it fly from it. Digby on the Soul.

PAIN.✝ n. s. [peine, Fr. painer, old Fr. tourmenter; pin, Saxon; pina, Su. Goth. torment.]

1. Punishment denounced.

There the princesses determining to bathe themselves, thought it was so privileged a place, upon pain of death, as no body durst presume to come thither. Sidney.

On pain of death no person being so bold,
Or daring hardy, as to touch the list. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Interpose, on pain of my displeasure,
Betwixt their swords. Dryden, Don Sebast.

None shall presume to fly under pain of death, with wings of any other man's making. Addison, Guard.

2. Penalty; punishment.

Because Eusebius hath yet said nothing, we will, by way of mulct or pain, lay it upon him. Bacon.

3. Sensation of uneasiness.

As the pains of the touch are greater than the offences of the other senses; so likewise are the pleasures. Bacon.

Pain is perfect misery, the worst
Of evils; and, excessive, overturns
All patience. Milton, P. L.

He would believe, but yet is still in pain,
Presses the pulse, and feels the leaping vein. Dryden.

What pain do you think a man must feel, when his conscience lays this folly to his charge. Law.

4. [In the plural.] Labour; work; toil.

Many have taken the pains to go out of Europe to reside as friars in America. Abbot, Desc. of the World.

One laboureth and taketh pains, maketh haste, and is so much the more behind. Ecclus. xi. 11.

The pains they had taken, was very great. Clarendon.

If philosophy be uncertain, the former will conclude it vain; and the latter may be in danger of pronouncing the same on their pains, who seek it, if after all their labour they must reap the wind, mere opinion and conjecture. Glanville.

She needs no weary steps ascend,
All seems before her feet to bend;
And here, as she was born she lies,
High without taking pains to rise. Waller.

The deaf person must be discreetly treated, and by pleasant usage wrought upon, to take some pains at it, watching your seasons and taking great care, that he may not hate his task, but do it chearfully. Holder.

If health be such a blessing, it may be worth the pains to discover the regions where it grows, and the springs that feed it. Temple.

They called him a thousand fools for his pains. L'Estrange.

Some natures the more pains a man takes to reclaim them, the worse they are. L'Estrange.

Her nimble feet refuse
Their wonted speed, and she took pains to lose. Dryden.

> Crabbe, Par. Register.

PA'LINODE.† } n. s. [παλινῳδία, Gr. from πάλιν, anew,
PA'LINODY. } and ᾠδὴ, a song.] A recantation.

> You, two and two, singing a palinode,
> March to your several homes! B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.
>
> I, of thy excellence, have oft been told;
> But now my ravish'd eyes thy face behold:
> Who therefore in this weeping palinod
> Abhor myself, that have displeas'd my God,
> In dust and ashes mourn. Sandys, Paraph. on Job.

He, obstinately refusing this, was suspended from all execution of his priestly function within the university, — till he should make his palinodie. A. Wood, Annals Univ. Ox. Anno 1640.

PALISA'DE. } n. s. [palisade, Fr. palisado, Span.
PALISA'DO. } from palus, Lat.] Pales set by way of inclosure or defence.

> The Trojans round the place a rampire cast,
> And palisades about the trenches plac'd. Dryden.

The wood is useful for palisadoes for fortifications, being very hard and durable. Mortimer, Husb.

The city is surrounded with a strong wall, and that wall guarded with palisades. Broome on the Odyssey.

To PALISA'DE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose with palisades. Sherwood has palisadoed.

PA'LISH.† adj. [from pale.] Somewhat pale.

> Creet, ever wont the cypress sad to bear;
> Acheron banks, the palish popelar. Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 3.

The first shall be a palish clearness, evenly and smoothly spread. Wotton on Education.

Spirit of nitre makes with copper a palish blue; spirit of urine a deep blue. Arbuthnot on Air.

PALL.† n. s. [pæll, Saxon, pallium, amictus; pall, Su. Goth. from the ancient Sueth. fala, fela, to cover. Serenius.]

1. A cloak or mantle of state.

> With princely pace,
> As fair Aurora in her purple pall,
> Out of the East the dawning day doth call;
> So forth she comes. Spenser.
>
> Let gorgeous tragedy
> In scepter'd pall come sweeping by. Milton, Il Pens.

2. The mantle of an archbishop.

An archbishop ought to be consecrated and anointed, and after consecration he shall have the pall sent him. Ayliffe.

3. The covering thrown over the dead.

> The right side of the pall old Egeus kept,
> And on the left the royal Theseus wept. Dryden.

To PALL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cloak; to invest.

> Come thick night
> And pall thee in the dunnest smoak of hell,
> That my keen knife see not the wound it makes. Shakspeare.

To PALL.† v. n. [Of this word the etymologists give no reasonable account: perhaps it is only a corruption of pale, and was applied originally to colours. Dr. Johnson. — It is from the Lat. palleo. See the neuter verb, To APPAL.]

1. To grow vapid; to become insipid.

Empty one bottle into another swiftly, lest the drink pall. Bacon.

> Beauty soon grows familiar to the lover,
> Fades in the eye, and palls upon the sense. Addison.

2. To be weakened; to become spiritless; to grow flat.

Our indiscretion sometimes serves as well, when our deep plots do pall. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

To PALL. v. a.

1. To make insipid or vapid.

Reason and reflection, representing perpetually to the mind the meanness of all sensual gratifications, blunt the edge of his keenest desires, and pall all his enjoyments. Atterbury.

> Wit, like wine, from happier climates brought,
> Dash'd by these rogues, turns English common draught,
> They pall Moliere's and Lopez' sprightly strain. Swift.

2. To make spiritless; to dispirit.

> A miracle
> Their joy with unexpected sorrow pall'd. Dryden.
>
> Ungrateful man,
> Base, barbarous man, the more we raise our love
> The more we pall, and cool, and kill his ardour. Dryden.

3. To weaken; to impair.

> For this,
> I'll never follow thy pall'd fortunes more. Shakspeare.

4. To cloy.

Palled appetite is humourous, and must be gratified with sauces rather than food. Tatler.

PALL.* n. s. [from the verb.] Nauseating. Not in use.

The palls, or nauseatings, which continually intervene, are of the worst and most hateful kind of sensation. Ld. Shaftesbury, Inq. B. ii. P. ii. § 2.

*PALLA'DIUM. n. s. [Latin.] A statue of Pallas, pretended to be the guardian of Troy; thence, any security or protection.

A kind of palladium to save the city, wherever it remained. Milton, of Ref. in Eng. B. 1.

The Jebusites said, they should not come into the house, that is, they would never again commit the safety of the fort to such palladiums as these. Gregory's Notes on Script. (ed. 1684.) p. 34.

PA'LLET. n. s. [paillet, in Chaucer; which was probably the French word from paille, straw, and secondarily, a bed.]

1. A small bed; a mean bed.

Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoaky cribs,
Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee,
And husht with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber;
Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
Under the canopies of costly state,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody? Shakspeare.

His secretary was laid in a pallet near him for ventilation of his thoughts. Wotton, D. of Buckingham.

If your stray attendance be yet lodg'd,
Or shroud within these limits, I shall know
Ere morrow wake, or the low-roosted lark
From her thatch'd pallet rouse. Milton, Comus.

2. [palette, French.] A small measure, formerly used by chirurgeons.

A surgeon drew from a patient in four days, twenty-seven pallets, every pallet containing three ounces. Hakewill.

3. [In heraldry; palus minor, Lat.] A little post.

PA'LLIAMENT. n. s. [pallium, Lat.] A dress; a robe.

The people of Rome,
Send thee by me their tribune,
This palliament of white and spotless hue. Shakspeare.

PA'LLIARD.* n. s. [pailliard, Fr.] A whoremaster; a lecher. Bullokar.

Thieves, pandars, palliards, sins of every sort;
These are the manufactures we export.
Dryden, Hind. and Panth. P. ii.

PA'LLIARDISE.† n. s. [pailliardise, Fr.] Fornication; whoring. Obsolete.

Nor can they tax him with palliardise, luxury, epicurism. Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. p. 136.

To PA'LLIATE.† v. a. [pallio, Lat. from pallium, a cloak; pallier, French.]

1. To clothe; to cover. This is the primary meaning, which Dr. Johnson has overpassed.

They wallow in all kind of turpitude, yet no where persecuted; being palliated with a pilgrim's coat, and hypocritic sanctity. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 325.

2. To cover with excuse.

They never hide or palliate their vices, but expose them freely to view. Swift.

3. To extenuate; to soften by favourable representations.

The fault is to extenuate, palliate, and indulge. Dryden.

4. To cure imperfectly or temporarily, not radically; to ease, not cure.

PA'LLIATE.* adj. Eased, not perfectly cured.

The nation was under its great crisis and most hopeful method of cure, which yet, if palliate and imperfect, would only make way to more fatal sickness. Fell, Life of Hammond, § 3.

PALLIA'TION. n. s. [palliation, Fr. from palliate.]

1. Extenuation; alleviation; favourable representation.

I saw clearly through all the pious disguises and soft palliations of some men. King Charles.

Such bitter invectives against other men's faults, and indulgence or palliation of their own, shews their zeal lies in their spleen. Gov. of the Tongue.

2. Imperfect or temporary, not radical cure; mitigation, not cure.

If the just cure of a disease be full of peril, let the physician resort to palliation. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

PA'LLIATIVE.† adj. [palliatif, Fr. from palliate.]

1. Extenuating; favourably representative.

He openly defends his new attempt, not in a palliative apology, but in a peremptory declaration. Warton, Rowley Enq. p. 85.

2. Mitigating, not removing; temporarily or partially, not radically curative.

Consumption pulmonary seldom admits of other than a palliative cure, and is generally incurable when hereditary. Arbuthnot.

PA'LLIATIVE. n. s. [from palliate.] Something mitigating; something alleviating.

It were more safe to trust to the general aversion of our people against this coin, than apply those palliatives which weak, perfidious, or abject politicians administer. Swift.

PA'LLID. adj. [pallidus, Latin.] Pale; not high-coloured; not bright: pallid is seldom used of the face.

Of every sort, which in that meadow grew,
They gather'd some; the violet pallid blue. Spenser.

When from the pallid sky the sun descends. Thomson.

Whilst, on the margin of the beaten road,
Its pallid bloom sick-smelling henbane show'd. Harte.

PALLI'DITY.* n. s. [from pallid.] Paleness. Bailey.

The agitation of the soul throws the animal spirits into a confused and impetuous motion, which imparts such a flush or pallidity to the face, so enlarges or contracts the lineaments and features; whereby it is easily perceivable, that something more than ordinary is the matter.
Philos. Lett. on Phisiognomy, (1751,) p. 176.

PA'LLIDLY.* adv. [from pallid.] Palely; wanly.

[They] sometimes appear pallidly sad, as if they were going to their graves. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 43.

PA'LLIDNESS.* n. s. [from pallid.] Paleness.

Let no man be discouraged with the pallidness of piety at first, nor captivated with the seeming freshness of terrene pleasures; both will change. And though we may be deceived in both, we shall be sure to be cheated but in one.
Feltham, Res. ii. 66.

PA'LLMALL.† n. s. [pila and malleus, Lat. pale maille, French. See PAILMAIL.] A play in which the ball is struck with a mallet through an iron ring; the mallet itself which strikes the ball.

If one had paille-mails, it were good to play in this alley; for it is of a reasonable good length, straight, and even.
French Garden for Eng. Ladies to walk in, (1621,) N. 5. b.

PA'LLOR.* n. s. [pallor, Lat.] Paleness.

There is some little change of the complexion from a greater degree of pallor to a less, possibly to some little quickening of redness. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 42.

PALM.† n. s. [palm, Sax. palm-treop; palma, Lat. palmier, Fr.]

1. A tree of great variety of species; of which the branches were worn in token of victory; it therefore implies superiority.

There are twenty-one species of this tree, of which the most remarkable are, the greater palm or date-tree. The dwarf palm grows in Spain, Portugal, and Italy, from whence the leaves are sent hither and made into flag-brooms. The oily palm is a native of Guinea and Cape Verd island, but has been transplanted to Jamaica and Barbadoes. It grows as high as the main mast of a ship. Miller.

Get the start of the majestick world
And bear the palm alone. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

Nothing better proveth the excellency of this soil than the abundant growing of the palm-trees without labour of man. This tree alone giveth unto man whatsoever his life beggeth at nature's hand. Ralegh.

Above others who carry away the palm for excellence, is Maurice Landgrave of Hess. Peacham of Musick.

Fruits of palm-tree, pleasantest to thirst
And hunger both. Milton, P. L.

Thou youngest virgin, daughter of the skies,
Whose palms new pluck'd from Paradise,
With spreading branches more sublimely rise. Dryden.

2. Victory; triumph. [palme, Fr.]

Namur subdu'd is England's palm alone;
The rest besieg'd; but we constrain'd the town. Dryden.

3. The hand spread out; the inner part of the hand. [palma, Lat. The Icelanders say falma, which is certainly the original word. Callander.]

By this virgin palm now kissing thine,
I will be thine. Shakspeare.

Drinks of extreme thin parts fretting, put upon the back of your hand, will, with a little stay, pass through to the palm, and yet taste mild to the mouth. Bacon.

Seeking my success in love to know,
I try'd the infallible prophetick way,
A poppy-leaf upon my palm to lay. Dryden.

4. A hand or measure of length, comprising three inches. [palme, Fr. palmus, Lat.]

The length of a foot is a sixth part of the stature; a span one eighth of it; a palm or hand's breadth one twenty-fourth; a thumb's breadth or inch one seventy-second; a forefinger's breadth one ninety-sixth. Holder on Time.

Henry VIII. of England, Francis I. of France, and Charles V. emperor, were so provident, as scarce a palm of ground could be gotten by either, but that the other two would set the balance of Europe upright again. Bacon.

The same hand into a fist may close,
Which instantly a palm expanded shows. Denham.

PALM-SUNDAY.* n. s. [palm-Sunnan-dæᵹ. Sax.] The Sunday next before Easter is generally called Palm-Sunday, in commemoration of our Saviour's triumphal entry into Jerusalem, when the multitude that attended him strewed palm branches in his way; in remembrance of which, palms were used to be borne here with us upon this day, till the second year of king Edward VI. Wheatly.

To PALM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To conceal in the palm of the hand, as jugglers.

Palming is held foul play amongst gamesters. Dryden.
They palm'd the trick that lost the game. Prior.

2. To impose by fraud.

If not by Scriptures, how can we be sure,
Reply'd the panther, what tradition's pure?
For you may palm upon us new for old. Dryden.

Moll White has made the country ring with several imaginary exploits palmed upon her. Addison, Spect.

3. To handle.

Frank carves very ill, yet will palm all the meats. Prior, Epigr.

4. To stroke with the hand. Ainsworth.

PA'LMARY.* adj. [palmaris, Lat. principal, most remarkable: "Palmare opus," a principal work. Palmary is probably of recent introduction into our language. Leslie, in his Short Method with the Deists, has the Latin expression: "When his opus palmare comes out, &c."] Principal; capital.

Sentences — proceeding from the pen of "the first philosopher of the age," in his palmary and capital work! Bp. Horne, Lett. on Infidelity, (1784,) L. 2.

PA'LMATED.* adj. [palmatus, Latin.] Having the feet broad: it is an epithet also applied by naturalists to certain roots and stones having the appearance of hands or fingers.

The broad and palmated feet of the aquatic birds perform the office of oars. Tr. of Buffon's Hist. of Birds.

PA'LMER.† n. s. [from palm.]

1. A pilgrim: they who returned from the holy land carried branches of palm. Dr. Johnson. — A palmer differed from a pilgrim: the pilgrim travelled to some certain place; the palmer to all, and not to any one in particular: the pilgrim might abandon his profession; the palmer must be constant until he had obtained the palm. Bullokar.

My sceptre, for a palmer's walking staff. Shakspeare.

Behold yon isle, by palmers, pilgrims trod,
Men bearded, bald, cowl'd, uncowl'd, shod, unshod. Pope.

2. [from palm, the hand.] A ferule; a stick to rap on the hand. Huloet, and Minsheu.

PA'LMERWORM. n. s. [palmer and worm.] A worm covered with hair, supposed to be so called because he wanders over all plants.

A flesh fly, and one of those hairy worms that resemble caterpillars and are called palmerworms, being conveyed into one of our small receivers, the bee and the fly lay with their bellies upward, and the worm seemed suddenly struck dead. Boyle.

PALME'TTO. n. s. A species of the palm-tree: it grows in the West Indies to be a very large tree; with the leaves the inhabitants thatch their houses. These leaves, before they are expanded, are cut and brought into England to make women's plaited hats; and the berries of these trees were formerly much used for buttons.

Broad o'er my head the verdant cedars wave,
And high palmettos lift their graceful shade. Thomson.

PALMI'FEROUS. adj. [palmi and fero, Lat.] Bearing palms. Dict.

PA'LMIPEDE. adj. [palma and pes, Lat.] Webfooted; having the toes joined by a membrane.

It is described like fissipedes, whereas it is a palmipede or fin-footed like swans. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Water-fowl which are palmipede, are whole footed, have very long necks, and yet but short legs, as swans. Ray.

PA'LMISTER.† n. s. [from palma.] One who deals in palmistry.

If we curiously advise with the palmisters, we shall find the mind written in the hand! Austin, Hæc Homo, p. 115.

Some vain palmesters have gone so far as to take upon them, by the sight of the hand, to judge of fortunes. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 133.

PA'LMISTRY. n. s. [palma, Lat.]

1. The cheat of foretelling fortune by the lines of the palm.

We shall not query what truth is in palmistry, or divination, from lines of our hands of high denomination. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Here while his canting drone-pipe scann'd
The mystick figures of her hand,
He tipples palmistry, and dines
On all her fortune-telling lines. Cleaveland.

With the fond maids in palmistry he deals;
They tell the secret first which he reveals. Prior.

2. Addison uses it humorously for the action of the hand.

Going to relieve a common beggar, he found his pocket was picked; that being a kind of palmistry at which this vermin are very dexterous. Addison, Spect. No. 130.

PA'LMY.† adj. [from palm.]

1. Bearing palms.

Betwixt them lawns, or level downs, and flocks
Grazing the tender herb, were interpos'd,
Or palmy hillock. Milton, P. L.

She pass'd the region which Panchea join'd,
And flying, left the palmy plains behind. Dryden.

2. Flourishing; victorious.

In the most high and palmy state of Rome,
A little ere the mightiest Julius fell,
The graves stood tenantless. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

In the high and palmy state of the monarchy of France, it fell to the ground without a struggle. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

PALPABI'LITY. n. s. [from palpable.] Quality of being perceivable to the touch.

He first found out palpability of colours; and by the delicacy of his touch, could distinguish the different vibrations of the heterogeneous rays of light. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

PA'LPABLE. adj. [palpable, Fr. palpor, Lat.]

1. Perceptible by the touch.

Art thou but
A dagger of the mind, a false creation?
I see thee yet in form as palpable,
As this which now I draw. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Darkness must overshadow all his bounds,
Palpable darkness, and blot out three days. Milton, P. L.

2. Gross; coarse; easily detected.

That grosser kind of heathenish idolatry, whereby they worshipped the very works of their own hands, was an absurdity to reason so palpable, that the prophet David, comparing idols and idolaters together, maketh almost no odds between them. Hooker.

They grant we err not in palpable manner, we are not openly and notoriously impious. Hooker.

He must not think to shelter himself from so palpable an absurdity, by this impertinent distinction. Tillotson.

Having no surer guide, it was no wonder that they fell into gross and palpable mistakes. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

3. Plain; easily perceptible.

That they all have so testified, I see not how we should possibly wish a proof more palpable, than this manifestly received and every where continued custom of reading them publickly. Hooker.

They would no longer be content with the invisible monarchy of God, and God dismissed them to the palpable dominion of Saul. Holyday.

Since there is so much dissimilitude between cause and effect in the more palpable phænomena, we can expect no less between them and their invisible efficients. Glanville.

PA'LPABLENESS. n. s. [from palpable.] Quality of being palpable; plainness; grossness.

PA'LPABLY. adv. [from palpable.]

1. In such a manner as to be perceived by the touch.
2. Grossly; plainly.

Clodius was acquitted by a corrupt jury, that had palpably taken shares of money, before they gave up their verdict, they prayed of the senate a guard, that they might do their consciences justice. Bacon.

PALPA'TION. n. s. [palpatio, palpor, Lat.] The act of feeling.

To PA'LPITATE. v. a. [palpito, Latin; palpiter, Fr.] To beat as the heart; to flutter; to go pit a pat.

PALPITA'TION. n. s. [palpitation, Fr. from palpitate.] Beating or panting; that alteration in the pulse of the heart, upon frights or any other causes, which makes it felt: for a natural uniform pulse goes on without distinction.

The heart strikes five hundred sort of pulses in an hour; and hunted into such continual palpitations, through anxiety and distraction, that fain would it break. Harvey.

I knew the good company too well to feel any palpitations at their approach. Tatler.

Anxiety and palpitations of the heart, are a sign of weak fibres. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Her bosom heaves
With palpitations wild. Thomson, Spring.

PA'LSGRAVE. n. s. [paltsgraff, German.] A count or earl who has the overseeing of a prince's palace. Dict.

PA'LSICAL. adj. [from palsy.] Afflicted with the palsy; paralytick.

PA'LSIED. adj. [from palsy.] Diseased with a palsy.

Pall'd, thy blazed youth
Becomes assuaged, and doth beg the alms
Of palsied eld. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Though she breathes yet in a few pious peaceful souls, yet, like a palsied person, she scarce moves a limb. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Let not old age long stretch his palsy'd hand,
Those who give late are importun'd each day. Gay.

PA'LSY.† n. s. [paralysis, Lat. thence paralysy, paralsy, palasy, palsy. Dr. Johnson. — Other languages thus led to the abbreviation of paralysis; old Fr. palasine, "tremblement de nerfs, 1200," Lacombe; paralsia, Ital. Menage.] A privation of motion or feeling, or both, proceeding from some cause below the cerebellum, joined with a coldness, flaccidity, and at last wasting of the parts. If this privation be in all the parts below the head, except the thorax and heart, it is called a paraplegia; if in one side only, a hemiplegia: if in some parts only of one side, a paralysis. There is a threefold division of a palsy; a privation of motion, sensation remaining; a privation of sensation, motion remaining; and lastly, a privation of both together. Quincy.

The palsy, and not fear, provokes me. Shakspeare.

With as good a plea might the dead-palsy boast to a man, It is I that free you from stitches and pains! Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 1.

A palsy may as well shake an oak, as shake the delight of conscience. South.

To PA'LTER.† v. n. [from poltron. Skinner, and Dr. Johnson. — Rather from paltry; which, however, Dr. Johnson derives from poltron: but that derivation is questioned. See PALTRY.] To shift; to dodge; to play tricks. Not in use.

I must
To the young man send humble treaties,
And palter in the shift of lowness. Shakspeare.

Be these juggling fiends no more believ'd,
That palter with us in a double sense;
That keep the word of promise to our ear,
And break it to our hope. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Romans, that have spoke the word,
And will not palter? Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

As if they hated only the miseries, but not the mischiefs, after they have juggled and paltered with the world. Milton, Ten. of Kings and Magistrates.

To PA'LTER.† v. a. To squander: as, he palters his fortune. Dr. Johnson from Ainsworth, without example. — It is indeed an old verb, well authorized in this sense.

To be a justice of the peace, as you are, and palter out your time i' the penal statutes; to hear the curious tenets controverted between a protestant constable and jesuit cobler! Beaum. and Fl. Elder Brother.

Paltering the free and moneyless power of discipline with a carnal satisfaction by the purse. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

PA'LTERER.† n. s. [from palter.] An insincere dealer; a shifter. Sherwood.

PA'LTRINESS. n. s. [from paltry.] The state of being paltry.

PA'LTRY.† adj. [poltron, French, a scoundrel; paltrocca, a low whore, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — Rather from the Su. Goth. paltor, rags; or Teut. palt, a scrap, a fragment. We had formerly the word palting, in the sense of worthless, mean; and pelting, which Dr. Johnson has admitted into his Dictionary, confessing, however, that he knows not why it should signify paltry. The reason now is shewn, it is presumed. Mr. H. Tooke considers paltry as a participle, jointly with poltron; that is, formed of the Latin pollice truncos, having the thumb cut off. Div. of Purley, ii. 25, 26. — The plain and simple deduction from the northern words, which so clearly designate what is sorry, worthless, despicable, and mean, will doubtless be preferred. "I desire maister Immerito to send me some odde fresh paulting three-halfpenny pamphlet." Gab. Hervey, Lett. to Spenser, 1580. Mr. Malone had not overlooked this passage; and it is to be wondered, that Mr. Tooke should not have here attended to our old word; which might have induced him to discard the quaint etymon of pollice truncos for paltry. The Scotch use the substantive peltry; and Dr. Jamieson refers it, with our paltry, to the Su. Goth. paltor, or the Teut. palt. See also Serenius. The use of the Scottish noun, in the sense of vile trash, Dr. Jamieson might further have illustrated by the old English pelter, a term of contempt, applied to a mean, despicable person: "Pelter, pynche-peny, one wythered with covetousness." Huloet's enlarged Dictionary. See also PELTING.] Sorry; worthless; despicable; contemptible; mean.

Then turn your forces from this paltry siege,
And stir them up against a mightier task. Shakspeare.

A very dishonest paltry boy, as appears in leaving his friend here in necessity, and denying him. Shakspeare.

Whose compost is paltry and carried too late,
Such husbandry useth that many do hate. Tusser.

For knights are bound to feel no blows,
From paltry and unequal foes. Hudibras.

It is an ill habit to squander away our wishes upon paltry fooleries. L'Estrange.

When such paltry slaves presume
To mix in treason, if the plot succeeds,
They're thrown neglected by; but if it fails,
They're sure to die like dogs. Addison, Cato.

PA'LY. adj. [from pale.] Pale. Used only in poetry.

Fain would I go to chafe his paly lips,
With twenty thousand kisses. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

From camp to camp,
Fire answers fire, and through their paly flames
Each battle sees the others umber'd face. Shakspeare.

A dim gleam the paly lanthorn throws
O'er the mid pavement. Gay.

PAM. n. s. [probably from palm, victory; as trump from triumph.] The knave of clubs.

Ev'n mighty pam that kings and queens o'erthrew,
And mow'd down armies in the fights of lu. Pope.

To PA'MPER.† v. a. [from the Fr. pampre, a vine-branch, full of leaves: a vineyard is said by the French pamprer, when it is overgrown with superfluous leaves and fruitless branches. Junius.] To glut; to fill with food; to saginate; to feed luxuriously.

Pampred with ease, and jalous in your age.
Chaucer, Court of Love, ver. 177.

It was even as two physicians should take one sick body in hand, of which the former would minister all things meet to purge and keep under the body, the other to pamper and strengthen it suddenly again; whereof what is to be looked for but a most dangerous relapse? Spenser.

You are more intemperate in your blood
Than Venus, or those pampered animals
That rage in savage sensuality. Shakspeare.

They are contented as well with mean food, as those that with the rarities of the earth do pamper their voracities. Sandys.

Praise swelled thee to a proportion ready to burst, it brought thee to feed upon the air, and to starve thy soul, only to pamper thy imagination. South.

With food
Distend his chine and pamper him for sport. Dryden.

His lordship lolls within at ease,
Pamp'ring his paunch with foreign rarities. Dryden.

To pamper'd insolence devoted fall,
Prime of the flock and choicest of the stall. Pope.

PA'MPERED.* adj. [from pamper; Fr. pampré.] Overfull.

Fruit-trees overwoody reach'd too far
Their pamper'd boughs. Milton, P. L.

PA'MPERING.* n. s. [from pamper.] Luxuriancy.

It is an encouragement to security, and a pampering in sin. Fulke against Allen, p. 186.

PA'MPHLET.† n. s. [par un filet, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Pegge considers it to be from the Fr. palme-feuillet, a leaf to be held in the hand; a book being a thing of greater weight. Anonym. i. 26. — Caxton, as Dr. Johnson has observed, writes it paunflet; but pamflet was also an old way of writing it: "Begynnynge with small storyes and pamfletes, and so to others." Prol. to K. Apolyne of Thyre, 1510.] A small book; properly a book sold unbound, and only stitched.

Com'st thou with deep premeditated lines,
With written pamphlets studiously devis'd? Shakspeare.

I put forth a slight pamphlet about the elements of architecture. Wotton.

Since I have been reading many English pamphlets and tractates of the sabbath, I can hardly find any treatise wherein the use of the common service by the minister, and the due frequenting thereof by the people, is once named among the duties or offices of sanctifying the Lord's-day. White.

He could not, without some tax upon himself and his ministers for the not executing the laws, look upon the bold licence of some in printing pamphlets. Clarendon.

As when some writer in a publick cause,
His pen, to save a sinking nation, draws,
While all is calm, his arguments prevail,
Till pow'r discharging all her stormy bags,
Flutters the feeble pamphlet into rags. Swift.

To PA'MPHLET. v. n. [from the noun.] To write small books.

I put pen to paper, and something I have done, though in a poor pamphleting way. Howell.

PAMPHLETEE'R.† n. s. [from pamphlet.] A scribbler of small books.

Small pains can be but little art;
Or load full drie-fats from the forren mart
With folio volumes, two to an oxe hide;
Or else ye pamphleteer go stand aside. Bp. Hall, Sat. ii. 1.

The squibs are those who in the common phrase are called libellers, lampooners, and pamphleteers. Tatler.

With great injustice I have been pelted by pamphleteers. Swift.

PAN.† n. s. [panne, Sax.]

1. A vessel broad and shallow, in which provisions are dressed or kept.

PA'NCAKE. n. s. [pan and cake.] Thin pudding baked in the frying-pan.

A certain knight swore by his honour they were good pancakes, and swore by his honour the mustard was naught. Shakspeare.

The flour makes a very good pancake, mixed with a little wheat flour. Mortimer, Husb.

PANCRA'TICAL.† } adj. [πᾶν and κρατὸς.] Excelling
PANCRA'TICK. } in all the gymnastick exercises.

He was the most pancratical man of Greece, and, as Galen reporteth, able to persist erect upon an oily plank, and not to be removed by the force of three men. Brown.

Arrived to a full pancratick habit, fit for combats and wrestlings. Hammond, Works, iv. 488.

PA'NCREAS. n. s. [πᾶν and κρέας.] The pancreas or sweet bread, is a gland of the conglomerate sort, situated between the bottom of the stomach and the vertebræ of the loins: it lies across the abdomen, reaching from the liver to the spleen, and is strongly tied to the peritonæum, from which it receives its common membranes. It weighs commonly four or five ounces. It is about six fingers' breadth long, two broad, and one thick. Its substance is a little soft and supple. Quincy.

PANCREA'TICK. adj. [from pancreas.] Contained in the pancreas.

In man and viviparous quadrupeds, the food moistened with the saliva is first chewed, then swallowed into the stomach, and so evacuated into the intestines, where being mixed with the choler and pancreatick juice, it is further subtilized, and easily finds its way in at the streight orifices of the lacteous veins. Ray on the Creation.

The bile is so acrid, that nature has furnished the pancreatic juice to temper its bitterness. Arbuthnot.

PA'NCY.† } n. s. [corrupted, I suppose, from panacey;
PA'NSY. } panacea. Dr. Johnson. — It is the French pensée, as Dr. Johnson in a note on Hamlet admits; the name of the viola tricolor. "It probably obtained the name of pensée, thought or fancy, from its fanciful appearance; the same circumstance which induced Milton to call it "the pansy freak'd with jet," that is fancifully touched with black." Nares, Elem. of Orthoepy, p. 305.] A flower; a kind of violet.

There is pansies, that's for thoughts. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

The daughters of the flood have search'd the mead
For violets pale, and cropp'd the poppy's head;
Pancies to please the sight, and cassia sweet to smell. Dryden.

The real essence of gold is as impossible for us to know, as for a blind man to tell in what flower the colour of a pansy is, or is not to be found, whilst he has no idea of the colour of a pansy. Locke.

From the brute beasts humanity I learn'd,
And in the pansy's life God's providence discern'd. Harte.

PA'NDARISM.* n. s. [from pander, which ought to be written pandar. See PANDER.] The employment of a pimp or pandar. Sherwood.

I need not tell you of bloody Turks, man-eating canibals, Patavian pandarism of their own daughters, or of miserable Indians idolatrously adoring their devilish pagodes. Bp. Hall, Character of Man.

To PA'NDARIZE.* v. n. To act the part of a pimp or pandar. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

PA'NDAROUS.* adj. Pimping; acting in the character of a bawd or pandar.

I know that face
To be a strumpet's: —
I saw her once before here, five days since 'tis;
And the same wary pandarous diligence
Was then bestow'd on her. Middleton's Witch.

PA'NDECT.† n. s. [pandecta, Latin.]

1. A treatise that comprehends the whole of any science.

Thus thou, by means which the ancients never took,
A pandect mak'st, and universal book. Donne, Poems, p. 263.

It were to be wished, that the commons would form a pandect of their power and privileges, to be confirmed by the entire legislative authority. Swift.

2. The digest of the civil law.

The text of the civil [law,] called the pandects or digests. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 49.

Ceolfrid augmented this collection with three volumes of pandects. Warton, Hist. E. P. Diss. ii. vol. i. c. 4.

PANDE'MICK. adj. [πᾶς and δῆμος.] Incident to a whole people.

Those instances bring a consumption, under the notion of a pandemick or endemick, or rather vernacular disease to England. Harvey on Consumptions.

PA'NDER. n. s. [This word is derived from Pandarus, the pimp in the story of Troilus and Cressida; it was therefore originally written pandar, till its etymology was forgotten.] A pimp; a male bawd; a procurer; an agent for the lust or ill designs of another.

Let him with his cap in hand,
Like a base pander, hold the chamber door
Whilst by a slave
His fairest daughter is contaminated. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Thou art the pander to her dishonour, and equally to me disloyal. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

If ever you prove false to one another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful goers between be called panders after my name. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

The sons of happy Punks, the pander's heir,
Are privileged
To clap the first, and rule the theatre. Dryden.

Thou hast confess'd thyself the conscious pandar
Of that pretended passion;
A single witness infamously known,
Against two persons of unquestion'd fame. Dryden.

My obedient honesty was made
The pander to thy lust and black ambition. Rowe.

To PA'NDER. v. a. [from the noun.] To pimp; to be subservient to lust or passion.

Proclaim no shame,
When the compulsive ardour gives the charge,
Since first itself as actively doth burn,
And reason panders will. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

To PA'NDER.* v. n. To play the part of an agent for the ill designs of another.

Excommunication serves for nothing with them but to prog and pander for fees, and display their pride. Milton, of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.

PA'NDERLY. adj. [fom pander.] Pimping; pimplike.

Oh you panderly rascals! there's a conspiracy against me. Shakspeare, M. Wives Of Windsor

PANDICULA'TION. n. s. [pandiculans, Lat.] The restlessness, stretching, and uneasiness that usually accompany the cold fits of an intermitting fever.

Windy spirits, for want of a due volatilization, produce in the nerves a pandiculation, or oscitation, or stupor, or cramp in the muscles. Floyer on the Humours.

PANDO'RE.* n. s. [πανδοῦρα, Gr.] A musical instrument of the lute kind; of which bandore seems to be a corruption. See BANDORE.

The cythron, the pandore, and the theorbo strike. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 4.

PANE.† n. s. [paneau, French. Su. Goth. paena, cudere, planare. Serenius.]

1. A square of glass.

The letters appear'd reverse through the pane,
But in Stella's bright eyes they were plac'd right again. Swift.

The face of Eleanor owes more to that single pane than to all the glasses she ever consulted. Pope, Lett.

2. A piece mixed in variegated works with other pieces; "a pane of cloth." Barret.

Him all repute
For his device in handsoming a suit,
To judge of lace, pink, panes, and print, and plait,
Of all the court to have the best conceit. Donne.

PA'NED.* adj. [from pane.] Variegated; composed of small squares, as a counterpane usually is.

I have seen the king come sodainly thither in a maske with a dozen maskers, all in garments like sheparde, made of fine cloathe of gold and fine crimson satten paned. Cavendish, Life of Card. Wolsey.

Altar clothes — of blewe bawdkyn pained with red velvette. Direct. in Warton's Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 339.

My hooded cloak, long stocking, and pan'd hose. Massinger, Gr. Duke of Florence.

PANEGY'RICK. n. s. [panegyrique, Fr. πανήγυρις.] An eulogy; an encomiastick piece.

The Athenians met at the sepulchres of those slain at Marathon, and there made panegyricks upon them. Stillingfleet.

That which is a satyr to other men must be a panegyrick to your lordship. Dryden.

As he continues the exercises of these eminent virtues, he may be one of the greatest men that our age has bred; and leave materials for a panegyrick, not unworthy the pen of some future Pliny. Prior.

To chase our spleen, when themes like these increase,
Shall panegyric reign, and censure cease. Young.

PANEGY'RICAL.* } adj. [panegyrique, Fr.] Encomi-
PANEGY'RICK. } astick; containing praise.

Some of his odes are panegyrical, others moral, the rest jovial, or, if I may so call them, bacchanalian. Dryden, Pref. to Sylvæ.

In his panegyrical descriptions, he has seldom descended lower than the center of their hearts. Orrery on Swift, p. 117.

PANEGY'RIS.* n. s. [πανήγυρις, Gr.] A festival; a publick meeting. Milton follows the Greek form of the word, panegury.

After another persuasive method, at set and solemn paneguries, in theatres, porches, or what other place or way. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

Rejoicing especially was the practice, on the more solemn and festival performances; at publick sacrifice, which they called panegyres; a meeting of a side of a county, a province. Stukely, Palæograph Sacra, p. 8.

Will there not open a glorious scene, when God (to use St. Paul's words) shall celebrate the grand panegyris? Harris on the 53d Chap. of Isaiah, p. 262.

PANEGY'RIST. n. s. [from panegyrick; panegyriste, Fr.] One that writes praise; encomiast.

Add these few lines out of a far more ancient panegyrist in the time of Constantine the great. Camden.

To PA'NEGYRIZE.* v. a. [πανηγυρίζω, Gr.] To commend highly; to bestow great praise upon.

Is not our royal founder already panegyrized by all the Universities? Evelyn, Pref.

Their mode of panegyrising their deceased benefactors seems rather to have been a kind of dramatick representation of their services, than a rhetorical description of them. Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 4.

Gower, Chaucer, and Lydgate, are panegyrised with great propriety. Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 224.

PA'NEL. n. s. [panellum, law Latin; paneau, Fr.]

1. A square, or piece of any matter inserted between other bodies.

The chariot was all of cedar, save that the fore end had panels of sapphires, set in borders of gold. Bacon.

Maximilian, his whole history is digested into twenty-four square panels of sculpture in bas relief. Addison on Italy.

This fellow will join you together as they join wainscot; then one of you will prove a shrunk panel, and, like green timber, warp. Shakspeare, As you like it.

A bungler thus, who scarce the nail can hit,
With driving wrong will make the panel split. Swift.

2. [Panel, panellum, Lat. of the French, panne, id est, pellis; or paneau, a piece or pane in English.] A schedule or roll, containing the names of such jurors, as the sheriff provides to pass upon a trial. And empannelling a jury, is nothing but the entering them into the sheriff's roll or book. Cowel.

Then twelve of such as are indifferent, and are returned upon the principal panel, or the tales, are sworn to try the same, according to evidence. Hale, Hist. of England.

To PA'NEL.* v. a. [from the noun.] To form into panels: as, a panelled wainscot.

A very handsome bridge, the battlements neatly pannelled with stone. Pennant.

PA'NELESS.* adj. [pane and less.] Wanting panes of glass.

How shall I sing the various ill that waits
The careful sonneteer? or who can paint
The shifts enormous that in vain he forms
To patch his paneless window? Shenstone, Econ. P. iii.

PANG. n. s. [either from pain, or bang, Dutch, uneasy.] Extreme pain; sudden paroxysm of torment.

Say, that some lady
Hath for your love as great a pang of heart,
As you have for Olivia. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

See how the pangs of death do make him grin! Shakspeare.

Sufferance made
Almost each pang a death. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Earth trembled from her entrails, as again
In pangs; and nature gave a second groan. Milton, P. L.

Juno, pitying her disastrous fate,
Sends Iris down, her pangs to mitigate. Denham.

My son advance
Still in new impudence, new ignorance.
Success let others teach, learn thou from me
Pangs without birth, and fruitless industry. Dryden.

I will give way
To all the pangs and fury of despair. Addison.

I saw the hoary traitor
Grin in the pangs of death, and bite the ground. Addison.

Ah! come not, write not, think not once of me,
Nor share one pang of all I felt for thee. Pope.

To PANG.† v. a. [from the noun.] To torment cruelly.

If fortune divorce
It from the bearer; 'tis a sufferance panging,
As soul and bodies parting. Shakspeare.

I grieve myself
To think, when thou shalt be disedg'd by her,
Whom now thou tir'st on, how thy memory
Will then be pang'd by me. Shakspeare.

A kind word that would make another lover's heart dance for joy, pangs poor Will. Addison, Lov. No. 39.

PA'NICAL.† } adj. [πανικὸς, Gr. πανικὸ, φόβος, from PA'NICK. } Pan, "lieutenant-general of Bacchus in his Indian expedition; where, being encompassed in a valley with an army of enemi superiour to them in number, he advised the god to order his men in the night to give a general shout, which so surprized the opposite army, that they immediately fled from their camp: whence it came to pass, that all sudden fears, impressed upon men's spirits without any just reason, were called, by the Greeks and Romans, panick terrours." Potter, Antiq. of Greece, (from Polyænus's Stratagems,) vol. 2. b. 3. ch. 9.] Violent without cause, applied to fear.

The sudden stir and panical fear, when chanticleer was carried away by reynard. Camden, Rem.

Which many respect to be but a panick terror, and men do fear, they justly know not what. Brown, Vulg. Err.

I left the city in a panick fright;
Lions they are in council, lambs in fight. Dryden.

Pa'nick.✝ n. s. A sudden fright without cause. Bullokar.

There are many panicks in mankind, besides merely that of fear. Ld. Shaftesbury.

Pa'nnade. n. s. The curvet of a horse. Ainsworth.

Pa'nnage.* n. s. [pannagium, low Lat. panage, Fr.] Food that swine feed on in the woods, as mast of beech, acorns, &c. which some have called pawnes. It is also the money taken by the agistors for the food of hogs with the mast of the king's forest. Cowel.

Acorns, which are included in the name of mast, are the chief of those things which the ancient laws call pannage. Gibson's Codex.

Pa'nnel. n. s. [panneel, Dutch; paneau, French.] A kind of rustick saddle.

A pannel and wanty, pack-saddle and ped,
With line to fetch litter, and halters for hed. Tusser.

His strutting ribs on both sides show'd,
Like furrows he himself had plow'd;
For underneath the skirt of pannel,
'Twixt every two there was a channel. Hudibras.

Pa'nnel. n. s. The stomach of a hawk. Ainsworth.

Pannella'tion.* n. s. [from panel.] Act of empannelling a jury.

They in the said pannellation did put Rich. Wotton, — and other privileged persons, which were not wont anciently to be impannelled. A. Wood, Ann. Univ. Ox. in 1516.

Pa'nnicle. } Pa'nnick. } n. s. [panicum, Lat.] A plant.

The pannicle is a plant of the millet kind, differing from that, by the disposition of the flowers and seeds, which, of this, grow in a close thick spike: it is sowed in several parts of Europe, in the fields, as corn for the sustenance of the inhabitants; it is frequently used in particular places of Germany to make bread. Miller.

September is drawn with a chearful countenance; in his left hand a handful of millet, oats, and pannicle. Peacham.

Pannick affords a soft demulcent nourishment. Arbuthnot.

Pa'nnier. n. s. [panier, French.] A basket; a wicker vessel, in which fruit, or other things, are carried on a horse.

The worthless brute
Now turns a mill, or drags a loaded life,
Beneath two panniers, and a baker's wife. Dryden.

We have resolved to take away their whole club in a pair of panniers, and imprison them in a cupboard. Addison.

Pa'nnikel.* n. s. [pannicula, Ital. pannicle, Fr.] The brain-pan; the skull. Obsolete.

To him he turned, and with rigour fell
Smote him so rudely on the pannikell,
That to the chin he cleft his head in twaine.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. v. 23.

Pa'noply.✝ n. s. [πανοπλία.] Complete armour.

In perfect silver glistening panoply
They ride, the army of the Highest God.
More, Song of the Soul, (ed. 1642,) P. i. p. 43.

In arms they stood
Of golden panoply, refulgent host!
Soon banded. Milton, P. L.

We had need to take the Christian panoply, to put on the whole armour of God. Ray on the Creation.

Panora'ma.* n. s. [panorama, French; "terme nouveau," as Morin observes; from the Gr. πᾶν, all, the whole, and ὅραμα, a view.] A large circular painting, having no apparent beginning or end, from the centre of which the beholder views distinctly the several objects of the representation.

Panso'phical.* adj. [from pansophy.] Aiming or pretending to know every thing.

It were to be wished indeed, that it were done into Latin,— for the humbling of many conceited enthusiasts and pansophical pretenders.
Worthington, Lett. to Hartlib, (1660,) p. 231.

You told me, you would take notice of Dr. Cowley's design of a pansophical college. Ibid. p. 269.

PA'NSOPHY.* n. s. [πᾶν and σοφια, Gr.] Universal wisdom. This old word has lately been revived.

The precepts of pansophy ought to contain nothing in them, but what is worth our serious knowledge.
Hartlib, Reform. of Schools, (1642,) p. 43.

The French philosophers affect a dogmatical manner, the reverse of true philosophy; a sort of pansophy, or universality of command over the opinions of men, which can only be supported by the arts of deception. Boothby on Burke, p. 265.

Pansy. n. s. A flower. See Pancy.

To PANT. v. n. [panteler, old Fr.]

1. To palpitate; to beat as the heart in sudden terrour, or after hard labour.

Yet might her piteous heart be seen to pant and quake. Spenser.

Below the bottom of the great abyss,
There where one centre reconciles all things,
The world's profound heart pants. Crashaw.

2. To have the breast heaving, as for want of breath.

Pluto pants for breath from out his cell,
And opens wide the grinning jaws of hell. Dryden.

Miranda will never have her eyes swell with fatness, or pant under a heavy load of flesh, till she has changed her religion. Law.

3. To play with intermission.

The whispering breeze
Pants on the leaves, and dies upon the trees. Pope.

4. To long; to wish earnestly: with after or for.

They pant after the dust of the earth, on the head of the poor. Amos, ii. 7.

Who pants for glory, finds but short repose,
A breath revives him, and a breath o'erthrows. Pope.

Pant. n. s. [from the verb.] Palpitation; motion of the heart.

Leap thou, attire and all,
Through proof of harness, to my heart, and there
Ride on the pants triumphing. Shakspeare.

Pa'ntable.* n. s. A corruption of pantofle; a shoe; a slipper.

What pride equal to his [the pope's] making kings kiss his pantables! Sir E. Sandys, State of Relig. (ed. 1605,) D. 2. b.

Rich pantables in ostentation shewn,
And roses worth a family. Massinger, City Madam.

Pantaloo'n.✝ n. s. [pantalon, French; "calçon, ou haut de chasse, qui tient avec le bas. Le mot nous est venu d'Italie, ou les Venetiens, qui portent de ces sortes de hauts de chasses, sont appelez par injure Pantaloni. Et ils sont ainsi appelez de saint Pantaleon, qu'ils nomment Pantalone, au lieu de Pantaleone, mot corrumpu de Pantelemone, qui signifie tout misericordieux. Ce saint etoit autrefois en grande veneration parmy eux; et plusieurs, à cause de cela, s'appeloient Pantaleoni dans leur noms de baptesme; d'où ils furent tous ensuite appelez de la sorte par les autres Italiens." Menage.]

1. A part of a man's garment, in which the breeches and stockings are all of a piece. Dr. Johnson has noticed this meaning from Sir Thomas Hanmer, with the remark of its being anciently worn. It has been of late years re-adopted. Under this meaning Dr. Johnson has also mistakenly placed the person in Shakspeare called the pantaloon, and has taken no notice of this comick character.

The French, we conquer'd once,
Now give us laws for pantaloons,
The length of breeches and the gathers. Hudibras, i. iii.

Whether the trunk-hose fancy of queen Elizabeth's days, or the pantaloon genius of our's be best. Phillips, Theat. Poet. (1675,) Pref.

2. A character in the Italian comedy; a buffoon in the pantomimes of modern times: so called from the close dress which he usually wears.

The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon,
With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side.
Shakspeare, As you like it.

There are four standing characters, which enter into every piece that comes on the stage; the doctor, harlequin, pantalone, and Coviello. — Pantalone is generally an old cully, and Coviello a sharper. Addison, Remarks on Italy.

Pa'nter.✻ n. s. [from pant.] One who pants.

Swiftly the gentle charmer flies,
And to the tender grief soft air applies,
Which, warbling mystic sounds,
Cements the bleeding panter's wounds.
Congreve, Ode on Mrs. Arab. Hunt's Singing.

Pa'nter.✻ n. s. [painter, Irish, a net; paintealim, to ensnare. Lye.] A net. Obsolete.

To catche in his panters
These damosels and bachilers,
Love will none othir birdis catche.
Chaucer, Rom. R. ver. 1621.

Pa'ntess. n. s. [dyspnœa.] The difficulty of breathing in a hawk. Ainsworth.

Panthe'ist.✻ n. s. [πᾶν and θεός, Gr.] One who confounds God with the universe; a name given to the followers of Spinosa. See Pantheistick.

Panthei'stick.✻ adj. Confounding God with the universe.

Let any one but seriously consider the pantheistick system, whether it be not as wild enthusiasm as ever was invented and published to the world. It supposes God and nature, or God and the whole universe, to be one and the same substance, one universal being; insomuch that men's souls are only modifications of the divine substance: from whence it follows, that what men will, God wills also; and what they say, God says; and what they do, God does. Was there ever any raving enthusiast that discovered greater extravagance? This doctrine first owed its birth to pagan darkness, and revived afterwards among the Jewish cabbalists: from thence it was handed down to Spinosa, who was originally a Jew; and from him it descended to the author or authors of the Pantheisticon; who, while they are themselves the greatest visionaries in nature, yet scruple not to charge the Christian world with enthusiasm. Waterland, Christianity Vind. Charge, (1732,) p. 44.

Panthe'on.† n. s. [πάνθειον.] A temple of all the gods.

The ancient figure and ornaments of the pantheon have been changed. Addison on Italy.

Pa'nther. n. s. [πανθήρ, panthera, Lat. panthere, Fr.] A spotted wild beast; a pard.

An it please your majesty,
To hunt the panther and the hart with me,
With horn and hound. Shakspeare.

Pan, or the universal, is painted with a goat's face, about his shoulders a panther's skin. Peacham.

The panther's speckled hide,
Flow'd o'er his armour with an easy pride. Pope.

Pa'ntile.† n. s. A gutter tile. See Pentile.

It is impossible for people to receive any great benefit from letters, where they are obliged to go to a shard, or an oyster-shell, for information; and where knowledge is confined to a pantile. Bryant, Analys. Anc. Myth. iii. 126.

Pa'nting.✻ n. s. [from pant.] Palpitation.

If I am to lose by sight the soft pantings, which I have always felt, when I heard your voice; pull out these eyes, before they lead me to be ungrateful. Tatler.

Pa'ntingly. adv. [from panting.] With palpitation.

She heav'd the name of father
Pantingly forth, as if it prest her heart. Shakspeare.

Pa'ntofle.† n. s. [pantoufle, French; pantofula, Italian. "Optimè Wachter à nostro toffel, idem, et want, theca." Serenius. Dr. Jamieson prefers the etymon given by Schilter: "Germ. bantoffel; Alem. bain-tofel, from bain, ban, the foot, and tofel, a table:" "Propriè notat tabulam pedibus suppositam, quibus utebatur antiquitas."] A slipper.

What pains doth that good holy father take, to lift up his foot so oft to have his pantofle kissed! Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Serm. (1587,) p. 377.

Melpomene has on her feet, her high cothurn or tragick pantofles of red velvet and gold, beset with pearls. Peacham.

PA'NTOMIME.† n. s. [πᾶς and μῖμος; pantomime, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — The word seems not to have been anglicised very early in the seventeenth century. Dr. Johnson's earliest example is from Hudibras. Bacon and Ben Jonson use the Latin form, pantomimi. "There be certain pantomimi, that will represent the voices of players." Nat. Hist. Cent. 3. No. 240. "After the manner of the old pantomimi, they dance over a distracted comedy of love." Masque of Love's Triumph, &c. 1630.]

1. One who has the power of universal mimickry; one who expresses his meaning by mute action; a buffoon.

Not that I think those pantomimes,
Who vary action with the times,
Are less ingenious in their art,
Than those who duly act one part. Hudibras

2. A scene; a tale exhibited, only in gesture and dumb-shew.

He put off the representation of pantomimes till late hours on market-days. Arbuthnot.

Pa'ntomime.✻ adj. Representing only in gesture and dumb shew.

A pantomime dance may frequently answer the same purpose; and, by representing some adventure in love or war, may seem to give sense and meaning to music, which might not otherwise appear to have any.

A. Smith, on the Imit. Arts, P. ii.

PANTOMI'MICAL.* } adj. [from pantomime.] Representing only by gesture or dumb shew.
PANTOMI'MICK. }

PA'RABLE. n. s. [παραβολή; parabole, Fr.] A similitude; a relation under which something else is figured.

Balaam took up his parable, and said. Numb. xxiii. 7.

In the parable of the talents, our Saviour plainly teacheth us, that men are rewarded according to the improvements they make. Nelson.

What is thy fulsome parable to me?
My body is from all diseases free. Dryden.

To Pa'rable. v. a. [from the noun.] To represent by a parable.

That was chiefly meant, which by the ancient sages was thus parabled. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. i. 6.

PARA'BOLA. n. s. [Latin.]

The parabola is a conick section arising from a cone's being cut by a plane parallel to one of its sides, or parallel to a plane that touches one side of the cone. Harris.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are now, at the same distances from the sun, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles as they do, but have moved in hyperbolas or parabolas, or in ellipses very excentrick. Bentley, Serm.

PARABO'LICAL. } adj. [parabolique, Fr. from pa-
PARABO'LICK. } rable.]

1. Expressed by parable or similitude.

Such from the text decry the parabolical exposition of Cajetan. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The scheme of these words is figurative, as being a parabolical description of God's vouchsafing to the world the invaluable blessing of the gospel by the similitude of a king. South.

2. Having the nature or form of a parabola. [from parabola.]

The pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white, but riseth up a hillock above its convexity, and is of an hyperbolical or parabolical figure. Ray.

The incident ray will describe, in the refracting medium, the parabolick curve. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

PARABO'LICALLY. adv. [from parabolical.]

1. By way of parable or similitude.

These words, notwithstanding parabolically intended, admit no literal inference. Brown. Vulg. Err.

2. In the form of a parabola.

PARA'BOLISM. n. s. In algebra, the division of the terms of an equation, by a known quantity that is involved or multiplied in the first term. Dict.

PARA'BOLOID. n. s. [παραβολὴ and εἶδος.] A paraboliform curve in geometry, whose ordinates are supposed to be in subtriplicate, subquadruplicate, &c. ratio of their respective abscissæ: There is another species; for if you suppose the parameter, multiplied into the square of the abscissa, to be equal to the cube of the ordinate; then the curve is called a semicubical paraboloid. Harris.

PARACE'LSIAN.* n. s. A physician who follows the practice of Paracelsus. Bullokar.

The Paracelsians do use to give their patients, in this case, a kind of gentle vomit. Ferrand on Love Melancholy, p. 348.

PARACE'LSIAN * adj. Denoting the medical practice of Paracelsus.

Joining the Galenical and Paracelsian physick together, making use of them both as occasion serves.

Hakewill on Providence, p. 245.

If that the Paracelsian crew
The virtues of this liquor knew,
Their endless toil they would give o'er,
And never use extractions more.

Nabbes, Song on Strong Beer, Poems, (1639.)

PARACENTE'SIS. n. s. [παρακένθησις, παρακεντέω, to pierce; paracentese, Fr.] That operation, whereby any of the venters are perforated to let out any matter; as tapping in a tympany. Quincy.

PARACE'NTRICAL. } adj. [παρὰ and κέντρον.] Deviating
PARACE'NTRICK. } from circularity.

Since the planets move in the elliptick orbits, in one of whose foci the sun is, and, by a radius from the sun, describe equal areas in equal times, we must find out a law for the paracentrical motion that may make the orbits elliptick.

Cheyne, Philos. Prin.

PA'RACLETE.* n. s. [παράκλητος, Gr. This word was early used in English, in the general sense of an advocate.]

1. The title of the Holy Ghost; the intercessor, by way of distinction.

Whereas we know not what we should pray for as we ought, the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered; and he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God. From which intercession especially I conceive he hath the name of the paraclete given him by Christ.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 8.

Immortal honour, endless fame,
Attend the Almighty Father's name:
The Saviour Son be glorify'd,
Who for lost man's redemption dy'd:
And equal adoration be,
Eternal Paraclete, to thee. Dryden, Veni Creator Spiritus.

2. Any advocate or intercessor.

Bragging Winchester, the pope's paraclete in Englande, that is mayster of the stewes at London.

Bale on the Rev. P. iii. (1550,) B. b. 5.

He strengtheneth that conceit — of the paraclete; by whom if he mean Montanus the arch-heretick, we need not much envy the cardinal for raising up so worshipful a patron of his purgatory. Abp. Usher, Answ. to the Jesuit Malone, p. 124.

PARA'DE.† n. s. [parade, Fr. parata, paratura, low Lat. ornaments. Our word was probably not admitted into use before the middle of the seventeenth century. Milton's is the earliest of Dr. Johnson's examples. Bishop Taylor writes it parada. "Nor may this be called an histrionike parada, or stagely visard." Artif. Handsomeness, ed. 1656, p. 168.]

1. Shew; ostentation.

He is not led forth as to a review, but as to a battle; nor adorned for parade, but execution. Granville.

Be rich; but of your wealth make no parade,
At least before your master's debts are paid. Swift.

2. Procession; assembly of pomp.

The rites perform'd, the parson paid,
In state return'd the grand parade. Swift.

3. Military order.

The cherubim stood arm'd
To their night-watches in warlike parade. Milton, P. L.

4. Place where troops draw up to do duty and mount guard.

The place of trumpets and kettle-drums, of horse and foot guards, the parade. Warburton, Lett. to Hurd, L. 60.

5. Guard; posture of defence.

Accustom him to make judgement of men by their inside, which often shews itself in little things, when they are not in parade, and upon their guard. Locke on Education.

6. A publick walk.

To PARA'DE.* v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To go about in military procession.

I hate that drum's discordant sound,
Parading round and round and round. Scott of Amwell.

To PARA'DE.* v. a. To exhibit in a shewy or ostentatious manner.

PA'RADIGM.† n. s. [παράδειγμα, Gr. paradigme, Fr.] Example; model.

The archetypal paradigm, the idea of ideas, or form of forms.

More, Song of the Soul, (Notes,) p. 367.

PARADIGMA'TICAL.* adj. [from paradigm.] Exemplary.

Those virtues that put away quite and extinguish the first motions, are paradigmatical, that is, virtues that make us answer to the paradigm or idea of virtues exactly, viz. the intellect of God. More, Song of the Soul, (Notes,) p. 370.

To PARADI'GMATIZE.* v. a. [from paradigm.] To set forth as a model or example.

There is no one question concerning any line in those books so paradigmatized by you, or in any piece of divinity wherein I understand aught, but you or any man shall for the least asking have the full sense of your servant, H. Hammond.

Hammond to Cheynel, Works, i. 197.

PA'RADISE.† n. s. [παράδεισος, Gr. paradise, Sax. paradise, Fr. "Παράδεισος significat, 1. hortum apud Xenophontem, vel vivarium, et viridarium; 2. κατ' ἐξοχὴν, hortum illum Eden, Gen. ii. 3. beatam gloriæ Dei sedem. — Vox est, ut Pollux verè dicit, Persica; quandam et Hebræi usurpant, ut Neh. ii. 8. Eccles. ii. 5. Sed Græci usu hanc vocem suam fecerunt." Poli Synops. Crit. in Luc. xxiii. 43.]

1. The blissful regions, in which the first pair was placed.

Longer in that paradise to dwell,
The law I gave to nature him forbids. Milton, P. L.

2. Any place of felicity.

Consideration, like an angel, came,
And whipt the offending Adam out of him,
Leaving his body as a paradise,
T' envelope and contain celestial spirits. Shakspeare.

If ye should lead her into a fool's paradise,
It were very gross behaviour. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Why, nature, bower the spirit of a fiend
In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh. Shakspeare.

The earth
Shall all be paradise, far happier place,
Than this of Eden, and far happier days. Milton, P. L.

3. A place to walk in. See Parvis.

Paradisi'acal. adj. [from paradise.] Suiting paradise; making paradise.

The antients express the situation of paradisiacal earth in reference to the sea. Burnet, Th. of the Earth.

Such a mediocrity of heat would be so far from exalting the earth to a more happy and paradisiacal state, that it would turn it to a barren wilderness. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

The summer is a kind of heaven, when we wander in a paradisiacal scene, among groves and gardens; but at this season, we are like our poor first parents, turned out of that agreeable though solitary life, and forced to look about for more people to help to bear our labours, to get into warmer houses, and hive together in cities. Pope.

Paradi'sean.* } adj. [from paradise.] Paradisiacal.
Paradi'sian. } Not now in use.

Life's grapes, those paradisean clusters.
J. Hall, Poems, (1646,) p. 73.

What the heathen poets recount of the happiness of the golden age, sprung from some tradition they received of the paradisian fare. Evelyn.

PA'RADOX. n. s. [paradoxe, Fr. παράδοξ☉.] A tenet contrary to received opinion: an assertion contrary to appearance; a position in appearance absurd.

A glosse there is to colour that paradox, and make it appear in shew not to be altogether unreasonable. Hooker.

You undergo too strict a paradox,
Striving to make an ugly deed look fair. Shakspeare.

'Tis an unnatural paradox in the doctrine of causes, that evil should proceed from goodness. Holyday.

In their love of God, men can never be too affectionate. It is as true, though it may seem a paradox, that in their hatred of sin, men may be sometimes too passionate. Sprat.

'Tis not possible for any man in his wits, though never so much addicted to paradoxes, to believe otherwise, but that the whole is greater than the part; that contradictions cannot be both true; that three and three make six; that four is more than three. Wilkins.

Parado'xical. adj. [from paradox.]

1. Having the nature of a paradox.

What hath been every where opinioned by all men, is more than paradoxical to dispute. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Strange it is, how the curiosity of men, that have been active in the instruction of beasts, among those many paradoxical and unheard-of imitations, should not attempt to make one speak. Brown, Vulg. Err.

These will seem strange and paradoxical to one that takes a prospect of the world. Norris.

2. Inclined to new tenets, or notions contrary to received opinions.

Parado'xically. adv. [from paradox.] In a paradoxical manner; in a manner contrary to received opinions.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. iii. 54.

4. A match for trial of excellence.

Minerva did the challenge not refuse;
But deign'd with her the paragon to make.
Spenser, Muiopotmos.

Then did he set her by that snowy one,
Like the true saint beside the image set,
Of both their beauties to make paragone, trial,
And trial, whether should the honor get.
Spenser, F. Q. v. iii. 24.

To Pa'ragon. v. a. [paragonner, Fr.]

1. To compare; to parallel; to mention in competition.

The picture of Pamela, in little form, he wore in a tablet, purposing to paragon the little one with Artesia's length, not doubting but even, in that little quantity, the excellency of that would shine through the weakness of the other. Sidney.

I will give thee bloody teeth,
If thou with Cæsar paragon again
My man of men. Shakspeare.

Proud seat
Of Lucifer, so by allusion call'd
Of that bright star to Satan paragon'd. Milton, P. L.

Who made the spider parallels design,
Sure as De Moivre, without rule or line? Pope.

2. Line on the globe marking the latitude.

3. Direction conformable to that of another line.

Dissentions, like small streams, are first begun,
Scarce seen they rise, but gather as they run;
So lines, that from their parallel decline,
More they proce·d, the more they still disjoin. Garth.

4. Resemblanc·xtr· conformity continued through many particulars; ·keness.

Such a resemblance of all parts,
Life, death, age, fortune, nature, arts;
She lights her torch at theirs to tell,
And shew the world this parallel. Denham.
'Twixt earthly females and the moon,
All parallels exactly run. Swift, Miscell.

5. Comparison made.

The parallel holds in the gainlesness, as well as laboriousness of the work. Decay of Chr. Piety.

A reader cannot be more rationally entertained, than by comparing and drawing a parallel between his own private character, and that of other persons. Addison.

6. Any thing resembling another.

Thou ungrateful brute, if thou wouldst find thy parallel, go to hell, which is both the region and the emblem of ingratitude. South, Serm.

For works like these, let deathless journals tell,
None but thyself can be thy parallel. Pope.

To Pa'rallel. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place, so as always to keep the same direction with another line.

The Azores having a middle situation between these continents and that vast tract of America, the needle seemeth equally distracted by both, and diverting unto neither, doth parallel and place itself upon the true meridian. Brown.

2. To keep in the same direction; to level.

The loyal sufferers abroad became subjected to the worst effect of banishment, and even there expelled and driven from their flights; so paralleling in their exigencies the most immediate objects of that monster's fury. Fell.

His life is parallel'd
Ev'n with the stroke and line of his great justice. Shakspeare.

In the fire, the destruction was so swift, sudden, vast and miserable, as nothing can parallel in story. Dryden.

5. To compare.

I paralleled more than once, our idea of substance, with the Indian philosopher's he-knew-not-what, which supported the tortoise. Locke.

Pa'rallelable.* adj. [from parallel.] That may be equalled.

Our duty is seconded with such an advantage, as is not parallelable in all the world beside. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 277.

Pa'ralleless.* adj. [parallel and less.] Not to be paralleled; matchless.

Tell me, gentle boy,
Is she not paralleless? is not her breath
Sweet as Arabian winds when fruits are ripe?
Beaum. and Fl. Philaster.

Pa'rallelism.† n. s. [parallelisme, French; from parallel.]

1. State of being parallel.

The parallelism and due proportionated inclination of the axis of the earth. More, Divine Dialogues.

Speaking of the parallelism of the axis of the earth, I demand, whether it be better to have the axis of the earth steady and perpetually parallel to itself, or to have it carelessly tumble this way and that way. Ray on the Creation.

2. Resemblance; comparison.

In this wild tale, there are circumstances enough of general analogy, if not of peculiar parallelism, to recal to my memory the following beautiful description in the manuscript romance of Syr Launfal. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. Dissert. p. liii.

From a close parallelism of thought and incident, it is clear that either Browne's pastoral imitates Fletcher's play, or the play the pastoral. Warton, Notes on Milton's Sm. Poems.

Pa'rallelly.* adv. [from parallel.] With parallelism. Scott.

The bony matter of the teeth,—consists of a number of layers, which are disposed parallelly in respect to the pulp and to each other. Outlines of Anatomy, p. 12.

PARALLE'LOGRAM. n. s. [παράλληλος and γράμμα; parallelograme, Fr.] In geometry, a right lined quadrilateral figure, whose opposite sides are parallel and equal. Harris.

The experiment we made in a loadstone of a parallelogram, or long figure, wherein only inverting the extremes, as it came out of the fire, we altered the poles. Brown.

We may have a clear idea of the area of a parallelogram, without knowing what relation it bears to the area of a triangle. Watts, Logick.

Parallelogra'mical. adj. [from parallelogram.] Having the properties of a parallelogram.

Parallelopi'ped. n. s. [from parallelopipede, Fr.] A solid figure contained under under six parallelograms, the opposites of which are equal and parallel; or it is a prism, whose base is a parallelogram: it is always triple to a pyramid of the same base and height. Harris.

Two prisms alike in shape I tied so, that their axes and opposite sides being parallel, they composed a parallelopiped. Newton, Opticks.

Crystals that hold lead are yellowish, and of a cubick or parallelopiped figure. Woodward.

PA'RALOGISM. n. s. [παραλογισμος; paralogisme, Fr.] A false argument.

That because they have not a bladder of gall, like those we observe in others, they have no gall at all, is a paralogism not admittable, a fallacy that dwells not in a cloud, and needs not the sun to scatter it. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Modern writers, making the drachma less than the denarius, others equal, have been deceived by a double paralogism, in standing too nicely upon the bare words of the ancients, without examining the things. Arbuthnot.

If a syllogism agree with the rules given for the construction of it, it is called a true argument: if it disagree with these rules, it is a paralogism, or false argument. Watts.

PA'RALOGY. n. s. False reasoning.

That Methuselah was the longest liver of all the posterity of Adam, we quietly believe; but that he must needs be so, is perhaps below paralogy to deny. Brown.

PARA'LYSIS. n. s. [παράλυσις, Gr. paralysie, Fr.] A palsy.

To PA'RALYSE.* v. a. [paralyser, Fr.] To strike as it were with the palsy; to render useless. A modern word.

Or has taxation chill'd the aguish land,
And paralysed Britannia's bounteous hand?
London Cries, or Pictures of Tumult, &c. (1805,) p. 39.

PARALY'TICAL. } adj. [from paralysis; paralytique,
PARALY'TICK. } Fr.] Palsied; inclined to palsy.

Nought shall it profit, that the charming fair,
Angelick, softest work of heaven, draws near
To the cold shaking paralytick hand,
Senseless of beauty. Prior.

The difficulties of breathing and swallowing, without any tumour after long diseases, proceed commonly from a resolution or paralytical disposition of the parts. Arbuthnot.

PARALY'TICK.* n. s. One struck by a palsy.

The paralytick was with much labour let down through the roof to our Saviour's cure. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 77.

If a nerve be cut or streightly bound, that goes to any muscle, that muscle shall immediately lose its motion; which is the case of paralyticks. Derham.

PARA'METER. n. s. The latus rectum of a parabola, is a third proportional to the abscissa and any ordinate; so that the square of the ordinate is always equal to the rectangle under the parameter and abscissa: but, in the ellipsis and hyperbola, it has a different proportion. Harris.

PA'RAMOUNT. adj. [per and mount.]

1. Superiour; having the highest jurisdiction: as lord paramount, the chief of the seignory: with to.

Leagues within the state are ever pernicious to monarchies; for they raise an obligation, paramount to obligation of sovereignty, and make the king, tanquam unus ex nobis. Bacon.

The dogmatist's opinioned assurance is paramount to argument. Glanville.

If all power be derived from Adam, by divine institution, this is a right antecedent and paramount to all government; and therefore the positive laws of men cannot determine that which is itself the foundation of all law. Locke.

Mankind, seeing the apostles possessed of a power plainly paramount to the powers of all the known beings, whether angels or dæmons, could not question their being inspired by God. West on the Resurrection.

2. Eminent; of the highest order.

John a Chamber was hanged upon a gibbet raised a stage higher in the midst of a square gallows, as a traitor paramount; and a number of his chief accomplices were hanged upon the lower story round him. Bacon.

PA'RAMOUNT. n. s. The chief.

In order came the grand infernal peers,
Midst came their mighty paramount. Milton, P. L.

PA'RAMOUR.† n. s. [par and amour, Fr. "Par amour I loved her. Chaucer, C. T. ver. 1157. This is a genuine old expression. See Froissart, v. i. c. 196. Il aima adonc par amours, et depuis espousa, madame Ysabelle de Juillers. And Boccace, Decam. x. 7. per amore amiato. From hence paramour, or paramours, in one word, was used vulgarly to signify love. Tyrwhitt.]

1. A lover or wooer.

Upon the floor
A lovely bevy of fair ladies sat,
Courted of many a jolly paramour,
The which them did in modestwise amate,
And each one sought his lady to aggrate. Spenser, F. Q.

She doted upon their paramours. Ezek. xxiii. 20.

No season then for her
To wanton with the sun her lusty paramour. Milton, Ode.

2. A mistress. It is obsolete in both senses, though not inelegant or unmusical.

Shall I believe
That unsubstantial death is amorous,
And that the lean abhorred monster keeps
Thee here in dark to be his paramour? Shakspeare.

PA'RANYMPH. n. s. [παρὰ and νυμφή; paranymphe, Fr.]

1. A brideman; one who leads the bride to her marriage.

The Timnian bride
Had not so soon preferr'd
Thy paranymph, worthless to thee compar'd,
Successor in thy bed. Milton, S. A.

2. One who countenances or supports another.

Sin hath got a paranymph and a solicitor, a warrant and an advocate. Bp. Taylor, Worthy Communicant.

PA'RAPEGM. n. s. [παράπηγμα, παραπήγνυμι.] A brazen table fixed to a pillar, on which laws and proclamations were anciently engraved: also a table set up publickly, containing an account of the rising and setting of the stars, eclipses of the sun and moon, the seasons of the year, &c. whence astrologers give this name to the tables, on which they draw figures according to their art. Phillips.

Our forefathers, observing the course of the sun, and marking certain mutations to happen in his progress through the zodiac, set them down in their parapegms, or astronomical canons. Brown, Vulg. Err.

PA'RAPET. n. s. [parapet, Fr. parapetto, Italian.] A wall breast high.

There was a wall or parapet of teeth set in our mouth to restrain the petulancy of our words. B. Jonson.

PARAPHIMO'SIS. n. s. [παραφίμωσις; paraphimose, Fr.] A disease when the præputium cannot be drawn over the glans.

PARAPHERNA'LIA.† n. s. [Lat. paraphernaux, Fr.] Goods in the wife's disposal. Dr. Johnson. – Rather, goods which a wife takes with her, or possesses, besides her fixed dowry, παρὰ τὴν φέρνην, Greek.

In one particular instance the wife may acquire a property in some of her husband's goods, which shall remain to her after his death, and shall not go to his executors. These are called her paraphernalia; which is a term borrowed from the civil law, and is derived from the Greek language, signifying something over and above her dower. Our law uses it to signify the apparel and ornaments of the wife, suitable to her rank and degree: the jewels of a peeress, usually worn by her, have been held to be paraphernalia. Blackstone.

PA'RAPHRASE. n. s. [παράφρασις; paraphrase, Fr.] A loose interpretation; an explanation in many words.

All the laws of nations were but a paraphrase upon this standing rectitude of nature, that was ready to enlarge itself into suitable determinations, upon all emergent objects and occasions. South.

In paraphrase, or translation with latitude, the author's words are not so strictly followed as his sense, and that too amplified, but not altered: such is Mr. Waller's translation of Virgil's fourth Æneid. Dryden.

To PA'RAPHRASE.† v. a. [paraphraser, Fr. παϱάφϱαζω.] To interpret with laxity of expression; to translate loosely; to explain in many words.

I could find in my heart, nay I can scarce hold from reading and paraphrasing the whole chapter to you: — but for brevity's sake, and on promise that you will at your leisure survey it, I will omit to insist on it. Hammond, Works, iv. 676.

We are put to construe and paraphrase our own words, to free ourselves from the ignorance and malice of our adversaries. Stillingfleet.

To PA'RAPHRASE.* v. n. To make a paraphrase.

What needs he paraphrase on what we mean,
We were at worst but wanton; he's obscene. Dryden.

Where translation is impracticable, they may paraphrase. — But it is intolerable, that, under a pretence of paraphrasing and translating, a way should be suffered of treating authors to a manifest disadvantage. Felton on the Classicks.

PA'RAPHRAST. n. s. [paraphraste, Fr. παϱαφϱαςής.] A lax interpreter; one who explains in many words.

The fittest for publick audience are such, as following a middle course between the rigor of literal translators and the liberty of paraphrasts, do, with great shortness and plainness deliver the meaning. Hooker.

The Chaldean paraphrast renders Gerah by Meath. Arbuthnot.

PARAPHRA'STICAL.† } adj. [from paraphrase.] Lax
PARAPHRA'STICK. } in interpretation; not literal; not verbal.

It is the genius, nay, the very essence of Oriental Poetry to be so very paraphrastical in itself, as not to admit of further dilatation in any modern version. Mason on Ch. Musick, p. 177.

He is sometimes too paraphrastical. Johnson, Life of West.

PARAPHRA'STICALLY.* adv. [from paraphrastical.] In a paraphrastical manner.

Touching translations, it is to be observed, that every language hath certain idioms, proverbs, and peculiar expressions of its own, which are not rendible in any other, but paraphrastically. Howell, Lett. iii. 21.

Chapman, in his translation of Homer, professes to have done it somewhat paraphrastically, and that on set purpose. Dryden, Misc. Poems, Ded. vol. 3.

PARAPHRENI'TIS. n. s. [παϱὰ and φϱενῖτις: paraphrenesie, French.]

Paraphrenitis is an inflamation of the diaphram. The symptoms are a violent fever, a most exquisite pain increased upon inspiration, by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbuthnot.

PARAQUI'TO.† n. s. A little parrot.

Come, come, you paraquito, answer me
Directly to this question that I ask. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

PA'RASANG.† n. s. [parasanga, low Lat. parasange, Fr. παϱασάγγης, Gr. "The word pharsang is ancient, and to this day continued all over the Persian dominions: it is derived from persa, and appropriated to the dialect yet used in Persia; or (which is more likely) from the Hebrew and Arabick, where the word persa signifies three miles, three of which the Jews might travel without breach of the sabbath. Pliny calls it parasanga, and makes it to be four Italian miles; which if so, it equals the German. Xenophon phrases it pharsanga, and computes it thirty furlongs or stadia, every furlong being 40 poles in length, or twenty-five spaces; so that accounting eight furlongs to an English mile, a pharsang is three miles and a half English, and two furlongs over." Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1677, p. 117.] A Persian measure of length.

To see so much difference betwixt words and deeds, so many parasangs betwixt tongue and heart! Burton, Anat. of Mel. Pref. p. 36.

Since the mind is not able to frame an idea of any space without parts, instead thereof it makes use of the common measures, which, by familiar use, in each country, have imprinted themselves on the memory; as inches and feet, or cubits and parasangs. Locke.

*PARASCE'VE. n. s. [παϱασκευή, Gr. parascévé, French.]

1. Preparation. Not in use.

Why rather, being entering into that presence, where I shall wake continually and never sleep more, do I not interpret my continual waking here, to be a parasceue and a preparation to that? Donne, Devot. (1624,) p. 373.

2. The Sabbath-eve of the Jews.

It was the parasceve, which is the Sabbath-eve. St. Mark, xv. 42. (Rhemish Translation.)

PARASCEUA'STICK.* adj. [from parasceve.] Preparatory. Not in use.

Touching the Latin and Greek, and those other learned languages, — they are the parasceuastick part of learning. Corah's Doom, (1672,) p. 128.

PA'RASITE.† n. s. [parasite, Fr. parasitus, Lat. Dr. Johnson. — From the Gr. παϱὰ, near, and σῖτος, corn. "The office of the parasiti was at first of great honour, for, by the ancient law, they were reckoned among the chief magistrates. Their office was to gather of the husbandmen the corn allotted for publick sacrifices. Their charges were defrayed by these publick revenues. The public storehouse, where they kept these fruits, was called παϱασίτιον. Diodorus the Sinopesian in Athenæus tells us, that, in every village of the Athenians, they maintained at the publick charge certain parasiti in honour of Hercules; but afterwards, to ease the commonwealth of this burden, the magistrates obliged some of the wealthier sort to take them to their tables, and entertain them at their own cost; whence this word seems in later ages to have signified a trencher-friend, a flatterer, or one that for the sake of a dinner conforms himself to every man's humour. Thus indeed Casaubon interprets that passage; but the meaning of it seems rather to be this: That whereas in former times Hercules had his parasiti, the rich men of later ages in imitation of this hero chose likewise their parasiti, though not χαϱιεςάτους such as Hercules used to have, but τοὺς κολακεύειν δυναμένους, such as would flatter them most." Potter's Antiq. of Greece, B. 2. ch. 3.] One that frequents rich tables, and earns his welcome by flattery.

He is a flatterer,
A parasite, a keeper back of death,
Who gently would dissolve the bands of life,
Which false hopes linger. Shakspeare.

Most smiling, smooth, detested parasites,
Courteous destroyers, affable wolves, meek bears,
You fools of fortune. Shakspeare.

Diogenes, when mice came about him, as he was eating, said, I see, that even Diogenes nourisheth parasites. Bacon.

Thou, with trembling fear,
Or like a fawning parasite, obey'st;
Then to thyself ascrib'st the truth foretold. Milton, P. R.

The people sweat not for their king's delight,
To enrich a pimp, or raise a parasite. Dryden.

PARASI'TICAL.† } adj. [parasitique, Fr. from para-
PARASI'TICK. } site.]

1. Flattering; wheedling.

A man whose credit would scorn to be poised with an hundred nameless fugitives, parasitical party-chapmen of the last small wares of Rome.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 331.

The bishop received small thanks for his parasitick presentation. Hakewill on Providence.

Some parasitick preachers have dared to call those martyrs, who died fighting against me. King Charles.

2. Applied to plants, which live on others.

Ivy is a parasitick plant. Miller.

PARASI'TICALLY.* adv. [from parasitical.] In a flattering manner.

The courtiers also, to applaud the fact, parasitically made him their common mark. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 177.

PA'RASITISM.* n. s. [from parasite.] The behaviour of a parasite.

Some merely reading the complexion of things, as they do men by their outsides, or as boys' poetry with a tickled faith; through such wide ears and observations crept in that parasitism on the one side, and pride and usurpation on the other, that made the house of Lancaster and the Beauforts, alias Somersets, all one. Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. p. 47.

Their high notion, we rather believe, falls as low as court parasitism; supposing all men to be servants but the king.

Milton, Obs. on the Articles of Peace.

PA'RASOL.† n. s. [Fr.] A small canopy or umbrella carried over the head, to shelter from rain and the heat of the sun. Dr. Johnson, from some dictionary, but without any example. Mr. Mason, after his manner, sneers at Dr. Johnson for confounding the parasol with the umbrella; informing us, that umbrellas against rain are of different materials and size from mere parasols, the use of which (according to their name) is only against the sun. This is true enough of the little female ornament of modern times; but Mr. Mason knew nothing of the old parasol, (for he also could find no instance of the word,) which was called an umbrella, and was of a reasonable umbrella size, we may judge, from the following examples; though certainly its use may have been intended only to guard against the sun.

Upon another part of the wall is the like figure of another great man, over whose head one officer holds a parasol, another a lamp. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 144.

While the world is all on fire about them, they journey through that torrid zone, with their mighty parasol, or umbrella, over their heads, and are all the while in the shade.

Abp. Sancroft, Serm. p. 127.

PARASYNE'XIS. n. s. In the civil law, a conventicle or unlawful meeting. Dict.

PA'RAVAIL.* adj. [Fr. per and avayler, dimittere.] Denoting the lowest tenant; or one who holdeth his fee over of another, and is called tenant paravail because it is presumed he hath profit and avail by the land. Cowel.

Let him [the pope] no longer count himself lord paramount over the princes of the world, no longer hold kings as his servants paravaile. Hooker, Disc. of Justification, (1612,) p. 47.

PA'RAVAUNT.* adv. [par avaunt, Fr.] Publickly; in front. Obsolete.

That fair one,
That in the midst was placed paravaunt,
Was she to whom that shepheard piped alone.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. x. 15.

To PA'RBOIL. v. a. [parbouiller, French.] To half boil; to boil in part.

Parboil two large capons upon a soft fire, by the space of an hour, till, in effect, all the blood be gone, Bacon.

From the sea into the ship we turn,
Like parboil'd wretches, on the coals to burn.

Donne.

Like the scum, starved men did draw
From parboil'd shoes and boots. Donne.

To PA'RBREAK.† v. n. [braecken, Teut. to vomit; braecke, nausea: par seems to be an arbitrary prefix.] To vomit. Obsolete.

And virulently disgorged,
As though ye wold parbreak. Skelton, Poems, p. 86.

To PA'RBREAK.* v. a. To eject from the stomach.

If thou findest honey, eate so much as is sufficient for thee, lest thou be over full, and parbreake it out agayne.

Prov. xxv. 16. (edit. 1569.)

PA'RBREAK. n. s. [from the verb.] Vomit. Obsolete.

Her filthy parbreak all the place defiled has. Spenser.

PA'RCEL. n. s. [parcelle, French; particula, Lat.]

1. A small bundle.

2. A part of the whole; part taken separately.

Women, Silvius, had they mark'd him
In parcels as I did, would have gone near
To fall in love with him. Shakspeare.

I drew from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage delate;
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not distinctively. Shakspeare.

An inventory, thus importing
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure,
Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household. Shakspeare.

With what face could such a great man have begged such a parcel of the crown lands, one a vast sum of money, another the forfeited estate? Davenant.

I have known pensions given to particular persons, any one of which, if divided into smaller parcels, and distributed to those who distinguish themselves by wit or learning, would answer the end. Swift.

The same experiments succeed on two parcels of the white of an egg, only it grows somewhat thicker upon mixing with an acid. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. A quantity or mass.

What can be rationally conceived in so transparent a substance as water for the production of these colours, besides the various sizes of its fluid and globular parcels. Newton.

4. A number of persons: in contempt.

This youthful parcel
Of noble batchelors stand at my bestowing. Shakspeare.

5. Any number or quantity: in contempt.

They came to this conclusion; that, unless they could, by a parcel of fair words and pretences, engage them into a confederacy, there was no good to be done. L'Estrange.

To PA'RCEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divide into portions.

If they allot and parcel out several perfections to several deities, do they not, by this, assert contradictions, making deity only to such a measure perfect? whereas a deity implies perfection beyond all measure. South.

Those ghostly kings would parcel out my power,
And all the fatness of my land devour. Dryden.

2. To make up into a mass.

What a wounding shame, that mine own servant should parcel the sum of my disgraces by addition of his envy!

Shakspeare.

PA'RCENER.† n. s. [quasi parceller, i. e. rem in parcellas dividens. Cowel.] A parcener is according to the course of the common law, or according to custom. Where a person seized in fee-simple (or fee-tail) dies, and his next heirs are two or more females, his daughters, sisters, aunts, cousins, or their representatives; in this case they shall all inherit, — and these coheirs are then called coparceners; or, for brevity, parceners only. Parceners by particular custom are where lands descend, as in gavelkind, to all the males in equal degree, as sons, brother, uncles, &c. In either of these cases, all the parceners put together make but one heir. Blackstone.

PA'RCENARY. n. s. [from parsonier, Fr.] A holding or occupying of land by more persons pro indiviso, or by joint tenants, otherwise called coparceners: for if they refuse to divide their common inheritance, and chuse rather to hold it jointly, they are said to hold in parcinarie. Cowel.

To PARCH. v. a. [from περικάιειν, says Junius; from percoquo, says Skinner; neither of them seem satisfied with their conjecture: perhaps from perustus, burnt, to perust, to parch; or perhaps from parchment, the effect of fire upon parchment being almost proverbial.] To burn slightly and superficially; to scorch; to dry up.

Hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine entrails,
That not a tear can fall? Shakspeare.

Did he so often lodge in open field
In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat,
To conquer France? Shakspeare.

Torrid heat,
And vapours as the Libyan air adust,
Began to parch that temperate clime. Milton, P. L.

I'm stupify'd with sorrow, past relief
Of tears; parch'd up and wither'd with my grief. Dryden.

Without this circular motion of our earth, one hemisphere would be condemned to perpetual cold and darkness, the other continually roasted and parched by the sun beams. Ray.

The Syrian star
With his sultry breath infects the sky;
The ground below is parch'd, the heavens above us fry. Dryden.

Full fifty years
I have endur'd the biting winter's blast,
And the severer heats of parching summer. Rowe.

The skin grows parched and dry, and the whole body lean and meagre. Blackmore.

A man distressed with thirst in the parched places of the wilderness searches every pit, but finds no water. Rogers.

To PARCH. v. n. To be scorched.

We were better parch in Africk sun,
Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes. Shakspeare.

If to prevent the acrospiring, it be thrown thin, many corns will dry and parch into barley. Mortimer.

PA'RCHEDNESS.* n. s. [from the participle parched.] State of being dried up.

A barren heath, that feeds neither cow nor horse; neither sheep nor shepherd is to be seen there; but only a waste silent solitude, and one uniform parchedness and vacuity. More, Conj. Cabb. (1653,) p. 206.

PA'RCHMENT. n. s. [parchemin, French; pergamena, Latin.] Skins dressed for the writer. Among traders, the skins of sheep are called parchment, those of calves vellum.

Is not this a lamentable thing, that the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment; that parchment, being scribbled o'er, should undo a man? Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

In the coffin, that had the books, they were found as fresh as if newly written, being written in parchment, and covered with watch candles of wax. Bacon.

Like flying shades before the clouds we shew,
We shrink like parchment in consuming flame. Dryden.

PA'RCHMENT-MAKER. n. s. [parchment and maker.] He who dresses parchment.

PA'RCITY.* n. s. [parcité, Fr. parcitas, Lat.] Sparingness. Not in use. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

PARD.† } n. s. [parð, Saxon; pardus, pardalis,
PA'RDALE. } Latin.] The leopard; in poetry, any of the spotted beasts.

The pardale swift, and the tyger cruel. Spenser, F. Q.

As fox to lambs, as wolf to heifer's calf;
As pard to the hind, or stepdame to her son. Shakspeare.

Ten brace of grey-hounds snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair,
A match for pards in flight, in grappling for the bear. Dryden.

To PA'RDON. v. a. [pardonner, French.]

1. To excuse an offender.

When I beheld you in Cilicia,
An enemy to Rome, I pardon'd you. Dryden.

2. To forgive a crime.

I will pardon all their iniquities. Jerem. xxxiii. 8.

Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong,
But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong. Dryden.

3. To remit a penalty.

That thou may'st see the difference of our spirit,
I pardon thee thy life before thou ask it. Shakspeare.

4. Pardon me, is a word of civil denial or slight apology.

Sir pardon me, it is a letter from my brother. Shakspeare.

PA'RDON. n. s. [pardon, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Forgiveness of an offender.

2. Forgiveness of a crime.

He that pleaseth great men, shall get pardon for iniquity. Ecclus. xx. 27.

A slight pamphlet about the elements of architecture, hath been entertained with some pardon among my friends. Wotton.

But infinite in pardon is my judge. Milton, P. L.

What better can we do than prostrate fall
Before him reverent, and there confess
Humbly our faults, and pardon beg with tears
Watering the ground? Milton, P. L.

There might you see
Indulgencies, dispenses, pardons, bulls,
The sport of winds. Milton, P. L.

3. Remission of penalty.

4. Forgiveness received.

A man may be safe as to his condition, but, in the mean time, dark and doubtful as to his apprehensions; secure in his pardon, but miserable in the ignorance of it; and so passing all his days in the disconsolate, uneasy vicissitudes of hopes and fears, at length go out of the world, not knowing whither he goes. South, Serm.

5. Warrant of forgiveness, or exemption from punishment.

The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never see his pardon. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

PA'RDONABLE. adj. [pardonnable, Fr. from pardon.] Venial; excusable.

That which we do being evil, is notwithstanding by so much more pardonable, by how much the exigencies of so doing, or the difficulty of doing otherwise is greater, unless this necessity or difficulty have originally risen from ourselves. Hooker.

A blind man sitting in the chimney corner is pardonable enough, but sitting at the helm he is intolerable. South.

What English readers, unacquainted with Greek or Latin, will believe me, when we confess we derive all that is pardonable in us from ancient fountains? Dryden.

PA'RDONABLENESS. n. s. [from pardonable.] Venialness; susceptibility of pardon.

Saint John's word is, all sin is transgression of the law; Saint Paul's, the wages of sin is death: put these two together, and this conceit of the natural pardonableness of sin vanishes away. Bp. Hall.

PA'RDONABLY. adv. [from pardonable.] Venially; excusably.

I may judge when I write more or less pardonably. Dryden.

PA'RDONER.† n. s. [from pardon.]

1. One who forgives another.

This is his pardon, purchas'd by such sin,
For which the pardoner himself is in. Shakspeare.

2. One of those who carried about the pope's indulgencies, and sold them to such as would buy them, against whom Luther incensed the people of Germany. Cowel.

Of his craft, fro Berwick unto Ware,
Ne was there swiche another pardonere. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

To avoyde this great travayle, it shall be best for you to saye, as the pardoners did by their pardons, and as your purgatorye priests saye, No penye, no paternoster! Confut. of N. Shaxton. (1546,) F. ii.

To PARE. v. a. [This word is reasonably deduced by Skinner from the French phrase, parer les ongles, to dress the horse's hoofs when they are shaved by the farrier: thus we first said, pare your nails; and from thence transferred the word to general use.] To cut off extremities of the surface; to cut away by little and little; to diminish. If pare be used before the thing diminished, it is followed immediately by its accusative; if it precedes the thing taken away, or agrees in the passive voice with the thing taken away, as a nominative, it then requires a particle, as away, off.

The creed of Athanasius, and that sacred hymn of glory, than which nothing doth sound more heavenly in the ears of faithful men, are now reckoned as superfluities, which we must in any case pare away, lest we cloy God with too much service. Hooker.

I have not alone
Employ'd you where high profits might come home;
But par'd my present havings to bestow
My bounties upon you. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

I am a man, whom fortune hath cruelly scratch'd.
— 'Tis too late to pare her nails now. Shakspeare.

The lion, mov'd with pity, did endure
To have his princely paws all par'd away. Shakspeare.

The king began to pare a little the privilege of clergy, ordaining that clerks convict should be burned in the hand. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Pick out of tales the mirth, but not the sin,
He pares his apple that will cleanly feed. Herbert.

Whoever will partake of God's secrets, must first look into his own, he must pare off whatsoever is amiss, and not without holiness approach to the holiest of all holies. Bp. Taylor.

All the mountains were pared off the earth, and the surface of it lay even, or in an equal convexity every where with the surface of the sea. Burnet.

The most poetical parts, which are description and images, were to be pared away, when the body was swollen into too large a bulk for the representation of the stage. Dryden.

The sword, as it was justly drawn by us, so can it scarce safely be sheathed, till the power of the great troubler of our peace be so far pared and reduced, as that we may be under no apprehensions. Atterbury.

'Twere well if she would pare her nails. Pope.

PAREGO'RICK. adj. [παρηγορικὸς, Gr.] Having the power in medicine to comfort, mollify, and assuage. Dict.

PAREGO'RICK.* n. s. A medical preparation which comforts and assuages.

It [tar-water] is of admirable use in fevers, being at the same time the surest, safest, and most effectual both paregorick and cordial. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 75.

PARE'NCHYMA. n. s. [παρέγχυμα.] A spongy or porous substance; in physick, a part through which the blood is strained for its better fermentation and perfection. Dict.

PARENCHY'MATOUS.† } adj. [from parenchyma.] Relating to the parenchyma; spongy.
PARE'NCHYMOUS. }

Ten thousand seeds of the plant, hart's tongue, hardly make the bulk of a pepper-corn. Now the covers and true body of each seed, the parenchymatous and ligneous parts of both moderately multiplied, afford an hundred thousand millions of formed atoms in the space of a pepper-corn. Grew.

The lungs, and all the other parenchymous parts of the bowels. Smith on Old Age, p. 235.

Those parts, formerly reckoned parenchymatous, are now found to be bundles of exceedingly small threads. Cheyne.

PARENE'TICAL.† } adj. [παραινετικὸς, Gr. Parenetick
PARENE'TICK. } Dr. Johnson himself, I think, has somewhere used; of parenetical he has taken no notice, which however is an old word.] Hortatory; encouraging.

I desire — that they would not conceive their own apprehensions so paranetical, as if nothing but vain jangling could be replied unto them. Potter on the Number 666, (1647,) p. 212.

In an epistle paranetical to the pope himself, S. Bernard might have leave to use allusions, and after his manner to be liberal of all that the see of Rome challenged. Bp. Bedell, Lett. p. 350.

PARE'NESIS. n. s. [παραίνεσις.] Persuasion; exhortation. Dict.

PA'RENT. n. s. [parent, Fr. parens, Latin.] A father or mother.

All true virtues are to honour true religion as their parent, and all well-ordered commonweales to love her as their chiefest stay. Hooker.

His custom was, during the warmer season of the year, to spend an hour before evening prayer in catechising; whereat the parents and older sort were wont to be present. Fell.

As a publick parent of the state,
My justice, and thy crime, requires thy fate. Dryden.

In vain on the dissembled mother's tongue
Had cunning art, and sly persuasion hung;
And real care in vain and native love
In the true parent's panting breast had strove. Prior.

PA'RENTAGE. n. s. [parentage, Fr. from parent.] Extraction; birth; condition with respect to the rank of parents.

A gentleman of noble parentage,
Of fair demeasns, youthful and nobly allied. Shakspeare.

Though man esteem thee low of parentage,
Thy father is the Eternal King. Milton, P. R.

To his levee go,
And from himself your parentage may know. Dryden.

We find him not only boasting of his parentage, as an Israelite at large, but particularizing his descent from Benjamin. Atterbury.

PARE'NTAL. adj. [from parent.] Becoming parents; pertaining to parents.

It overthrows the careful course and parental provision of nature, whereby the young ones newly excluded, are sustained by the dam. Brown, Vulg. Err.

These eggs hatched by the warmth of the sun into little worms, feed without any need of parental care. Derham.

Young ladies, on whom parental controul sits heavily, give a man of intrigue room to think, that they want to be parents. Richardson, Clarissa.

PARENTA'TION.† n. s. [from parento, Lat.] Something done or said in honour of the dead.

Let fortune this new parentation make
For hated Carthage's dire spirits' sake;
Let bloody Hannibal, and Punick ghosts,
Of this sad Roman expiation boast. May, Lucan, B. 4.

Some other ceremonies were practised, which differed not much from those used in parentations. Potter, Antiq. of Greece, ii. 18.

PARE'NTHESIS. n. s. [parenthese, Fr. παρα, ἐν and τίθημι.] A sentence so included in another sentence, as that it may be taken out, without injuring the sense of that which incloses it: being commonly marked thus, ( ).

In vain is my person excepted by a parenthesis of words, when so many are armed against me with swords. King Charles.

In his Indian relations, are contained strange and incredible accounts; he is seldom mentioned without a derogatory parenthesis, in any author. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Thou shalt be seen,
Though with some short parenthesis between,
High on the throne of wit. Dryden.

Don't suffer every occasional thought to carry you away into a long parenthesis, and thus stretch out your discourse, and divert you from the point in hand. Watts, Logick.

Parenthe'tical.† } adj. [from parenthesis.]
Parenthe'tick. }

1. Pertaining to a parenthesis.

This is a parenthetical observation of Moses himself.
Dr. Hales on Deut. xxxii. 31.

2. Using parentheses.

If Pope's temper had not led him to personality, the observation of Cleland, (whom he describes as a man of sense and of integrity, and, to be very parenthetic who was the Will Honeycomb of the Spectator's club,) in a letter to him, "that all such writings and discourses as touch no man, will mend no man," might have given the bias to his pen.
Tyers, Rhapsody on Pope, p. 33.

Parenthe'tically.* adv. [from parenthetical.] In a parenthesis.

This intelligence is certainly mentioned parenthetically.
Bryant, Observ. on Script. p. 163.

Pa'rentless.* adj. [parent and less.] Deprived of parents.

Thy orphans left poore, parentlesse, alone,
The future time's sad miserie to mone. Mir. for Mag. p. 778.

Pa'rer. n. s. [from pare.] An instrument to cut away the surface.

A hone and a parer, like sole of a boot,
To pare away grasse, and to raise up the root. Tusser.

Pa'rergy. n. s. [παρὰ and ἔργον.] Something unimportant; something done by the by.

Scripture being serious, and commonly omitting such parergies, it will be unreasonable to condemn all laughter. Brown.

PA'RGET.† n. s. [perhaps from paries, Lat. a wall. The word at first was written pariet. See Bp. Hall, in To Parget.]

1. Plaster laid upon roofs of rooms.

Gold was the parget: and the cieling bright
Did shine all scaly with great plates of gold;
The floor of jasp and emerald was dight.
Spenser, Vis. of Bellay.

Of English talc, the coarser sort is called plaster or parget: the finer, spaad. Woodward.

2. Paint.

Scorn'd paintings, pargit, and the borrow'd hair.
Drayton, Ecl 4.

To Pa'rget.† v. a. [from the noun.] To plaster; to cover with plaster.

If he have bestowed but a little sum in glazing, paving, parieting of God's house, you shall find it in the church window.
Bp. Hall, Charact. (1608,) p. 134.

A plaster — that rather resembles true stone than mortar; with which they not only parget the outside of their houses, and trim it with paint after the Morisco manner; but also spread the floors and arches of their room.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 129.

There are not more arts of disguising our corporal blemishes than our moral; and yet, whilst we thus paint and parget our own deformities, we cannot allow any the least imperfection of another's to remain undetected.
Gov. of the Tongue, p. 79.

To Pa'rget.* v. n. To lay paint on the face.

She's above fifty too, and pargets! B. Jonson, Epicoene.

Pa'rgeter.† n. s. [from parget.] A plasterer.
Barret.

Parhe'lion. n. s. [παρὰ and ἥλιος.] A mock sun.

To neglect that supreme resplendency, that shines in God, for those dim representations of it, that we so doat on in the creature, is as absurd, as it were for a Persian to offer his sacrifice to a parhelion, instead of adoring the sun. Boyle.

Pari'etal. adj. [from paries, Lat.] Constituting the sides or walls.

The lower part of the parietal and upper part of the temporal bones were fractured. Sharp, Surgery.

Pari'etary. n. s. [parietaire, Fr.] An herb.
Ainsworth.

Pa'rietine.* n. s. [paries, Lat.] A piece of a wall; a fragment.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 238.

Pa'ring. n. s. [from pare.] That which is pared off any thing; the rind.

Virginity breeds mites, much like a cheese; and consumes itself to the very paring. Shakspeare.

To his guest though no way sparing,
He eat himself the rind and paring. Pope.

In May, after rain, pare off the surface of the earth, and with the parings raise your hills high, and enlarge their breadth. Mortimer, Husb.

Pa'ris. n. s. [aconitum.] An herb. Ainsworth.

PA'RISH. n. s. [parochia, low Lat. paroisse, Fr. of the Greek παροικία, i. e. accolarum conventus, accolatus, sacra vicinia.] The particular charge of a secular priest. Every church is either cathedral, conventual, or parochial: cathedral is that, where there is a bishop seated, so called à cathedra: conventual consists of regular clerks, professing some order of religion, or of a dean and chapter, or other college of spiritual men: parochial is that which is instituted for saying divine service, and administering the holy sacraments to the people, dwelling within a certain compass of ground near unto it. Our realm was first divided into parishes by Honorius, archbishop of Canterbury, in the year of our Lord 636. Cowel.

Dametas came piping and dancing, the merriest man in a parish. Sidney.

By the Catholick church is meant no more than the common church, into which all such persons as belonged to that parish, in which it was built, were wont to congregate.
Pearson.

The tythes, his parish freely paid, he took;
But never sued, or curs'd with bell or book. Dryden.

Pa'rish. adj.

1. Belonging to the parish; having the care of the parish.

A parish priest was of the pilgrim train,
An awful, reverend, and religious man. Dryden.

Not parish clerk, who calls the psalms so clear. Gay.

The office of the church is performed by the parish priest, at the time of his interment. Ayliffe.

A man, after his natural death, was not capable of the least parish office. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

The parish allowance to poor people, is very seldom a comfortable maintenance. Law.

2. Maintained by the parish.

The ghost and the parish girl are entire new characters. Gay.

Pari'shioner. n. s. [paroissien, Fr. from parish.] One that belongs to the parish.

I praise the Lord for you, and so may my parishioners; for their sons are well tutored by you. Shakspeare.

Hail bishop Valentine, whose day this is,
All the air is thy diocese;
And all the chirping choristers
And other birds are thy parishioners. Donne.

In the greater out parishes, many of the parishioners, thro' neglect, do perish. Graunt.

I have deposited thirty marks, to be distributed among the poor parishioners. Addison, Spect.

Pa'ritor. n. s. [for apparitor.] A beadle; a summoner of the courts of civil law.

You shall be summoned by an host of paritours; you shall be sentenced in the spiritual court. Dryden.

Pa'rity. n. s. [parité, Fr. paritas, Lat.] Equality; resemblance.

We may here justly tax the dishonesty and shamefulness of the mouths, who have upbraided us with the opinion of a certain stoical parity of sins. Bp. Hall.

That Christ or his apostles ever commanded to set up such a parity of presbyters, and in such a way as those Scots endeavour, I think is not very disputable. King Charles.

Survey the total set of animals, and we may, in their legs or organs of progression, observe an equality of length and parity of numeration; not any to have an odd leg, or the movers of one side not exactly answered by the other. Brown.

Those accidental occurrences, which excited Socrates to the discovery of such an invention, might fall in with that man that is of a perfect parity with Socrates. Hale.

Their agreement, in essential characters, makes rather an identity than a parity. Glanville.

Women could not live in that parity and equality of expence with their husbands, as now they do. Graunt.

By an exact parity of reason, we may argue, if a man has no sense of those kindnesses that pass upon him, from one like himself, whom he sees and knows, how much less shall his heart be affected with the grateful sense of his favours, whom he converses with only by imperfect speculations, by the discourses of reason, or the discoveries of faith? South.

PARK.† n. s. [peappuc, pappuc, Sax. "Vox antiquissima, omnibusque lingu. et dialect. Septentr. communis. Suio-Goth. park, vivarium, septum, &c. à berga, Alem. pergan, tegere, munire." Wachter, and Serenius. Hence the Fr. parc; Welsh, the same; Irish, pairc.] A piece of ground inclosed and stored with wild beasts of chase, which a man may have by prescription or the king's grant. Manwood, in his forest law, defines it thus: a park is a place for privilege for wild beasts of venery, and also for other wild beasts that are beasts of the forest and of the chase: and those wild beasts are to have a firm peace and protection there, so that no man may hurt or chase them within the park, without license of the owner: a park is of another nature, than either a chase or a warren; for a park must be inclosed, and may not lie open; if it does, it is a good cause of seizure into the king's hands: and the owner cannot have action against such as hunt in his park, if it lies open. Cowel.

We have parks and inclosures of all sorts of beasts and birds, which we use not only for view or rareness, but likewise for dissections and trials. Bacon.

To PARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose as in a park.

How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale?
A little herd of England's tim'rous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shakspeare.

PA'RKER.† n. s. [from park. Parker is a very old word in the French as well as our own language.] A park-keeper.

A doe came trippyng in at the rere ward;
But, lorde, how the parker was wroth with all.
Skelton, Poems, p. 53.

To make good such a justification by a parker, forester, or warrener, there are these things requisite.
Hale, H. P. C. ch. 40.

PA'RKLEAVES. n. s. An herb. Ainsworth.

PA'RLANCE.* n. s. [from parle.] Conversation; talk. A modern word.

In common parlance, when you speak of criminal actions, no man was ever understood to mean the prosecution of a crime, but the crime itself.
On Wooddeson's View of the Laws of Eng. Br. Crit. (1793.)

To PARLE.* v. n. [parler, Fr.] To talk; to converse; to discuss any thing orally.

We came to parle of the publique weale,
Confirming our quarell with maine and might,
With swords and no words we tried our appeale,
Instead of reason declaring our zeale. Mir. for Mag. p. 284.

Their purpose is to parle, to court, and dance.
Shakspeare, L. Lab. Lost.

Knute, finding himself too weak, began to parle.
Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 6.

PARLE. n. s. [parler, Fr.] Conversation; talk; oral treaty; oral discussion of any thing.

Of all the gentlemen,
That every day with parle encounter me,
In thy opinion, which is worthiest love? Shakspeare.

Our trumpet call'd you to this general parle. Shakspeare.

The bishop, by a parle, is, with a show
Of combination, cunningly betray'd. Daniel.

Why meet we thus, like wrangling advocates,
To urge the justice of our cause with words?
I hate this parle; 'tis tame: if we must meet,
Give me my arms. Rowe, Amb. Step-mother.

To PA'RLEY. v. n. [parler, Fr.] To treat by word of mouth; to talk; to discuss any thing orally. It is much used in war for a meeting of enemies to talk.

A Turk desired the captain to send some, with whom they might more conveniently parley. Knolles, Hist.

He parleys with her a while, as imagining she would advise him to proceed. Broome.

PA'RLEY. n. s. [from the verb.] Oral treaty; talk; conference; discussion by word of mouth.

Seek rather by parley to recover them, than by the sword. Sidney.

Well, by my will, we shall admit no parley:
A rotten case abides no handling. Shakspeare.

Summon a parley, we will talk with him. Shakspeare.

Let us resolve never to have any parley with our lusts, but to make some considerable progress in our repentance. Calamy.

Parly and holding intelligence with guilt in the most trivial things, he pronounced as treason to ourselves, as well as unto God. Fell.

No gentle means could be essay'd;
'Twas beyond parley when the siege was laid. Dryden.

Force never yet a generous heart did gain;
We yield on parley, but are storm'd in vain. Dryden.

Yet when some better fated youth
Shall with his amorous parley move thee,
Reflect one moment on his truth,
Who, dying thus, persists to love thee. Prior.

PA'RLIAMENT. n. s. [parliamentum, low Latin; parlement, Fr.] In England, is the assembly of the king and three estates of the realm; namely, the lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and commons, for the debating of matters touching the commonwealth, especially the making and correcting of laws; which assembly or court is, of all others, the highest, and of greatest authority. Cowel.

The king is fled to London,
To call a present court of parliament. Shakspeare.

Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart,
To make a shambles of the parliament house. Shakspeare.

The true use of parliaments is very excellent; and be often called, and continued as long as is necessary. Bacon.

I thought the right way of parliaments the most safe for my crown, as best pleasing to my people. King Charles.

These are mob readers: if Virgil and Martial stood for parliament-men, we know who would carry it. Dryden.

PARLIAMENTA'RIAN.* PARLIAMENTE'ER. } n. s. [from parliament.] One of those who embraced the cause of the parliament against the king, in the great rebellion.

The very parliamentarians reverenced him [bishop Sa- nas son] for his learning and his virtue. Aubrey, Anecd.

Colonel Blagge, roving about the country very troop of stout horsemen, met with a party of *par*shoprick of rebels, of at least 200, at Long Crendon. , vicar, or
A. Wood, Life of him Clarendon.

Parliamenta'rian.* adj. Serving the parliament, in the time of the great rebellion.

He found Oxford empty as to scholars, but pretty well replenished with parliamentarian soldiers.
A. Wood, Life of himself, in 1646.

Parliame'ntary. adj. [from parliament.] Enacted by parliament; pertaining to parliament.

To the three first titles of the two houses, or lines, and conquest, were added two more; the authorities parliamentary and papal. Bacon.

Many things, that obtain as common law, had their original by parliamentary acts or constitutions, made in writings by the king, lords, and commons. Hale.

Credit to run ten millions in debt, without parliamentary security, I think to be dangerous and illegal. Swift.

Pa'rlour. n. s. [parloir, French; parlatorio, Italian.]

1. A room in monasteries, where the religious meet and converse.

2. A room in houses on the first floor, elegantly furnished for reception or entertainment.

Can we judge it a thing seemly for a man to go about the building of an house to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use? Hooker.

Back again fair Alma led them right,
And soon into a goodly parlour brought. Spenser, F. Q.

It would be infinitely more shameful, in the dress of the kitchen, to receive the entertainments of the parlour. South.

Roof and sides were like a parlour made
A soft recess, and a cool summer shade. Dryden.

The first, forgive my verse if too diffuse,
Perform'd the kitchen's and the parlour's use;
The second, better bolted and immur'd,
From wolves his out-door family secured. Harte.

PA'RLOUS.† adj. [This might seem to come from parler, Fr. to speak; but Junius derives it, I think, rightly, from perilous, in which sense it answers to the Latin improbus. Dr. Johnson. — It is most probably from perilous; for anciently it was written parelous, and used in the sense of dangerous; and from this primary sense, that of dangerous, by way of irony, seems to have been adopted. Dr. Johnson has cited only Dryden in the second sense of the word, without noticing the first. It is used in the north of England, in both.]

1. Dangerous.

The more part of writers were wholly given to serve antichristes affectes in the parelouse ages of the churche.
Bale, in Leland's New Year's Gift, E. 1. b.

2. Keen; shrewd.

Sure some pedagogue stood at your elbow, and made it itch with this parlous criticism! Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

Midas durst communicate
To none but to his wife his ears of state;
One must be trusted, and he thought her fit,
As passing prudent, and a parlous wit. Dryden.

Pa'rlousness. n. s. [from parlous.] Quickness; keenness of temper.

Parmaci'ty.† n. s. Corruptedly for sperma ceti. Ainsworth.

The ideas of hunger and warmth are some of the first that children have, and which they scarce ever part with. Locke.

What a despicable figure must mock-patriots make, who venture to be hanged for the ruin of those civil rights, which their ancestors, rather than part with, chose to be cut to pieces in the field of battle? Addison, Freeholder.

The good things of this world so delight in, as remember, that we are to part with them, to exchange them for more durable enjoyments. Atterbury.

As for riches and power, our Saviour plainly determines, that the best way to make them blessings, is to part with them. Swift, Miscell.

PA'RTABLE. adj. [from part.] Divisible; such as may be parted.

His hot love was partable among three other of his mistresses. Camden, Rem.

PA'RTAGE. n. s. [partage, Fr.] Division; act of sharing or parting. A word merely French.

Men have agreed to a disproportionate and unequal possession of the earth, having found out a way, how a man may fairly possess more land, than he himself can use the product of, by receiving, in exchange, for the overplus, gold and silver: this partage of things, in an equality of private possessions, men have made practicable out of the bounds of society, without compact, only by putting a value on gold and silver, and tacitly agreeing in the use of money. Locke.

To PARTA'KE. v. n. preterite, I partook: participle passive, partaken. [part and take.]

1. To have share of any thing; to take share with: it is commonly used with of before the thing shared. Locke uses it with in.

Partake and use my kingdom as your own
And shall be yours while I command the crown. Dryden.

How far brutes partake in this faculty, is not easy to determine. Locke.

Truth and falshood have no other trial, but reason and proof which they made use of to make themselves knowing, and so must others too, that will partake in their knowledge. Locke.

2. To participate; to have something of the property, nature, claim, or right.

The attorney of the duchy of Lancaster partakes partly of a judge, and partly of an attorney-general. Bacon.

3. To be admitted to; not to be excluded.

You may partake of any thing we say;
We speak no treason, Shakspeare, Rich. III.

To PARTA'KE. v. a.

1. To share; to have part in.

By and by, thy bosom shall partake
The secrets of my heart. Shakspeare.

My friend, hight Philemon, I did partake
Of all my love, and all my privity,
Who greatly joyous seemed for my sake. Spenser.
Your exultation partake to every one. Shakspeare.

PARTA'KER. n. s. [from partake.]

1. A partner in possessions; a sharer of any thing; an associate with: commonly with of before the thing partaken.

They whom earnest lets hinder from being partakers of the whole, have yet, through length of divine service, opportunity for access unto some reasonable part thereof. Hooker.

Didst thou
Make us partakers of a little gain;
That now our loss might be ten times as much. Shakspeare.
With such she must return at setting light,
Tho' not partaker, witness of their night. Prior.

His bitterest enemies were partakers of his kindness, and he still continued to entreat them to accept of life from him, and with tears, bewailed their infidelity. Calamy.

2. Sometimes with in before the thing partaken: perhaps of is best before a thing, and in before an action.

Wish me partaker in thy happiness,
When thou do'st meet good hap. Shakspeare.

If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets. St. Matth. xxiii. 30.

3. Accomplice; associate.

Thou consentedst, and hast been partaker with adulterers. Psalm l. 18.

He took upon him the person of the duke of York, and drew with him complices and partakers. Bacon.

PARTA'KING.† n. s. Combination; union in some bad design. A juridical sense.

As it prevents factions and partakings, so it keeps the rule and administration of the laws uniform. Hale.

PA'RTED.* adj. [from part.] Possessing accomplishments.

A man well parted, a sufficient scholar, and travelled. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

The parter of the fray was night, which, with her black arms, pulled their malicious sights one from the other. Sidney.

PARTE'RRE. n. s. [parterre, Fr.] A level division of ground, that, for the most part, faces the south and best front of an house, and is furnished with greens and flowers. Miller.

There are as many kinds of gardening, as of poetry; your makers of parterres and flower gardens are epigramatists and sonneteers. Spectator.

The vast parterres a thousand hands shall make;
Lo! Cobham comes, and floats them with a lake. Pope.

PA'RTIAL. adj. [partial, French.]

1. Inclined antecedently to favour one party in a cause, or one side of the question more than the other.

Ye have not kept my ways, but have been partial in the law. Mal. ii. 9.

Self-love will make men partial to themselves and friends, and ill nature, passion, and revenge will carry them too far in punishing others; and hence, God hath appointed governments to restrain the partiality and violence of men. Locke.

2. Inclined to favour without reason: with to before the part favoured.

Thus kings heretofore who shewed themselves partial to a party, had the service only of the worst part of their people. Davenant.

Authors are partial to their wit, 'tis true,
But are not criticks to their judgement too. Pope.

In these, one may be sincerer to a reasonable friend, than to a fond and partial parent. Pope.

3. Affecting only one part; subsisting only in a part; not general; not universal; not total.

If we compare these partial dissolutions of the earth with an universal dissolution, we may as easily conceive an universal deluge from an universal dissolution, as a partial deluge from a partial. Burnet, Theory.

That which weakens religion, will at length destroy it; for the weakening of a thing is only a partial destruction of it. South.

All discord, harmony, not understood;
All partial evil, universal good. Pope.

PARTIA'LITY. n. s. [partialité, Fr. from partial.] Unequal state of the judgement and favour of one above the other, without just reason.

Then would the Irish party cry out partiality, and complain he is not used as a subject, he is not suffered to have the free benefit of the law. Spenser on Ireland.

Partiality is properly the understanding's judging according to the inclination of the will and affections, and not according to the exact truth of things, or the merits of the cause. South, Serm.

As there is a partiality to opinions, which is apt to mislead the understanding; so there is also a partiality to studies, which is prejudicial to knowledge. Locke.

PA'RTIALIST.* n. s. [from partial.] One who is partial.

I say, as the apostle said, unto such partialists, you will forgive me this wrong. Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. (1633,) p. 240.

To PA'RTIALIZE.† v. a. [partializer, Fr. from partial.] To make partial. A word, perhaps, peculiar to Shakspeare, and not unworthy of general use. Dr. Johnson. — The word is not peculiar to Shakspeare.

Such neighbour-nearness to our sacred blood
Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize
Th' unstooping firmness of my upright soul. Shakspeare.

No man, drenched in hate, can promise to himself the candidness of an upright judge; his hate will partialize his opinion. Feltham, Res. ii. 62.

PA'RTIALLY. adv. [from partial.]

1. With unjust favour or dislike.

2. In part; not totally.

That stole into a total verity, which was but partially true in its covert sense. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The message he brought, opened a clear prospect of eternal salvation, which had been but obscurely and partially figured in the shadows of the law. Rogers.

PARTIBI'LITY. n. s. [from partible.] Divisibility; separability.

PA'RTIBLE. adj. [from part.] Divisible; separable.

Make the moulds partible, glued or cemented together, that you may open them, when you take out the fruit. Bacon.

The same body, in one circumstance, is more weighty, and, in another, is more partible. Digby on the Soul.

PARTI'CIPABLE. adj. [from participate.] Such as may be shared or partaken.

Plato, by his ideas, means only the divine essence with this connotation, as it is variously imitable or participable by created beings. Norris, Miscell.

PARTI'CIPANT. adj. [participant, Fr. from participate.] Sharing; having share or part: with of.

During the parliament he published his proclamation, offering pardon to all such as had taken arms, or been participant of any attempts against him; so as they submitted themselves. Bacon.

The prince saw he should confer with one participitant of more than monkish speculations. Wotton.

If any part of my body be so mortified, as it becomes like a rotten branch of a tree, it putrefies, and is not participant of influence derived from my soul, because it is now no longer in it to quicken it. Hale.

5. To have part of something common with another.

The species of audibles seem to participate more with local motion, like percussions made upon the air. Bacon.

To PARTI'CIPATE. v. a. To partake; to receive part of; to share.

As Christ's incarnation and passion can be available to no man's good, which is not made partaker of Christ, neither can we participate him without his presence. Hooker.

The French seldom atchieved any honourable acts without Scottish hands, who therefore are to participate the glory with them. Camden, Rem.

Fellowship,
Such as I seek, fit to participate
All rational delight; wherein the brute
Cannot be human consort. Milton, P. L.

PARTICIPA'TION. n. s. [participation, Fr. from participate.]

1. The state of sharing something in common.

Civil society doth more content the nature of man, than any private kind of solitary living; because, in society, this good of mutual participation is so much larger. Hooker.

Their spirits are so married in conjunction, with the participation of society, that they flock together in consent, like so many wild geese. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

A joint coronation of himself and his queen might give any countenance of participation of title. Bacon.

2. The act or state of receiving or having part of something.

All things seek the highest, and covet more or less the participation of God himself. Hooker.

Those deities are so by participation, and subordinate to the supreme. Stillingfleet.

What an honour, that God should admit us into such a blessed participation of himself? Atterbury.

Convince them, that brutes have the least participation of thought, and they retract. Bentley.

Your genius should mount above that mist, in which its participation and neighbourhood with earth long involved it. Pope.

3. Distribution; division into shares.

It sufficeth not, that the country hath wherewith to sustain even more than to live upon it, if means be wanting whereby to drive convenient participation of the general store into a great number of well-deservers. Ralegh.

PARTI'CIPATIVE.* adj. [from participate.] Capable of partaking.

PARTICI'PIAL.† adj. [participialis, Lat.] Having the nature of a participle.

The participle, with an article before it, and the preposition of after it, becomes a substantive, expressing the action itself which the verb signifies. This rule arises from the nature and idiom of our language, and from as plain a principle as any on which it is founded; namely, that a word which has the article before it, and the possessive preposition of after it, must be a noun; and if a noun, it ought to follow the construction of a noun, and not have the regimen of a verb. It is the participial termination of this sort of words, that is apt to deceive us, and make us treat them as if they were of an amphibious species, partly nouns, and partly verbs. — That these participial words are sometimes real nouns, is undeniable; for they have a plural number as such: as, "the outgoings of the morning." Lowth, Eng. Grammar.

PARTICI'PIALLY. adv. [from participle.] In the sense or manner of a participle.

PA'RTICIPLE. n. s. [participium, Latin.]

1. A word partaking at once the qualities of a noun and verb.

A participle is a particular sort of adjective, formed from a verb, and together with its signification of action, passion, or some other manner of existence, signifying the time thereof. Clarke, Lat. Grammar.

2. Any thing that participates of different things. Not used.

The participles or confiners between plants and living creatures, are such as are fixed, though they have a motion in their parts: such as, oysters and cockles. Bacon.

PA'RTICLE. n. s. [particule, Fr. particula, Lat.]

1. Any small portion of a greater substance.

From any of the other unreasonable demands, the houses had not given their commissioners authority in the least particle to recede. Clarendon.

There is not one grain in the universe, either too much or too little, nothing to be added, nothing to be spared: nor so much as any one particle of it, that mankind may not be either the better or the worse for, according as 'tis applied. L'Estrange.

With particles of heavenly fire,
The God of nature did his soul inspire. Dryden.

Curious wits,
With rapture, with astonishment reflect,
On the small size of atoms, which unite
To make the smallest particle of light. Blackmore.

It is not impossible, but that microscopes may, at length, be improved to the discovery of the particles of bodies, on which their colours depend. Newton, Opt.

Blest with more particles of heavenly flame. Granville.

2. A word unvaried by inflection.

Till Arianism had made it a matter of sharpness and subtilty of wit to be a sound believing christian, men were not curious what syllables or particles of speech they used. Hooker.

The Latin varies the signification of verbs and nouns, not as the modern languages, by particles prefixed, but by changing the last syllables. Locke on Education.

Particles are the words, whereby the mind signifies what connection it gives to the several affirmations and negations, that it unites in one continued reasoning or narration. Locke.

In the Hebrew tongue, there is a particle, consisting but of one single letter, of which there are reckoned up above fifty several significations. Locke.

PARTI'CULAR. adj. [particulier, French.]

1. Relating to single persons; not general.

He, as well with general orations, as particular dealing with men of most credit, made them see how necessary it was. Sidney.

As well for particular application to special occasions, as also in other manifold respects, infinite treasures of wisdom are abundantly to be found in the Holy Scripture. Hooker.

2. Individual; one distinct from others.

Wheresoever one plant draweth such a particular juice out of the earth, as it qualifieth the earth, so as that juice, which remaineth, is fit for the other plant; there the neighbourhood doth good. Bacon.

This is true of actions considered in their general nature or kind, but not considered in their particular individual instances. South.

Artists, who propose only the imitation of such a particular person, without election of ideas, have often been reproached for that omission. Dryden.

3. Noting properties or things peculiar.

Of this prince there is little particular memory; only that he was very studious and learned. Bacon.

4. Attentive to things single and distinct.

I have been particular in examining the reason of children's inheriting the property of their fathers, because it will give us farther light in the inheritance of power. Locke.

5. Single; not general; one among many.

Rather performing his general commandment, which had ever been, to embrace virtue, than any new particular, sprung out of passion, and contrary to the former. Sidney.

6. Odd; having something that eminently distinguishes him from others. This is commonly used in a sense of contempt.

PARTI'CULAR. n. s.

1. A single instance; a single point.

I must reserve some particulars, which it is not lawful for me to reveal. Bacon.

Those notions are universal, and what is universal must needs proceed from some universal constant principle; the same in all particulars, which can be nothing else but human nature. South.

Having the idea of an elephant or an angle in my mind, the first and natural inquiry is, whether such a thing does exist? and this knowledge is only of particulars. Locke.

The master could hardly sit on his horse for laughing, all the while he was giving me the particulars of this story. Addison.

Vespasian he resembled in many particulars. Swift.

2. Individual; private person.

It is the greatest interest of particulars, to advance the good of the community. L'Estrange.

3. Private interest.

Our wisdom must be such, as doth not propose to itself τὸ ἴδιον our own particular, the partial and immoderate desire whereof poisoneth wheresoever it taketh place; but the scope and mark, which we are to aim at, is the publick and common good. Hooker.

They apply their minds even with hearty affection and zeal, at the least, unto those branches of publick prayer, wherein their own particular is moved. Hooker.

His general lov'd him
In a most dear particular. Shakspeare.

We are likewise to give thanks for temporal blessings, whether such as concern the publick, as the prosperity of the church, or nation, and all remarkable deliverances afforded to either; or else such as concern our particular. Wh. Duty of Man.

4. Private character; single self; state of an individual.

For his particular, I'll receive him gladly;
But not one follower. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

5. A minute detail of things singly enumerated.

The reader has a particular of the books, wherein the law was written. Ayliffe, Parergon.

6. In particular. Peculiarly; distinctly.

Invention is called a muse, authors ascribe to each of them, in particular, the sciences which they have invented. Dryden.

And if we will take them, as they were directed, in particular to her, or in her, as their representative, to all other women, they will, at most, concern the female sex only, and import no more but that subjection, they should ordinarily be in, to their husbands. Locke.

This in particular happens to the lungs. Blackmore.

PARTICULA'RITY. n. s. [paaticularité, Fr. from particular.]

1. Distinct notice or enumeration.

2. Singleness; individuality; single act; single case.

Knowledge imprinted in the minds of all men, whereby both general principles for directing of human actions are comprehended, and conclusions derived from them, upon which conclusions groweth, in particularity, the choice of good and evil. Hooker.

3. Petty account; private incident.

To see the titles that were most agreeable to such an emperor, the flatteries that he lay most open to, with the like particularities only to be met with on medals, are certainly not a little pleasing. Addison.

4. Something belonging to single persons.

Let the general trumpet blow his blast,
Particularities and petty sounds
To cease. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

5. Something peculiar.

I saw an old heathen altar, with this particularity, that it was hollowed like a dish at one end; but not the end on which the sacrifice was laid. Addison on Italy.

He applied himself to the coquette's heart; there occurred many particularities in this dissection. Addison.

To PARTI'CULARIZE. v. a. [particulariser, Fr. from particular.] To mention distinctly; to detail; to shew minutely.

The leanness that afflicts us, is an inventory to particularize their abundance. Shakspeare, Coriol.

He not only boasts of his parentage as an Israelite, but particularizes his descent from Benjamin. Atterbury.

To PARTI'CULARIZE.* v. n. To be particular; to be attentive to things single and distinct.

The parson questions what order is kept in the house, as about prayers morning and evening on their knees, reading of Scripture, catechizing, singing of psalms, at their work, and on holydays; who can read, who not: and sometimes he hears the children read himself, and blesseth, encouraging also the servants to learn to read, and offering to have them taught on holydays by his servants. If the parson were ashamed of particularizing in these things, he were not fit to be a parson. Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 14.

PARTI'CULARLY. adv. [from particular.]

1. Distinctly; singly; not universally.

Providence, that universally casts its eye over all the creation, is yet pleased more particularly to fasten it upon some. South, Serm.

2. In an extraordinary degree.

2. Any production.

The ardency of love, which we have to any new parturition, is by some space of time abated, after that we have diverted to some other employment; amongst which, as amongst children, commonly the youngest is most affected. Instruct. for Oral. (1682,) p. 132.

PA'RTURE.* n. s. Departure. Not in use.

The tydings bad,
Which now in faery court all men do tell,
Which turned hath great mirth to mourning sad,
Is the late ruine of proud Marinell,
And sudden parture of faire Florimell
To find him forth. Spenser, F. Q. iii. viii. 46.

PA'RTY. n. s. [partie, French.]

1. A number of persons confederated by similarity of designs or opinions in opposition to others; a faction.

When any of these combatants strips his terms of ambiguity, I shall think him a champion for truth, and not the slave of vain glory or a party. Locke.

This account of party patches will appear improbable to those, who live at a distance from the fashionable world. Addison.

Party writers are so sensible of the secret virtue of an innuendo, that they never mention the q——n at length. Spectator.

This party rage in women only serves to aggravate animosities that reign among them. Addison.

As he never leads the conversation into the violence and rage of party disputes, I listened to him with pleasure. Tatler.

Division between those of the same party, exposes them to their enemies. Pope.

2. One of two litigants.

When you are hearing a matter between party and party, if pinched with the cholick, you make faces like mummers, and dismiss the controversy more entangled by your hearing: all the peace you make in their cause is calling both parties knaves. Shakspeare.

The cause of both parties shall come before the judges. Exod. xxii. 9.

If a bishop be a party to a suit, and excommunicates his adversary; such excommunication shall not bar his adversary from his action. Ayliffe, Parergon.

3. One concerned in any affair.

The child was prisoner to the womb, and is Freed and enfranchis'd; not a party to
The anger of the king, nor guilty of
The trespass of the queen. Shakspeare.
I do suspect this trash,
To be a party in this injury. Shakspeare.

4. Side; persons engaged against each other.

Our foes, compell'd by need, have peace embrac'd:
The peace, both parties want, is like to last. Dryden.

PASCH.* n. s. [pask, old Fr. pasche, Sax. paska, Goth. πασχα, Gr. from the Heb. pasahh.]
1. The passover.
The paske was full nygh, a feeste day of the Jewis.
Wicliffe, St. John, vi.
What feast it was, is questionable; whether the pasch, — or whether pentecost. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.
2. The feast of Easter. Bullokar.

PASCH-EGG.* n. s. [Påskegg dicebantur ova quæ variè ornata, varioque colore inducta, muneris loco olim tempore Paschatis mittebantur; idque in memoriam redeuntis libertatis ova manducandi, quæ sub jejunii tempore, durante Catholicismo, interdicta erant." Ihre, Lex. Suio. Goth.] An egg dyed or stained, presented, about the time of Easter, in several parts of the north of England, to this day, to young persons: corruptly called in Cumberland pace egg; in Northumberland, according to Mr. Brand, paste egg. Of the great antiquity of this custom, and of its usage among various nations, see an account in Brand's Popular Antiquities, vol. i. p. 142. et seq. Where another origin is pointed out than what Ihre has given in his Glossary already cited; the egg having been considered as the emblem of the universe, and also of the resurrection.
Holy ashes, holy pace eggs, and flanes; palmes, and palme boughs. Beehive of the Romish Church, (1579,) fol. 15. b.

PASCH-FLOWER.* See PASQUE-FLOWER.

PA'SQUIL.†
PA'SQUIN.
PASQUINA'DE. } n. s. [from Pasquino, a statue at Rome, to which they affix any lampoon or paper of satirical observation. Dr. Johnson. — The statue is said to have taken its name from one Pasquin, a cobler of Rome, noted for his gibes and sneers. See Menage. Of pasquin and pasquinade, the direct descendants of this term, Dr. Johnson has given no example.] A lampoon.
Others make long libels and pasquils, defaming men of good life. Burton, Anat. of Mel. Pref. p. 26.
He never valued any pasquils that were dropped up and down, to think them worthy of his revenge. Howell.
The pasquils, lampoons, and libels we meet with now-a-days, are a sort of playing with the four-and-twenty letters, without sense, truth, or wit. Tatler.
The Grecian wits who satire first began,
Were pleasant pasquins on the life of man. Dryden, Epist. 9.
The pasquinade was a witty one, but the event turned the point of it against the party by which it was made.
Ld. Lyttelton on the Conv. of St. Paul.
Among other pasquinades, there were prints or pictures representing her majesty naked, meager, withered, and wrinkled.
Warton, Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 58.

To PA'SQUIN. } v. a. To lampoon.
They are grievously vexed with these pasquilling libels and satires. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 148.
Not that any man desires to see himself pasquined and affronted. Dryden, Ded. of the D. of Guise.

PA'SQUILLER.* [from pasquil.] A lampooner.
Adrian the sixth, pope, was so highly offended and grievously vexed with pasquillers at Rome, that he gave command that statue should be demolished. Burton, Anat of Mel. p. 149.
Any triobolary pasquiller — is licensed to throw dirt in the faces of sovereign princes, in open printed language: but I hope the times will mend. Howell, Lett. ii. 48.

To PASS.† v. n. [passer, French; passus, a step, Latin. Dr. Johnson. — From the Heb. pasahh.]
1. To go; to move from one place to another; to be progressive. Commonly with some particle.
Tell him his long trouble is passing
Out of this world. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.
If I have found favour in thy sight, pass not away from thy servant. Gen. xviii. 3.
While my glory passeth by, I will put thee in a clift of the rock, and will cover thee while I pass by. Exod xxxiii. 22.

Thus will I cut off him that passeth out, and him that returneth. Ezek. xxxv. 7.

This heap and this pillar be witness, that I will not pass over to thee, and that thou shalt not pass over it and this pillar unto me for harm. Gen. xxxi. 52.

An idea of motion not passing on, is not better than idea of motion at rest. Locke.

Heedless of those cares, with anguish stung,
He felt their fleeces as they pass'd along. Pope.

If the cause be visible, we stop at the instrument, and seldom pass on to him that directed it. Wake, Prep. for Death.

2. To go forcibly; to make way.

Her face, her hands were torn
With passing through the brakes. Dryden.

3. To make a change from one thing to another.

4. To vanish; to be lost.

He hath also stablished them for ever and ever; he hath made a decree which shall not pass. Ps. cxlviii. 6.

Trust not too much to that enchanting face;
Beauty's a charm, but soon the charm will pass. Dryden.

5. To be spent; to go away progressively.

The time, when the thing existed, is the idea of that space of duration, which passed between some fixed period and the being of that thing. Locke.

We see, that one who fixes his thoughts very intently on one thing, so as to take but little notice of the succession of ideas that pass in his mind, whilst he is taken up with that earnest contemplation, lets slip out of his account a good part of that duration, and thinks that time shorter than it is. Locke.

6. To be at an end; to be over.

Their officious haste,
Who would before have borne him to the sky,
Like eager Romans, ere all rites were past,
Did let too soon the sacred eagle fly. Dryden.

7. To die; to pass from the present life to another state. See PASSINGBELL.

The pangs of death do make him grin;
Disturb him not, let him pass peaceably. Shakspeare.

8. To be changed by regular gradation.

I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant. Ezek. xx. 37.

11. To be enacted.

Many of the nobility spoke in parliament against those things, which were most grateful to his majesty, and which still passed, notwithstanding their contradiction. Clarendon.

Among the laws that pass'd, it was decreed,
That conquer'd Thebes from bondage should be freed.
Dryden, Kn. Tale.

12. To be effected; to exist. Unless this may be thought a noun with the articles suppressed, and be explained thus: it came to the pass that.

I have heard it enquired, how it might be brought to pass that the church should every where have able preachers to instruct the people. Hooker.

When the case required dissimulation, if they used it, it came to pass that the former opinion of their good faith made them almost invisible. Bacon, Ess.

13. To gain reception; to become current: as, this money will not pass.

That trick, said she, will not pass twice. Hudibras.

Though frauds may pass upon men, they are as open as the light to him that searches the heart. L'Estrange.

Their excellencies will not pass for such in the opinion of the learned, but only as things which have less of error in them. Dryden.

False eloquence passeth only where true is not understood, and nobody will commend bad writers, that is acquainted with good. Felton on the Classicks.

The grossest suppositions pass upon them, that the wild Irish were taken in toyls; but that, in some time, they would grow tame. Swift.

14. To be practised artfully or successfully.

This practice hath most shrewdly past upon thee;
But when we know the grounds and authors of it,
Thou shalt be both the plaintiff and the judge. Shakspeare.

15. To be regarded as good or ill.

He rejected the authority of councils, and so do all the reformed; so that this wo'nt pass for a fault in him, till 'tis proved one in us. Atterbury.

16. To occur; to be transacted.

If we would judge of the nature of spirits, we must have recourse to our own consciousness of what passes within our own mind. Watts, Logick.

17. To be done.

Zeal may be let loose in matters of direct duty, as in prayers, provided that no indirect act pass upon them to defile them.
Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

18. To heed; to regard. Not in use.

As for these silken-coated slaves, I pass not;
It is to you, good people, that I speak,
O'er whom, in time to come, I hope to reign. Shakspeare.

19. To determine finally; to judge capitally.

Though well we may not pass upon his life,
Without the form of justice; yet our pow'r
Shall do a courtesy to our wrath. Shakspeare.

20. To be supremely excellent.

Sir Hudibras's passing worth,
The manner how he sallied forth. Hudibras, B. I. Arg.

21. To thrust; to make a push in fencing.

24. To be in a tolerable state.

A middling sort of man was left well enough to pass by his father, but could never think he had enough, so long as any had more. L'Estrange.

25. To PASS away. To be lost; to glide off.

Defining the soul to be a substance that always thinks, can serve but to make many men suspect, that they have no souls at all, since they find a good part of their lives pass away without thinking. Locke.

26. To PASS away. To vanish.

My welfare passeth away as a cloud. Job, xxx. 15.

The heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat. 2 Pet. iii. 10.

To PASS. † v. a.

1. To go beyond.

As it is advantageable to a physician to be called to the cure of a declining disease; so it is for a commander to suppress a sedition, which has passed the height: for in both the noxious humour doth first weaken, and afterwards waste to nothing.
Hayward.

2. To go through: as, the horse passed the river.

3. To go through: in a legal sense.

Neither of these bills have yet passed the house of commons, and some think they may be rejected. Swift.

4. To spend; to live through.

By pasting the vowels and consonants on the sides of dice, his eldest son played himself into spelling. Locke.

Young creatures have learned their letters and syllables, by having them pasted upon little flat tablets. Watts.

PA'STEBOARD. n. s. [paste and board.] Masses made anciently by pasting one paper on another: now made sometimes by macerating paper and casting it in moulds, sometimes by pounding old cordage, and casting it in forms.

Tintoret made chambers of board and pasteboard, proportioned to his models, with doors and windows, through which he distributed, on his figures, artificial lights. Dryden.

I would not make myself merry even with a piece of pasteboard, that is invested with a publick character. Addison.

PA'STEBOARD. adj. Made of pasteboard.

Put silkworms on whited brown paper into a pasteboard box. Mortimer.

PA'STEL. n. s. [glastum.] An herb. Ainsworth.

PA'STERN.† n. s. [pasturon, French.]

1. That part of the leg of a horse between the joint next the foot and the hoof.

I will not change my horse with any that treads on four pasterns. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

The colt that for a stallion is design'd,
Upright he walks on pasterns firm and straight,
His motions easy, prancing in his gait. Dryden.

Being heavy, he should not tread stiff, but have a pastern made him, to break the force of his weight: by this his body hangs on the hoof, as a coach doth by the leathers. Grew.

2. The legs of a human creature in contempt, Dr. Johnson says; citing the example from Dryden. Elder poetry seems to exhibit the word for a patten.

She had better have worn pasterns. Beaum. and Fl. Chances.

So straight she walk'd, and on her pasterns high:
If seeing her behind, he lik'd her pace,
Now turning short, he better lik'd her face. Dryden.

PASTICCIO.* n. s. [Italian.] An oglio, a medley.

On our first entrance into the palace which is a pasticcio of Saracenic, Conventual, and Grecian architecture, I was much taken with the principal front of the inner-court. Swinburne, Trav through Spain, L. 31.

This motley mixture of the modes of antient language being worked into a modern ground, has compounded such a pasticcio of style, as is still more unexampled and extravagant. Warton, Rowley Enq p. 44

PA'STIL. n. s. [pastillus, Lat. pastille, Fr.] A roll of paste.

To draw with dry colours, make long pastils, by grinding red lead with strong wort, and so roll them up like pencils, drying them in the sun. Peacham on Drawing.

PA'STIME. n. s. [pass and time.] Sport; amusement; diversion.

It was more requisite for Zelmane's hurt to rest, than sit up at those pastimes; but she, that felt no wound but one, earnestly desired to have the pastorals. Sidney.

I'll be as patient as a gentle stream,
And make a pastime of each weary step,
Till the last step has brought me to my love. Shakespeare.

Pastime passing excellent,
If husbanded with modesty. Shakespeare.

With these
Find pastime, and bear rule; thy realm is large. Milton, P. L.

A man, much addicted to luxury, recreation and pastime, should never pretend to devote himself entirely to the sciences, unless his soul be so refined, that he can taste these entertainments eminently in his closet. Watts.

To PA'STIME.* v. n. [from the noun.] To sport; to take pastime. Huloet.

When did Perseda pastime in the streets,
But her Erastus over-ey'd her sport? Trag. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

PA'STOR. n. s. [pastor, Latin; pasteur, old Fr.]

1. A shepherd.

Receive this present by the muses made,
The pipe on which the Ascræan pastor play'd. Dryden.

The pastor shears their hoary beards,
And eases of their hair the loaden herds. Dryden.

2. A clergyman who has the care of a flock; one who has souls to feed with sound doctrine.

The pastor maketh suits of the people, and they with one voice testify a general assent thereunto, or he joyfully beginneth, and they with like alacrity follow, dividing between them the sentences wherewith they strive, which shall most shew his own, and stir up other's zeal to the glory of God. Hooker.

The first branch of the great work belonging to a pastor of the church, was to teach. South.

All bishops are pastors of the common flock. Leslie.

A breach in the general form of worship was reckoned too unpopular to be attempted, neither was the expedient then found out of maintaining separate pastors out of private purses. Swift.

PA'STORAL. adj. [pastoralis, Latin; pastoral, French.]

1. Rural; rustick; beseeming shepherds; imitating shepherds.

In those pastoral pastimes, a great many days were sent to follow their flying predecessors. Sidney.

2. Relating to the care of souls.

Their lord and master taught concerning the pastoral care he had over his own flock. Hooker.

The bishop of Salisbury recommended the tenth satire of Juvenal, in his pastoral letter, to the serious perusal of the divines of his diocese. Dryden.

PA'STORAL.† n. s.

1. A poem in which any action or passion is represented by its effects upon a country life; or according to the common practice in which speakers take upon them the character of shepherds; an idyl; a bucolick.

Pastoral is an imitation of the action of a shepherd, the form of this imitation is dramatick or narrative, or mixed of both, the fable simple, the manners not too polite nor too rustick. Pope.

The best actors in the world, for tragedy, comedy, history, pastoral. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

There ought to be the same difference between pastorals and elegies, as between the life of the country and the court; the latter should be smooth, clean, tender and passionate; the thoughts may be bold, more gay, and more elevated than in pastoral. Walsh.

2. A book relating to the cure of souls.

The Lord prosper the intention to myself, and others, who may not despise my poor labours, but add to those points which I have observed, until the book grow to a compleat pastoral. Herbert, Country Parson, Pref. (1632.)

PA'STORLIKE.* } adj. [pastor and like.] Becoming PA'STORLY. } a pastor.

The pasterlike and apostolick imitation of meek and unlordly discipline. Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.

Against negligence or obstinacy will be required a rousing volley of pastorly threatenings. Milton, Anim. Rem. Defence.

PA'STORSHIP.* n. s. [from pastor.] The office or rank of a pastor.

The universal pastorship or government of the catholick church, was never claimed by any bishop till towards the end of the sixth century; and then it was thought to be challenged by John, patriarch of Constantinople. Bp. Bull, Corrupt. of the Ch. of Rome.

Why may not the bishop of Antioch pretend to succeed St. Peter in his universal pastorship? Barrow on the Pope's Supremacy.

PA'STRY. n. s. [pastissarie, Fr. from paste.]

1. The act of making pies.

Let never fresh machines your pastry try,
Unless grandees or magistrates are by,
Then you may put a dwarf into a pie. King.

2. Pies or baked paste.

Remember
The seed cake, the pastries and the furmenty pot. Tusser.
Beasts of chase, or fowls of game,
In pastry built, or from the spit, or boil'd,
Gris amber steam'd. Milton, P. R.

3. The place where pastry is made.

They call for dates and quinces in the pastry. Shakspeare.

PA'STRY-COOK. n. s. [pastry and cook.] One whose trade is to make and sell things baked in paste.

I wish you knew what my husband has paid to the pastry-cooks and confectioners. Arbuthnot.

PA'STURABLE. adj. [from pasture.] Fit for pasture.

PA'STURAGE. n. s. [pasturage, French.]

1. The business of feeding cattle.

I wish there were ordinances, that whosoever keepeth twenty kine, should keep a plough going; for otherwise all men would fall to pasturage, and none to husbandry. Spenser.

2. Lands grazed by cattle.

France has a sheep by her to shew, that the riches of the country consisted chiefly in flocks and pasturage. Addison.

3. The use of pasture.

Cattle fatted by good pasturage, after violent motion, die suddenly. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

PA'STURE. n. s. [pasture, French.]

1. Food; the act of feeding.

Unto the conservation is required a solid pasture, and a food congenerous unto nature. Brown. Vulg. Err.

2. Ground on which cattle feed.

A careless herd,
Full of the pasture, jumps along by him,
And never stays. Shakspeare, As you like it.

When there was not room for their herds to feed together, they, by consent, separated and enlarged their pasture where it best liked them. Locke.

The new tribes look abroad
On nature's common, far as they can see
Or wing, their range and pasture. Thomson, Spring.

3. Human culture; education. Not used.

From the first pastures of our infant age,
To elder cares and man's severer page
We lash the pupil. Dryden.

To PA'STURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To place in a pasture.

To PA'STURE.† v. n. [from the noun.] To graze on the ground.

He [Nebuchadnezzar] like an oxe shall Pasture. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 1.

The cattle in the fields and meadows green
Those rare and solitary; these in flocks
Pasturing at once, and in broad herds upsprung. Milton, P. L.

PA'STY. n. s. [paste, French.] A pie of crust raised without a dish.

Of the paste a coffin will I rear,
And make two pasties of your shameful heads. Shakspeare.

I will confess what I know; if ye pinch me like a pasty, I can say no more.

If you'd fright an alderman and mayor,
Within a pasty lodge a living hare. King.

A man of sober life,
Not quite a madman, though a pasty fall,
And much too wise to walk into a well. Pope.

PAT.† adj. [pas, Teut. opportunitas. Skinner. And so Serenius: pass, Sueth. propositum, passa, quadrare. Others have considered it, by a change of letters, to be from the Latin aptus, fit, apt.] Fit; convenient; exactly suitable either as to time or place. This is a low word, and should not be used but in burlesque writings, Dr. Johnson says. It is not now used, but as Dr. Johnson directs, or in colloquial expression. Yet formerly our best writers employed it in their most serious compositions; as Barrow, and Goodman, from whose works examples are now brought. See also PATLY and PATNESS. Dr. Johnson has considered this word only as an adjective; but it is used adverbially, as the two examples from Shakspeare, (which I have removed hence,) and other authorities, plainly shew.

Sometimes it [facetiousness] lieth in pat allusion to a known story. Barrow, Serm. i. 177.

There are some instances of vengeance befalling very flagitious men so signally, and with such pat and significant circumstances, that (without any uncharitableness) we may be led by the suffering to the sin; as in the famous case of Adonibezek, Judg. i. 7. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conference, P. ii.

They never saw two things so pat,
In all respects, as this and that. Hudibras.

Zuinglius dreamed of a text, which he found very pat to his doctrine of the Eucharist. Atterbury.

PAT.* adv. Fitly; conveniently; in a way exactly suitable either as to time or place.

Pat, pat; and here's a marvellous convenient place for our rehearsal Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

Now might I do it pat, now he is praying. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Touching opinion, so various are the intellectuals of human creatures, that one can hardly find out two who jump pat in one. Howell, Lett. iii. 5.

He was sorely put to't at the end of a verse,
Because he could find no word to come pat in. Swift.

PAT.† n. s. [patte, Fr. is a foot, and thence pat may be a blow with the foot. Dr. Johnson. — Others derive it from the Fr. bat, a blow; and that from the very ancient word bata, as Serenius observes, to strike. It may, by a metathesis, however, be no other than the word tap, a gentle blow. See To TAP.]

1. A light quick blow; a tap.

The least noise is enough to disturb the operation of his brain; the pat of a shuttle-cock, or the creaking of a jack will do. Collier on Human Reason.

2. Small lump of matter beat into shape with the hand.

To PAT. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike lightly; to tap.

Children prove, whether they can rub upon the breast with one hand, and pat upon the forehead with another, and straightways they pat with both. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Gay pats my shoulder, and you vanish quite. Pope.

PA'TACHE.† n. s. [patache, Fr. See Menage in V.] A small ship. Ainsworth.

PATACOO'N.† n. s. A Spanish coin worth four shillings and eight-pence English. Ainsworth.

This makes Spain to purchase peace of her with his Italian patacoons. Howell, Lett. iv. 47.

PATCH.† n. s. [pezzo, Italian. Serenius considers it, by a change of letters, no other than botch, from the Goth. bocta, bota. Mr. H. Tooke contends that patch in both its applications, viz. to men and clothes, is the past participle of the Anglo-saxon verb pæcan, to deceive by false appearances, imitation, resemblance, or representation.]

1. A piece sewed on to cover a hole.

Patches set upon a little breach,
Discredit more in hiding of the flaw,
Than did the flaw before it was so patch'd. Shakspeare.

If the shoe be ript, or patches put;
He's wounded! see the plaister on his foot. Dryden.

2. A piece inserted in mosaick or variegated work.

They suffer their minds to appear in a pie-bald livery of coarse patches and borrowed shreds, such as the common opinion of those they converse with clothe them in. Locke.

3. A small spot of black silk put on the face.

How! providence! and yet a Scottish crew!
Then madam nature wears black patches too. Cleaveland.

If to every common funeral,
By your eyes martyr'd, such grace were allow'd,
Your face would wear not patches, but a cloud. Suckling.

They were patched differently, and cast hostile glances upon one another, and their patches were placed in different situations as party-signals to distinguish friends from foes. Addison.

This the morning omens seem'd to tell;
Thrice from my trembling hand the patch-box fell. Pope.

4. A small particle; a parcel of land.

We go to gain a little patch of ground,
That hath in it no profit but the name. Shakspeare.

5. A paltry fellow. Obsolete. "It seems probable that fools were nicknamed patch from their dress; unless there happen to be a nearer affinity to the Italian pazzo, a word that has all the appearance of a descent from fatuus. This was the opinion of Mr. Tyrwhitt. — But, though a patch denotes a fool or simpleton, and, by corruption, a clown, it seems to have been occasionally used in the sense of any low or mean person. Thus in the Midsummer Night's Dream Puck calls Bottom and his companions a crew of patches, rude mechanicals, certainly not meaning to compare them to pampered and sleek buffoons. Whether in this sense the term have a simple reference to that class of people whose clothes might be pieced or patched with rags, or whether it is to be derived from the Sax. verb pæcan, to deceive by false appearances, as suggested by the acute and ingenious author of the Diversions of Purley, must be left to the reader's own discernment." Douce, Illustr. of Shakspeare, vol. i. p. 258.

He [was] yet more foole in Plautus, whome his malaperte squire made to beleeve that all women accompted him so fayre, as they ran in every place after him. The patche, supposing it to be true, sayd, It is a greate paine to be an over fayre man! North, Tr. of Philosopher at Court, (1575,) p. 90.

What a pied ninny's this! thou scurvy patch! Shakspeare, Tempest.

Laugh at me —
I do deserve it; call me patch, and puppy. Beaum. and Fl. Wild Goose Chase.

To Patch.† v. a. [pudtzer, Danish; pezzare, Italian. See Patch.]

1. To cover with a piece sewed on.

They would think themselves miserable in a patched coat, and yet their minds appear in a piebald livery of coarse patches and borrowed shreds. Locke.

2. To decorate the face with small spots of black silk.

In the middle boxes, were several ladies who patched both sides of their faces. Addison, Spect.

We begg'd her but to patch her face,
She never hit one proper place. Swift.

3. To mend clumsily; to mend so as that the original strength or beauty is lost.

Any thing mended, is but patch'd. Shakspeare.

Physick can but mend our crazy state,
Patch an old building, not a new create. Dryden.

Broken limbs, common prudence sends us to the surgeons to piece and patch up. L'Estrange.

4. To make up of shreds or different pieces. Sometimes with up emphatical.

If we seek to judge of those times, which the Scriptures set us down without errour, by the reigns of the Assyrian princes, we shall but patch up the story at adventure, and leave it in confusion. Ralegh, Hist.

His glorious end was a patch'd work of fate,
Ill sorted with a soft effeminate life. Dryden.

There is that visible symmetry in a human body, as gives an intrinsick evidence, that it was not formed successively and patched up by piece-meal. Bentley.

Enlarging an author's sense, and building fancies of our own upon his foundation, we may call paraphrasing; but more properly changing, adding, patching, piecing. Felton.

5. To dress in a party-coloured coat.

Man is but a patched fool. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

Pa'tcher. n. s. [from patch.] One that patches; a botcher.

Pa'tchery. n. s. [from patch.] Botchery; bungling work; forgery. A word not in use.

You hear him cogg, see him dissemble,
Know his gross patchery, love him, and feed him,
Yet remain assur'd that he's a made-up villain. Shakspeare.

Pa'tchwork. n. s. [patch and work.] Work made by sewing small pieces of different colours interchangeably together.

When my cloaths were finished, they looked like the patchwork, only mine were all of a colour. Swift.

Whoever only reads to transcribe shining remarks, without entering into the genius and spirit of the author, will be apt to be misled out of the regular way of thinking; and all the product of all this will be found a manifest incoherent piece of patchwork. Swift.

Foreign her air, her robe's discordant pride
In patchwork fluttering. Pope.

To patchwork learn'd quotations are ally'd,
Both strive to make our poverty our pride. Young.

PATE.† n. s. [This is derived by Skinner from tête, Fr. It may be, however, a corrupted contraction of the Lat. caput, the head.] The head. Now commonly used in contempt or ridicule, but anciently in serious language.

Senseless man, that himself doth hate,
To love another;
Here take thy lover's token on thy pate. Spenser.

Behold the despaire,
By custome and covetous pates,
By gaps and opening of gates. Tusser.

He is a traitor, let him to the tower,
And crop away that factious pate of his. Shakspeare.

Steal by line and level is an excellent pass of pate. Shakspeare.

That sly devil,
That broker that still breaks the pate of faith,
That daily breakvow. Shakspeare.

Who dares
Say this man is a flatterer? The learned pate
Ducks to the golden fool. Shakspeare.

Thank your gentler fate,
That, for a bruis'd or broken pate,
Has freed you from those knobs that grow
Much harder on the married brow. Hudibras.

If only scorn attends men for asserting the church's dignity, many will rather chuse to neglect their duty, than to get a broken pate in the church's service. South.

If any young novice happens into the neighbourhood of flatterers, presently they are plying his full purse and empty pate with addresses suitable to his vanity. South.

PA'TED. adj. [from pate.] Having a pate. It is used only in composition: as, long-pated or cunning; shallow-pated or foolish.

PATEFA'CTION.† n. s. [patefactio, Lat.] Act or state of opening; declaration.

The decalogue he [Moses] received from the hand of God, written with the finger of God; the rest of the divine patefactions he wrote himself. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

God hath still preserved and quickened the worship due unto his name, by the patefaction of himself. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

PA'TEN.† n. s. [patina, Lat.]

1. A plate. Not now in use.

The floor of heav'n
Is thick inlaid with patens of bright gold;
There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings. Shakspeare.

2. The cover of the chalice used in Romish churches to hold particles of the host: formerly patel also, from patella, Lat. a little deep dish.

Crosses — with your thombe on your forheade, an other upon your crowne, wyth the patell of the chalice. Confut. of N. Shaxton, (1546,) F. 8. b.

They have the chalice with wine, and paten with hosts, given unto them. Bp. Bedell, Lett. p. 472.

PA'TENT.† adj. [patens, Lat. patent, Fr.]

1. Open to the perusal of all: as, letters patent.

In Ireland, where the king disposes of bishopricks merely by his letters patent, without any Conge d'Elire, which is still kept up in England; though to no other purpose than to shew the ancient right of the church to elect her own bishops. Leslie.

2. Something appropriated by letters patent.

Madder is esteemed a commodity that will turn to good profit; so that, in king Charles the first's time, it was made a patent commodity. Mortimer, Husb.

3. Apparent; conspicuous. This sense is perhaps of modern introduction.

In this country the contract [between the king and nation] is not tacit, implied, and vague: it is explicit, patent, and precise: it is summarily expressed in the coronation oath; it is drawn out at length and in detail in the Great Charter and the corroborating Statutes, in the Petition of Right, in the Habeas Corpus Act, in the Bill of Rights, and in the Act of Settlement. Bp. Horsley, Serm. 30. Jan. (1793.)

PA'TENT. n. s. A writ conferring some exclusive right or privilege.

If you are so fond over her iniquity, give her patent to offend; if it touch not you, it comes near no body. Shakspeare.

So will I grow, so live, so die,
Ere I will yield my virgin patent up
Unto his lordship. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

We are censured as obstinate, in not complying with a royal patent. Swift.

PATENTEE'. n. s. [from patent.] One who has a patent.

If his tenant and patentee dispose of his gift, without his kingly consent, the lands shall revert to the king. Bacon.

In the patent granted to lord Dartmouth, the securities obliged the patentee to receive his money back upon every demand. Swift.

PA'TER-NOSTER.† n. s. [Latin.] The Lord's prayer.

He did desire
Short pater-nosters, saying as a friar
Each day his beads. Donne, Poems, p. 124.

An ignorant plain man having learned his pater-noster and ave-mary, wants to learn his creed. Pope, cited by Warton, Hist. E. P. i. 287.

PATE'RNAL. adj. [paternus, Lat. paternel, Fr.]

1. Fatherly; having the relation of a father; pertaining to a father.

I disclaim all my paternal care,
Propinquity and property of blood,
And as a stranger to my heart and me
Hold thee. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Grace signifies the paternal favour of God to his elect children. Hammond.

Admonitions fraternal or paternal of his fellow-christians or governors of the church. Hammond.

They spend their days in joy unblam'd; and dwell
Long time in peace, by families and tribes,
Under paternal rule. Milton, P. L.

2. Hereditary; received in succession from one's father.

Men plough with oxen of their own
Their small paternal field of corn. Dryden.

He held his paternal estate from the bounty of the conqueror. Dryden.

Retreat betimes
To thy paternal seat, the Sabine field,
Where the great Cato toil'd with his own hands. Addison.

PATE'RNITY. n. s. [from paternus, Lat. paternité, Fr.] Fathership; the relation of a father.

The world, while it had scarcity of people, underwent no other dominion than paternity and eldership. Ralegh.

A young heir, kept short by his father, might be known by his countenance; in this case, the paternity and filiation leave very sensible impressions. Arbuthnot.

This origination in the divine paternity, as bishop Pearson speaks, hath antiently been looked upon as the assertion of the unity. Waterland.

PATH.† n. s. [paað, pað, pæð, Saxon; pad, Belg. pead, Germ. from pedden, pedibus conculcare: "verbum à vetustissimis linguis usurpatum." Wachter.] Way; road; track. In conversation it is used of a narrow way to be passed on foot; but in solemn language means any passage.

For darkness, where is the place thereof? that thou shouldst know the paths to the house thereof. Job, xxxviii. 20.

On the glad earth the golden age renew,
And thy great father's path to heaven pursue. Dryden.
The dewy paths of meadows we will tread. Dryden.

There is but one road by which to climb up, and they have a very severe law against any that enters the town by another path, lest any new one should be worn on the mountain. Addison on Italy.

To PATH.* v. a. [from the noun. Sax. peððian.] To push forward; to cause to go: to make way for.

O conspiracy, —
Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough
To mask thy monstrous visage? Seek none, conspiracy;
Hide in it smiles and affability:
For if thou path thy native semblance on,
Not Erebus itself were dim enough
To hide thee from prevention. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

From the neighbouring hills her passage Wey doth path. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 2.

PATHE'TICAL. } adj. [παθητικὸς; pathetique, Fr.]
PATHE'TICK. } Affecting the passions; passionate; moving.

His page that handful of wit;
'Tis most pathetical. Shakspeare.

How pathetick is that expostulation of Job, when, for the trial of his patience, he was made to look upon himself in this deplorable condition. Spectator.

Tully considered the dispositions of a sincere and less mercurial nation, by dwelling on the pathetick part. Swift.

While thus pathetick to the prince he spoke,
From the brave youth the streaming passion broke. Pope.

PATHE'TICALLY. adv. [from pathetical.] In such a manner as may strike the passions.

These reasons, so pathetically urged and so admirably raised by the prosopopoia of nature, speaking to her children with so much authority, deserve the pains I have taken. Dryden.

PATHE'TICALNESS.† n. s. [from pathetical.] Quality of being pathetick; quality of moving the passions.

These words, excepting these bonds, Acts, xxvi. 29. close the discourse with wonderful grace; surprize the hearers with an agreeable civility; and impress upon them a strong opinion of the speaker's sincerity, charity, and benevolence to mankind. Had they (παρεκτὸς τῶν δεσμῶν τούτων) been placed any where else, the patheticalness, grace, and dignity of the sentence had been much abated. Blackwall, Sacr. Class. i. 339.

PA'THFLY.* n. s. [path and fly, humisuga, Lat.] A fly found in foot-paths, of a greyish colour; and supposed to live by sucking the ground.

PA'THLESS. adj. [from path.] Untrodden; not marked with paths.

Ask thou the citizens of pathless woods;
What cut the air with wings, what swim in floods. Sandys.

Like one that had been led astray
Through the heavens wide pathless way. Milton, Il Pens.

In fortune's empire blindly thus we go,
And wander after pathless destiny,
Whose dark resorts since prudence cannot know;
In vain it would provide. Dryden.

Through mists obscure, she wings her tedious way,
Now wanders dazzled with too bright a day;
And from the summit of a pathless coast
Sees infinite, and in that sight is lost. Prior.

PATHOGNOMO'NICK.† adj. [παθογνωμονικὸς, πάθος and γινώσκω. Formerly pathognomick or pathognomical.] Denoting such signs of a disease as are inseparable, designing the essence or real nature of the disease; not symptomatick. Quincy.

Fear and sadness are the pathognomical signs of all kinds of melancholy. Ferrand on Love Mel. (1640,) p. 80.

He has the true pathognomonick sign of love, jealousy; for no body will suffer his mistress to be treated at that rate. Arbuthnot.

PATHOLO'GICAL. adj. [pathologique, Fr. from pathology.] Relating to the tokens or discoverable effects of a distemper.

PATHO'LOGIST. n. s. [πάθος and λέγω.] One who treats of pathology.

PATHO'LOGY.† n. s. [πάθος and λέγω; pathologie, Fr.] That part of medicine which relates to distempers, with their differences, causes, and effects incident to the human body. Quincy.

This tree may naturally be conceived to have been under some disease indisposing it to such fructification. And this, in the pathology of plants, may be the disease of superfoliation mentioned by Theophrastus. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 76.

*PA'THOS. n. s. [Greek.] Passion; vehemence; warmth; affection of mind; energy; that which excites the passions: long since introduced into our language, but overpassed by Dr. Johnson.

"Lord, if thou wilt pardon this people!" It was a vehement pathos: "If thou wilt pardon it!" He saith no more, but, "If thou wilt not, put me out of the book of life."— Here is a vehement prayer; and with this he slacks the wrath of God, and quencheth it. Dr. Westfeild, Disc. (1646,) p. 127.

By the simplicity of its conduct, it diminishes the pathos of the fable. Mason, Lett. pref. to Elfrida, L. 2.

Before these books became common, affecting situations, the combination of incident, and the pathos of catastrophe, were almost unknown. Warton, Hist. of E. P. iii. 495.

PA'THWAY. n. s. [path and way.] A road; in common acceptation; a narrow way to be passed on foot.

Alas, that love, whose view is muffl'd still,
Should without eyes see pathways to his ill. Shakspeare.

In the way of righteousness is life, and in the pathway thereof there is no death. Prov. xii. 28.

When in the middle pathway basks the snake;
O lead me, guard me from the sultry hours. Gay.

PA'TIBLE. adj. [from patior, Lat.] Sufferable; tolerable. Dict.

PATI'BULARY. adj. [patibulaire, Fr. from patibulum, Lat.] Belonging to the gallows. Dict.

PA'TIENCE. n. s. [patience, French; patientia, Latin.]

1. The power of suffering; calm endurance of pain or labour.

The king becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude;
I have no relish of them. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Christian fortitude and patience have their opportunity in times of affliction and persecution. Sprat, Serm.

Frequent debauch to habitude prevails,
Patience of toil and love of virtue fails. Prior.

2. The quality of expecting long without rage or discontent; long-suffering.

Necessary patience in seeking the Lord, is better than he that leadeth his life without a guide. Ecclus. xx. 32.

Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all. St. Matthew.

3. Perseverance; continuance of labour.

He learnt with patience, and with meekness taught;
His life was but the comment of his thought. Harte.

4. The quality of bearing offences without revenge or anger.

The hermit then assum'd a bolder tone,
His rage was kindled, and his patience gone. Harte.

5. Sufferance; permission.

By their patience, be it spoken, the apostles preached as well when they wrote, as when they spake the gospel. Hooker.

6. An herb. A species of dock.

Patience, an herb, makes a good boiled sallad. Mortimer.

PA'TIENT. adj. [patient, Fr. patiens, Lat.]

1. Having the quality of enduring: with of before the thing endured.

To this outward structure was joined strength of constitution, patient of severest toil and hardship. Fell.

Wheat, which is the best sort of grain, of which the purest bread is made, is patient of heat and cold. Ray.

2. Calm under pain or affliction.

Be patient, and I will stay. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Griev'd, but unmov'd, and patient of your scorn,
I die. Dryden, Theocritus.

3. Not revengeful against injuries.

4. Not easily provoked.

Warn them that are unruly, support the weak, be patient toward all men. 1 Thess. v. 14.

5. Persevering; calmly diligent.

Whatever I have done is due to patient thought. Newton.

6. Not hasty; not viciously eager or impetuous.

Too industrious to be great,
Nor patient to expect the turns of fate,
The open'd camps deform'd by civil fight. Prior.

PA'TIENT. n. s. [patient, Fr.]

1. That which receives impressions from external agents.

Malice is a passion so impetuous and precipitate, that it often involves the agent and the patient. Gov. of the Tongue.

To proper patients he kind agents brings,
In various leagues binds disagreeing things. Creech.

Action and passion are modes which belong to substances: when a smith with a hammer strikes a piece of iron, the hammer and the smith are both agents or subjects of action; the one supreme, and the other subordinate: the iron is the patient or the subject of passion, in a philosophical sense, because it receives the operation of the agent. Watts, Logick.

2. A person diseased. It is commonly used of the relation between the sick and the physician.

You deal with me like a physician, that seeing his patient in a pestilent fever, should chide instead of administering help, and bid him be sick no more. Sidney.

Through ignorance of the disease, through unreasonableness of the time, instead of good he worketh hurt, and out of one evil throweth the patient into many miseries. Spenser.

A physician uses various methods for the recovery of sick persons; and though all of them are disagreeable, his patients are never angry. Addison.

3. It is sometimes, but rarely used absolutely for a sick person.

Nor will the raging fever's fire abate
With golden canopies or beds of state;
But the poor patient will as soon be sound
On the hard matress or the mother ground. Dryden.

It is wonderful to observe, how inapprehensive these patients are of their disease, and backward to believe their case is dangerous. Blackmore.

To PA'TIENT.† v. a. [patienter, Fr.] To compose one's self; to behave with patience. Obsolete.

Patient yourself, good master friar, quoth he, and be not angry. Robinson, Tr. of More's Utopia, (1551,) Intr.

Patient yourself, madam, and pardon me. Titus Andronicus.

PA'TIENTLY. adv. [from patient.]

1. Without rage under pain or affliction.

Lament not Eve, but patiently resign
What justly thou hast lost. Milton, P. L.

Ned is in the gout,
Lies rack'd with pain, and you without,
How patiently you hear him groan!
How glad the case is not your own. Swift.

2. Without vicious impetuosity; with calm diligence.

That which they grant, we gladly accept at their hands, and wish that patiently they would examine how little cause they have to deny that which as yet they grant not. Hooker.

Could men but once be persuaded patiently to attend to the dictates of their own minds, religion would gain more proselytes. Calamy, Serm.

PA'TIN.† n. s. [patine, old Fr. patina, Lat.] The cover of a chalice. Ainsworth. See the second sense of PATEN.

PA'TLY.† adv. [from pat.] Commodiously; fitly.

Which words how patly, how livelily, do they set out our Saviour's being nailed to the cross. Barrow, vol. ii. S. 26.

PA'TNESS.* n. s. [from pat.] Convenience; propriety; suitableness.

This the Holy Spirit wished, in an age so resembling ours, that, I fear, the description with equal patness may suit both. Barrow, vol. i. S. 17.

PA'TRIARCH. n. s. [patriarche, Fr. patriarcha, Latin.]

1. One who governs by paternal right; the father and ruler of a family.

So spake the patriarch of mankind; but Eve
Persisted, yet submiss. Milton, P. L.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees,
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state; and in three more decays. Dryden.

2. A bishop superiour to archbishops.

The patriarchs for an hundred years had been of one house, to the prejudice of the church, and there yet remained one bishop of the same kindred. Ralegh.

Where secular primates were heretofore given, the ecclesiastical laws have ordered patriarchs and ecclesiastical primates to be placed. Ayliffe, Parergon.

PATRIA'RCHAL. adj. [patriarchal, Fr. from partriarch.]

1. Belonging to patriarchs; such as was possessed or enjoyed by patriarchs.

Such drowsy sedentary souls have they,
Who would to patriarchal years live on,
Fix'd to hereditary clay,
And know no climate but their own. Norris.

Nimrod enjoyed this patriarchal power; but he against right enlarged his empire, by seizing violently on the rights of other lords. Locke.

2. Belonging to hierarchical patriarchs.

Archbishops or metropolitans in France, are immediately subject to the pope's jurisdiction; and, in other places, they are immediately subject to the patriarchal sees. Ayliffe.

PA'TRIARCHATE. } PA'TRIARCHSHIP. } n. s. [patriarchat, Fr. from patriarch.] A bishoprick superiour to archbishopricks.

The questions are as ancient as the differences between Rome and any other of the old patriarchats. Selden.

Prelacies may be termed the greater benefices; as that of the pontificate, a patriarchship and archbishoprick. Ayliffe.

PA'TRIARCHY. n. s. Jurisdiction of a patriarch; patriarchate.

Calabria pertained to the patriarch of Constantinople, as appeareth in the novel of Leo Sophus, touching the precedence of metropolitans belonging to that patriarchy. Brerewood.

PATRI'CIAN. adj. [patricien, Fr. patricius, Lat.] Senatorial; noble; not plebeian.

I see
The insulting tyrant prancing o'er the field,
His horse's hoofs wet with patrician blood. Addison.

PATRI'CIAN. n. s. A nobleman.

Noble patricians, patrons of my right,
Defend the justice of my cause with arms. Shakspeare.

You'll find Gracchus, from patrician, grown
A fencer and the scandal of the town. Dryden.

Your daughters are all married to wealthy patricians. Swift.

PATRIMO'NIAL.† adj. [patrimonial, Fr. from patrimony.]

1. Possessed by inheritance.

The expence of the duke of Ormond's own great patrimonial estate, that came over at that time, is of no small consideration in the stock of this kingdom. Temple.

Their patrimonial sloth the Spaniards keep,
And Philip first taught Philip how to sleep. Dryden.

2. Claimed by right of birth; hereditary.

No longer doubting, all prepare to fly,
And repossess their patrimonial sky.
Dryden, Religio Laici, P. iii.

I feel myself thy son, and pant,
For patrimonial skies. Young, Resign. P. ii.

PATRIMO'NIALLY. adv. [from patrimonial.] By inheritance.

Good princes have not only made a distinction between what was their own patrimonially, as the civil law books term it, and what the state had an interest in. Davenant.

PA'TRIMONY. n. s. [patrimonium, Latin; patrimoine, Fr.] An estate possessed by inheritance.

Inclosures they would not forbid, for that had been to forbid the improvement of the patrimony of the kingdom. Bacon.

So might the heir, whose father hath, in play,
Wasted a thousand pounds of ancient rent,
By painful earning of one groat a day,
Hope to restore the patrimony spent. Davies.

In me all
Posterity stands curs'd! fair patrimony
That I must leave ye, sons. Milton, P. L.

For his redemption, all my patrimony
I am ready to forego and quit. Milton, S. A.

Their ships like wasted patrimonies shew;
Where the thin scattering trees admit the light,
And shun each other's shadows as they grow. Dryden.

The shepherd last appears,
And with him all his patrimony bears;
His house and household gods, his trade of war,
His bow and quiver, and his trusty cur. Dryden.

PA'TRIOT.† n. s. [patriot, Fr. Cotgrave; from the Lat. patria.]

1. One whose ruling passion is the love of his country. This word is old in our language. Cotgrave calls a' "patriot, one's countryman," in V. PATRIOTE. The French patriot he renders "a father or protector of the country." Bishop Hall uses patriot in its present good meaning; but Dr. Johnson has produced no other example than from the writers of queen Anne's time.

Joseph — merited the name of the saviour of Egypt. And if any worthy patriot, out of a like providence, shall beforehand gather up the commodities into a publick magazine, for the common benefit and relief of the people, upon the pinch of an ensuing necessity, he is so far out of the reach of censure, as that he well deserves a statue with the inscription of a public benefactor. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 1. C. 5.

Patriots, who for sacred freedom stood. Tickell.

The firm patriot there,
Who made the welfare of mankind his care,
Shall know he conquer'd. Addison, Cato.

Here tears shall flow from a more generous cause,
Such tears as patriots shed for dying laws. Pope.

2. It is sometimes used ironically for a factious disturber of the government.

Gull'd with a patriot's name, whose modern sense
Is one that would by law supplant his prince;
The people's brave, the politician's tool,
Never was patriot yet, but was a fool. Dryden.

PA'TRIOT.* adj. Actuated by the care of one's country; wishing and endeavouring to promote the publick good.

That his [Swift's] patriot spirit was restrained so long, is not to be wondered at. Delany, Observ. on Ld. Orrery's Life of Swift.

Ah let not Britons doubt their social aim,
Whose ardent bosoms catch this ancient fire!
Cold interest melts before the vivid flame,
And patriot ardours, but with life, expire. Shenstone, El. 2.

PATRIO'TICK.* adj. Full of patriotism. Dr. Johnson has repeatedly used this word in an ironical way.

Dennis — declares with great patriotick vehemence, that he who allows Shakspeare learning, and a learning with the ancients, ought to be looked upon as a detractor from the glory of Great Britain. Farmer, Ess. on the Learning of Shakspeare.

During the protectorship of Cromwell, a time of which the patriotick tribes still more ardently desire the return, the Spanish dominions were again attempted. Johnson, Falkland's Islands.

PA'TRIOTISM.† n. s. [from patriot.] Love of one's country; zeal for one's country.

Being loud and vehement either against a court, or for a court, is no proof of patriotism. Bp. Berkeley, Maxims, (1750,) § 2.

If "pro aris et focis" be the life of patriotism, he who hath no religion or no home makes a suspected patriot. Ibid, § 16.

Where the heart is right, there is true patriotism. Ibid. § 32.

A man rages, rails, and raves; I suspect his patriotism. Ibid. § 39.

It is the quality of patriotism to be jealous and watchful, to observe all secret machinations, and to see publick dangers at a distance. Johnson, The Patriot.

To PATRO'CINATE. v. a. [patrocinor, Latin; patrociner, old French.] To patronize; to protect; to defend. Dict.

PATROCINA'TION.* n. s. [from To patrocinate.] Countenance: support.

Those shameful libels, those patrocinations of treason. Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

PATRO'L. n. s. [patrouille, patouille, old French.]

1. The act of going the rounds in a garrison, to observe that orders are kept.

2. Those that go the rounds.

O thou! by whose almighty nod the scale
Of empire rises, or alternate falls,
Send forth the saving virtues round the land
In bright patrol. Thomson, Summer.

To PATRO'L. v. n. [patrouiller, Fr.] To go the rounds in a camp or garrison.

These outguards of the mind are sent abroad
And still patrolling beat the neighbouring road,
Or to the parts remote obedient fly,
Keep posts advanc'd, and on the frontier lie. Blackmore.

PA'TRON. n. s. [patron, Fr. patronus, Latin.]

1. One who countenances, supports, or protects. Commonly a wretch who supports with insolence, and is paid with flattery.

I'll plead for you as for my patron. Shakspeare.

Ne'er let me pass in silence Dorset's name;
Ne'er cease to mention the continu'd debt,
Which the great patron only would forget. Prior.

2. A guardian saint.

Thou amongst those saints whom thou dost see,
Shall be a saint, and thine own nation's friend
And patron. Spenser.

St. Michael is mentioned as the patron of the Jews, and is now taken by the Christians as the protector general of our religion. Dryden.

3. Advocate; defender; vindicator.

We are no patrons of those things; the best defence whereof is speedy redress and amendment. Hooker.

Whether the minds of men have naturally imprinted on them the ideas of extension and number, I leave to those who are the patrons of innate principles. Locke.

4. One who has donation of ecclesiastical preferment.

Far more the patrons than the clerks inflame,
Patrons of sense afraid, but not of vice,
Or swoln with pride, or sunk in avarice. Wesley.

PA'TRONAGE. n. s. [from patron.]

1. Support; protection.

Lady, most worthy of all duty, how falls it out, that you, in whom all virtue shines, will take the patronage of fortune, the only rebellious handmaid against virtue. Sidney.

Here's patronage, and here our heart descries,
What breaks its bonds, what draws the closer ties,
Shews what rewards our services may gain,
And how too often we may court in vain. Creech.

2. Guardianship of saints.

From certain passages of the poets, several ships made choice of some god or other for their guardians, as among the Roman Catholicks every vessel is recommended to the patronage of some particular saint. Addison.

3. Donation of a benefice; right of conferring a benefice.

To PA'TRONAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To patronize; to protect. A bad word.

Dar'st thou maintain the former words thou spak'st?
Yes, sir, as well as you dare patronage
The envious barking of your saucy tongue. Shakspeare.

An out-law in a castle keeps,
And uses it to patronage his theft. Shakspeare.

PATRO'NAL. adj. [from patronus, Lat.] Protecting; supporting; guarding; defending; doing the office of a patron.

The name of the city being discovered unto their enemies, their penates and patronal gods might be called forth by charms. Brown, Vulg. Err.

PA'TRONESS.† n. s. [feminine of patron; patrona, Latin.]

1. A female that defends, countenances, or supports.

Of close escapes the aged patroness,
Blacker than erst, her sable mantle spred,
When with two trusty maids in great distress,
Both from mine uncle and my realm I fled. Fairfax.

All things should be guided by her direction, as the sovereign patroness and protectress of the enterprise. Bacon.

Befriend me, night, best patroness of grief,
Over the pole thy thickest mantle throw. Milton, Ode.

He petitioned his patroness, who gave him for answer, that providence had assigned every bird its proportion. L'Estrange.

It was taken into the protection of my patronesses at court. Swift.

2. A female guardian saint.

With wandering steps to search the citadel,
And from the priests their patroness to steal. Dryden, Ovid.

They took her for their patroness, and consequently for their she-god. Brevint, Saul and Sam. at Endor, p. 161.

3. A woman that hath the gift of a benefice.

PA'TRONLESS.* adj. [patron and less.] Without a patron.

The arts and sciences must not be left patronless. Ld. Shaftesbury, Adv. to Auth. P. ii. § 1.

To PA'TRONISE. v. a. [from patron.] To protect; to support; to defend; to countenance.

Churchmen are to be had in due respect for their work sake, and protected from scorn; but if a clergyman be loose and scandalous, he must not be patronized nor winked at. Bacon.

All tenderness of conscience against good laws is hypocrisy, and patronized by none but men of design, who look upon it as the fittest engine to get into power. South.

I have been esteemed and patronised by the grandfather, the father, and the son. Dryden.

PA'TRONISER.* n. s. [from To patronise.] One who countenances or supports.

That vain-glorious patronizer of dissensions and erroneous doctrines. Skelton, Deism Rev. Dial. viii.

PATRONY'MICK. n. s. [πατρωνυμικὸς, patronymique, Fr.] Name expressing the name of the father or ancestor: as, Tydides, the son of Tydeus.

It ought to be rendered the son, Tectonides being a patronymick. Broome.

PA'TTEN of a pillar. n. s. Its base. Ainsworth.

PA'TTEN.† n. s. [patin, Fr. Some derive this word from the Greek πάτεω, to tread; others from the Fr. pate, or patte, a broad foot, which Cotgrave renders also "a plate or band of iron."] A shoe of wood with an iron ring, worn under the common shoe by women, to keep them from the dirt.

Their shoes and pattens are snouted and piked more than a finger long, crooking upwards, which they call crackowes, which were fastened to the knees with chains of gold and silver. Camden, Rem.

Good housewives
Underneath the umbrella's oily shed,
Safe through the wet on clinking pattens tread. Gay.

PA'TTENMAKER. n. s. [patten and maker.] He that makes pattens.

To PA'TTER. v. n. [from patte, Fr. the foot.] To make a noise like the quick steps of many feet.

Patt'ring hail comes pouring on the main,
When Jupiter descends in harden'd rain. Dryden.

The stealing shower is scarce to patter heard
By such as wander through the forest walks. Thomson.

To PA'TTER.* v. a. [derived by Mr. Tyrwhitt from pater-noster, supposing that the word originally meant to repeat the paternoster; but Serenius mentions the Sw. paetra, and Arm. patteren, which he deduces from the Icel. patte, a boy, and thus gives to the verb the meaning of imitating the language of boys.] To recite or repeat hastily. The word is used in Scotland; and in some places of England, Dr. Jamieson observes, they yet say, in derisory language, "to patter out prayers."

The people pattre and praie. Chaucer, Rom. R. 6794.

PA'TTERN. n. s. [patron, Fr. patroon, Dutch.]

1. The original proposed to imitation; the archetype; that which is to be copied; an exemplar.

As though your desire were, that the churches of old should be patterns for us to follow, and even glasses wherein we might see the practice of that which by you is gathered out of Scripture. Hooker.

I will be the pattern of all patience;
I will say nothing. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

A pattern to all princes living with her,
And all that shall succeed. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

The example and pattern of the church of Rome. Clarendon.

Lose not the honour you have early won;
But stand the blameless pattern of a son. Dryden.

Measure the excellency of a virtuous mind; not as it is the copy, but the pattern of regal power. Grew.

Patterns to rule by are to be sought for out of good, not loose reigns. Davenant.

This pattern should be our guide, in our present state of pilgrimage. Atterbury.

Christianity commands us to act after a nobler pattern, than the virtues even of the most perfect men. Rogers.

Take pattern by our sister star,
Delude at once and bless our sight;
When you are seen, be seen from far,
And chiefly chuse to shine by night. Swift.

2. A specimen; a part shown as a sample of the rest.

A gentleman sends to my shop for a pattern of stuff; if he like it, he compares the pattern with the whole piece, and probably we bargain. Swift.

3. An instance; an example.

What God did command touching Canaan, the same concerneth not us otherwise than only as a fearful pattern of his just displeasure against sinful nations. Hooker.

4. Any thing cut out in paper to direct the cutting of cloth.

To PA'TTERN.† v. a. [patronner, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To make in imitation of something; to copy.

Ay, such a place there is, where we did hunt,
Pattern'd by that the poet here describes. Shakspeare.

The shape [of the temple] they say was revealed to Abraham out of heaven, patterned from that which Adam reared in paradise! Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 163.

2. To serve as an example to be followed. Neither sense is now much in use.

That way of patterning a commonwealth, was most absolute; though he [Sir Thomas More] hath not so absolutely performed it. Sidney, Def. of Poesy.

When I that censure him do so offend,
Let mine own judgement pattern out my death,
And nothing come in partial. Shakspeare.

PA'TTY.* n. s. [pâté, Fr.] A little pie; as, a veal-patty. It should be paty, but it is usually pronounced patty.

PA'TTYPAN.* n. s. A pan to bake a little pie in.

PA'VAN.† } PA'VIN. } n. s. [pavane, Fr. from the Lat. pavo, a peacock, as some have supposed; but there is good reason, Mr. Douce believes, for thinking the term is Italian, and derived from the city of Padua, where the dance is said to have been invented: Yet it was formerly called a Spanish dance.] A grave kind of dance: not a light tripping dance, as Dr. Johnson, following Ainsworth, has asserted. The method of performing it, Sir John Hawkins says, was anciently by gentlemen dressed with a cap and sword; by those of the long robe in their gowns; by princes in their mantles; and by ladies in gowns with long trains, the motion of which in the dance resembled that of a peacock's tail.

After a passy-measure, or a pavin, I hate a drunken rogue. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

Who doth not see the measure of the moon,
Which thirteen times she danceth ev'ry year?

And ends her pavin thirteen times as soon,
As doth her brother. Davies, Orchestra.
Your Spanish ruffs are the best wear, your Spanish pavin the best dance. B. Jonson, Alchemist.

PAUCI'LOQUY. n. s. [pauciloquium, Latin.] Sparing and rare speech. Dict.

PAU'CITY. n. s. [paucitas, from paucus, Lat.]

1. Fewness; smallness of number.
The multitude of parishes, and paucity of schools. Hooker.
In such slender corpuscles as those of colour, may easily be conceived a greater paucity of protuberant corpuscles. Boyle.
Socrates well understood what he said touching the rarity and paucity of friends. L'Estrange.

2. Smallness of quantity.
This paucity of blood is agreeable to many other animals: as, lizards, frogs, and other fishes. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To PAVE. v. a. [pavio, Lat. paver, Fr.]

1. To lay with brick or stone; to floor with stone.
Should she kneel down,
Her brother's ghost his paved bed would break,
And take her hence in horrour. Shakspeare.
Let not the court be paved, for that striketh up a great heat in summer, and much cold in winter. Bacon.
From this chymick flame
I see a city of more precious mold,
With silver pav'd, and all divine with gold. Dryden.
The streets are paved with brick or freestone. Addison.

2. To make a passage easy.
It might open and pave a prepared way to his own title. Bacon.

PA'VEMENT. n. s. [pavimentum, Lat.] Stones or bricks laid on the ground; stone floor; floor is used of stone, but pavement never of wood.
The marble pavement closes, he is enter'd
Into his radiant roof. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.
A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
Seen in the galaxy. Milton, P. L.
The long laborious pavement here he treads,
That to proud Rome th' admiring nations leads. Addison.
The foundation of Roman ways was made of rough stone joined together with cement; upon this was laid another layer, consisting of small stones and cement, to plane the inequalities of the lower stratum in which the stones of the upper pavement were fixed: for there can be no very durable pavement but a double one. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To PA'VEMENT.* v. a. [from the noun.] To floor; to pave. Not in use.
Thou God of elements passedst through the air, walkedst upon the waters! Whether thou meantest to terminate this miracle in thy body, or in the waves which thou troddest upon; whether so lightening the one that it should make no impression in the liquid waters, or whether so consolidating the other that the pavemented waves yielded a firm causey to thy sacred feet to walk on, I neither determine nor inquire: Thy silence ruleth mine: thy power was in either miraculous; neither know I in whether to adore it more. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

PA'VER. } n. s. [from pave.] One who lays with PA'VIER. } stones.
For thee the sturdy paver thumps the ground,
Whilst every stroke his labouring lungs resound. Gay.

PAVI'LION. n. s. [pavillon, Fr.] A tent; a temporary or movable house.
Flowers being under the trees, the trees were to them a pavilion, and the flowers to the trees a mosaical floor. Sidney.
She did lie
In her pavilion, cloth of gold, of tissue. Shakspeare.
He, only he, heav'n's blew pavilion spreads,
And on the ocean's dancing billows treads. Sandys.
It was usual for the enemy, when there was a king in the field, to demand in what part of the camp he resided, that they might avoid firing upon the royal pavilion. Addison.
The glowing fury springs,
Once more invades the guilty dome, and shrouds
Its bright pavilions in a veil of clouds. Pope.

To PAVI'LION. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with tents.
Jacob in Mahanaim saw
The field pavilion'd with his guardians bright. Milton, P. L.

2. To be sheltered by a tent.
With his batt'ning flocks the careful swain
Abides pavilion'd on the grassy plain. Pope, Odyss.

PA'VING.* n. s. [from pave.] Pavement of stone, brick, or tile.

To PAUM.* v. a. [from palm, the hand; a very ancient corruption, Wicliffe and Chaucer both using paum, or pawm, for the palm of the hand.] To impose by fraud: a word yet used in colloquial language. See To PALM.
A rogue that locked up his drink, turned away our wives, cheated us of our fortunes, paumed his crusts upon us for mutton, and at last kicked us out of doors. Swift, Tale of a Tub, (ed. 1704,) p. 130.

PAUNCE.* n. s. A pansy. See PANCY.
The pretie paunce,
And the chevisaunce,
Shall match with the fayre flower delice. Spenser, Shep. Cal. April.
The shining meads
Do boast the paunce, the lilly and the rose;
And every flower doth laugh as Zephyr blows. B. Jonson, Masques.

PAUNCH. n. s. [panse, French; pança, Spanish; pantex, Lat.] The belly; the region of the guts.
Demades, the orator, was talkative, and would eat hard; Antipater would say of him, that he was like a sacrifice, that nothing was left of it but the tongue and the paunch. Bacon.
Pleading Matho born abroad for air,
With his fat paunch fills his new-fashion'd chair. Dryden.

To PAUNCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To pierce or rip the belly; to exenterate; to take out the paunch; to eviscerate.
With a log
Batter his scull, or paunch him with a stake. Shakspeare.
Chiron attack'd Talthibius with such might,
One pass had paunch'd the huge hydropick knight. Garth.

PAVO'NE.* n. s. [paun, or pawan, Welsh, Cornish, and Armorick; paon, Fr. pavone, Ital. pavo, Lat.] A peacock.
And wings it had with sondry colours dight,
More sondry colours than the proud pavone
Beares in his boasted fan, or Iris bright
When her discolour'd bow she spreds through heven bright. Spenser, F. Q. iii. xi. 47.

PAU'PER.† n. s. [Latin.] A poor person; one who receives alms.
Pauper signifies properly a poor man; according to which we have a term in our law, to sue "in formâ pauperis;" that is, if a man or woman having cause of action, and not having ability to sue, the cause of action being certified under counsel's hand, with a petition of the party setting forth their case and poverty, the judge of the court, whether in common law or equity, will admit the party to sue in formâ pauperis; that is, assign them an attorney or clerk, and counsel to defend their cause, and plead for them without fees. Cowel.
No court allows those partial interlopers
Of Law and Equity, two single paupers,
T' encounter hand to hand at bars, and trounce
Each other gratis in a suit at once. Butler, Remains.

PAU'PERISM.* n. s. [from pauper.] The state of poverty.

PAUSE. n. s. [pause, Fr. pausa, low Latin; παύω, Greek.]

1. A stop; a place or time of intermission.

Neither could we ever come to any pause, whereon to rest our assurance this way. Hooker.

Comes a fellow crying out for help,
And Cassio following with determin'd sword,
To execute upon him; this gentleman
Steps in to Cassio, and intreats his pause. Shakspeare.

Some pause and respite only I require,
Till with my tears I shall have quench'd my fire. Denham.

The punishment must always be rigorously exacted, and the blows by pauses laid on till they reach the mind, and you perceive the signs of a true sorrow. Locke.

Whilst those exalted to primeval light,
Only perceive some little pause of joys
In those great moments, when their god employs Their ministry. Prior.

What pause from woe, what hopes of comfort bring
The names of wise or great. Prior.

Our discourse is not kept up in conversation, but falls into more pauses and intervals than in our neighbouring countries. Addison, Spect.

2. Suspense; doubt.

Like a man to double business bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

3. Break; paragraph; apparent separation of the parts of a discourse.

He writes with warmth, which usually neglects method, and those partitions and pauses which men, educated in the schools, observe. Locke.

4. Place of suspending the voice marked in writing thus —.

5. A stop or intermission in musick.

To PAUSE. v. n.

1. To wait; to stop; not to proceed; to forbear for a time, used both of speech and action.

Tarry; pause a day or two,
Before you hazard: for in chusing wrong
I lose your company; therefore forbear a while. Shakspeare.

Give me leave to read philosophy,
And, while I pause, serve in your harmony. Shakspeare.

Pausing a while, thus to herself she mus'd. Milton, P. L.

As one who in his journey baits at noon,
Though bent on speed, so here the archangel paus'd,
Between a world destroy'd and world restor'd. Milton, P. L.

2. To deliberate.

Bear Worcester to death, and Vernon too,
Other offenders we will pause upon. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Solyman pausing a little upon the matter, the heat of his fury being over, suffered himself to be intreated. Knolles.

3. To be intermitted.

What awe did the slow solemn knell inspire,
The pealing organ, and the pausing choir,
And the last words, that dust to dust convey'd! Tickell.

PA'USER. n. s. [from pause.] He who pauses; he who deliberates.

The expedition of my violent love
Outruns the pauser, reason. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

PA'USINGLY.* adv. [from the part. pausing.] After a pause; by breaks.

This pausingly ensued. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

PAW. n. s. [pawen, Welsh.]

1. The foot of a beast of prey.

One chose his ground,
Whence rushing he might surest seize them both

The bear that tears the prey, and when pursued, least he become a prey, goes backward into his den that the hunter rather mistakes, than finds the way of his paw. Holyday.

The bee and serpent know their stings, and the bear the use of his paws. More against Atheism.

If lions had been brought up to painting, where you have one lion under the feet of a man, you should have had twenty men under the paw of a lion. L'Estrange.

Each claims possession,
For both their paws are fastened on the prey. Dryden.

2. Hand. In contempt.

Be civil to the wretch imploring,
And lay your paws upon him without roaring. Dryden.

To PAW.† v. n. [from the noun.] To draw the fore foot along the ground.

He [the horse] paweth in the valley. Job, xxxix. 21.

The fiery courser, when he hears from far,
The sprightly trumpets and the shouts of war,
Pricks up his ears, and trembling with delight
Shifts place, and paws, and hopes the promis'd fight. Dryden.

The impatient courser pants in every vein,
And, pawing, seems to beat the distant plain,
Hills, vales, and floods appear already cross'd,
And ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost. Pope.

Once, a fiery horse, pawing with his hoof, struck a hole in my handkerchief. Swift.

To PAW. v. a.

1. To strike with a drawn stroke of the fore foot.

His hot courser paw'd th' Hungarian plain,
And adverse legions stood the shock in vain. Tickell.

PAWN.† n. s. [pand, Teut. pan, French; pignus, Latin.]

1. Something given to pledge as a security for money borrowed or promise made.

Her oath for love, her honour's pawn. Shakspeare.

As for mortgaging and pawning, men will not take pawns without use; or they will look for the forfeiture. Bacon.

He retains much of his primitive esteem, that abroad his very word will countervail the bond or pawn of another. Howell.

Here's the very heart, and soul, and life-blood of Gomez; pawns in abundance, till the next bribe helps their husbands to redeem them. Dryden, Span. Friar.

2. The state of being pledged.

Sweet wife, my honour is at pawn,
And, but my going, nothing can redeem it. Shakspeare.

Redeem from broking pawn the blemish'd crown,
Wipe off the dust that hides our sceptre's gilt. Shakspeare.

As the morning dew is a pawn of the evening fatness, so, O Lord, let this day's comfort be the earnest of to-morrow's. Donne, Dev. p. 508.

3. A common man at chess. [péon, pion, old French; supposed to be from pion, or peon, which in India signifies a common soldier.]

Here I a pawn admire,
That still advancing higher,
At top of all became
Another thing and name. Cowley.

To PAWN. v. a. [from the noun.] To pledge; to give in pledge. It is now seldom used but of pledges given for money.

I hold it cowardice
To rest mistrustful, where a noble heart
Hath pawn'd an open hand in sign of love. Shakspeare.

Let's lead him on with a fine baited delay, till he hath pawn'd his horses. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

I dare pawn down my life for him, that he hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour. Shakspeare.

Will you thus break your faith? ——
I pawn'd you none:
I promis'd you redress. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

I'll pawn the little blood which I have left,
To save the innocent. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

If any thought annoys the gallant youth,
'Tis dear remembrance of that fatal glance,
For which he lately pawn'd his heart. Waller.
She who before had mortgag'd her estate,
And pawn'd the last remaining piece of plate. Dryden.

One part of the nation is pawned to the other, with hardly a possibility of being ever redeemed. Swift.

Pa'wnbroker. n. s. [pawn and broker.] One who lends money upon pledge.

The usurers or money-changers were a sort of a scandalous employment at Rome; those money-scriveners seem to have been little better than our pawnbrokers. Arbuthnot.

Pawnee'.* n. s. [from pawn.] One to whom something is entrusted as a security for money borrowed.

If the pawn be laid up, and the pawnee robbed, he is not answerable. Littleton, Rep. 332.

Pax.* n. s. [pax, Lat. peace.] A sort of little image; a piece of board, having the image of Christ upon the cross on it; which the people, before the Reformation, used to kiss after the service was ended, that ceremony being considered as the kiss of peace. The word has been often confounded with pix.

Innocent the first — invented the kissing of the paxe at masse. Crowley, Deliberate Answ. (1588,) fol. 40. b.

Kiss the pax, and be quiet like your neighbours. Chapman, Com. of May-Day, (1611.)

The ceremony of the paxe. James on the Pop. Corrupt. of Script. p. 105.

Pax-wax.* See Packwax.

To PAY.† v. a. [paier, Fr. apagar, Spanish; pacare, Lat.]

1. To discharge a debt. It is applied to debts of duty, as well as debts of commerce.

You have done enough, and have perform'd
A saint-like sorrow; and indeed paid down
More penitence, than done trespass. Shakspeare.
Your son has paid a soldier's debt;
He only liv'd but till he was a man. Shakspeare.

She does what she will, say what she will, take all, pay all. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

The king and prince
Then paid their offerings in a sacred grove
To Hercules. Dryden.

An hundred talents of silver did the children of Ammon pay. 2 Chron. xxvii. 5.

I have peace offerings with me; this day have I paid my vows. Prov. vii. 14.

The wicked borroweth, and payeth not again. Psalms.

3. To dismiss one to whom any thing is due with his money: as, he had paid his labourers.

4. To atone; to make amends by suffering: with for before the cause of payment.

If this prove true, they'll pay for't. Shakspeare.
Bold Prometheus, whose untam'd desire
Rivall'd the sun with his own heav'nly fire,
Now doom'd the Scythian vulture's endless prey,
Severely pays for animating clay. Roscommon.

Men of parts, who were to act according to the result of their debates, and often pay for their mistakes with their heads, found those scholastick forms of little use to discover truth. Locke.

5. To beat.

I follow'd me close, and, with a thought, seven of the eleven I paid. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Forty things more, my friends, which you know true,
For which, or pay me quickly, or I'll pay you. B. Jonson.

6. To reward; to recompense.

She I love, or laughs at all my pain,
Or knows her worth too well; and pays me with disdain. Dryden, Kn. Tale.

7. To give the equivalent for any thing bought.

Riches are got by consuming less of foreign commodities, than what by commodities or labour is paid for. Locke.

It is very possible for a man that lives by cheating, to be very punctual in paying for what he buys; but then every one's assured that he does not do so out of any principle of true honesty. Law.

8. [In naval language.] To smear the surface of any thing with pitch, resin, turpentine, tallow, and the like.

Pay. n. s. [from the verb.] Wages; hire; money given in return for service.

Come on, brave soldiers, doubt not of the day;
And, that once gotten, doubt not of large pay. Shakspeare.

The soldier is willing to be converted, for there is neither pay nor plunder to be got. L'Estrange.

Money, instead of coming over for the pay of the army, has been transmitted thither for the pay of those forces called from thence. Temple.

Here only merit constant pay receives,
Is blest in what it takes, and what it gives. Pope.

Pa'yable. adj. [paiable, Fr. from pay.]

1. Due; to be paid.

The farmer rates or compounds the sums of money payable to her majesty, for the alienation of lands, made without or by licence. Bacon.

2. Such as there is power to pay.

To repay by a return equivalent, is not in every one's power; but thanks are a tribute payable by the poorest. South.

Pa'yday. n. s. [pay and day.] Day on which debts are to be discharged or wages paid.

Labourers pay away all their wages, and live upon trust till next payday. Locke.

Pa'yer.† n. s. [paieur, Fr. from pay.] One that pays. Huloet.

Ingrateful payer of my industries. Beaum. and Fl. Kn. of Malta.

Pa'ymaster. n. s. [pay and master.] One who is to pay; one from whom wages or reward is received.

Howsoever they may bear sail for a time, yet are they so sure paymasters in the end, that few have held out their lives safely. Hayward.

If we desire that God should approve us, it is a sign we do his work, and expect him our paymaster. Bp. Taylor.

Pa'yment. n. s. [from pay.]

1. The act of paying.

Persons of eminent virtue, when advanced, are less envied, for their fortune seemeth but due unto them; and no man envieth the payment of a debt. Bacon.

2. The thing given in discharge of debt or promise.

Thy husband commits his body
To painful labour both by sea and land,
And craves no other tribute at thy hands
But love, fair looks, and true obedience;
Too little payment for so great a debt. Shakspeare.

3. A reward.

Give her an hundred marks.
— An hundred marks! by this light I'll ha' more.
An ordinary groom is for such payment. Shakspeare.

The wages that sin bargains with the sinner, are life, pleasure, and profit; but the wages it pays him with, are death, torment, and destruction: he that would understand the falsehood and deceit of sin thoroughly, must compare its promises and its payments together. South.

4. Chastisement; sound beating. Ainsworth.

Pa'ynim.* See Painim.

To Payse.† v. n. [Used by Spenser for poise. Fr. peser. See To Peize.] To balance.

8. Silence; suppression of the thoughts.

'Twill out; — I peace!
No, I will speak as liberal as the air. Shakspeare.

In an examination, a freed servant, who had much power with Claudius, very saucily had almost all the words; and amongst other things, he asked in scorn one of the examinates, who was a freed servant of Scribonianus; I pray, Sir, if Scribonianus had been emperor, what would you have done? he answered, I would have stood behind his chair and held my peace. Bacon.

She said; and held her peace: Æneas went Sad from the cave. Dryden.

9. [In law.] That general security and quiet which the king warrants to his subjects, and of which he therefore avenges the violation; every forcible injury is a breach of the king's peace.

PEACE. interjection. A word commanding silence.

Peace! fear, thou comest too late, when already the arm is taken. Sidney.

Hark! peace!
It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal bellman,
Which gives the stern'st good night. Shakspeare.

Peace, good reader, do not weep;
Peace, the lovers are asleep. Crashaw.

But peace, I must not quarrel with the will
Of highest dispensation. Milton, S. A.

Silence, ye troubled waves, and, thou deep, peace!
Said then the Omnifick Word. Milton, P. L.

I pry'thee peace!
Perhaps she thinks they are too near of blood. Dryden.

If you talk of peaching, I'll peach first, and see whose oath will be believed; I'll trounce you. Dryden.

To PEACH.* v. a. To accuse.

Peche men of treason prevyly I can.
Old Mor. of Hycke Scorner.

PEA'CHER.* n. s. [from the verb.] An accuser.

Certain thieves that were named "appellatores," accusers or peachers of others that were guiltlesse.
Fox, Acts and Mon. of Wicliffe.

PEA'CHICK. n. s. [pea and chick.] The chick of a peacock.

Does the snivelling peachick think to make a cuckold of me?
Southern.

PEA'COCK. n. s. [papa, Saxon; pavo, Lat. Of this word the etymology is not known: perhaps it is peak cock, from the tuft of feathers on its head; the peak of women being an ancient ornament: if it be not rather a corruption of beaucoq, Fr. from the more striking lustre of its spangled train.] A fowl eminent for the beauty of his feathers, and particularly of his tail.

Let frantick Talbot triumph for a while;
And, like a peacock, sweep along his tail. Shakspeare.

The birds that are hardest to be drawn, are the tame birds; as cock, turky-cock and peacock. Peacham.

The peacock, not at thy command, assumes
His glorious train; nor ostrich her rare plumes. Sandys.
The peacock's plumes thy tackle must not fail,
Nor the dear purchase of the fable's tail. Gay.

PEA'HEN. n. s. [pea and hen; pava, Lat.] The female of the peacock.

PEAK.† n. s. [peac, Sax. peac-lonb; pique, pic, French.]

1. The top of a hill or eminence.

Thy sister seek,
Or on Meander's bank or Latmus' peak. Prior.

2. Any thing acuminated.

He has mew'd your head, has rubb'd the snow off,
And run your beard into a peak of twenty.
Beaum. and Fl. Doub. Marriage.

3. The rising forepart of a head-dress.

To PEAK.† v. n. [pequeno, Spanish, little, perhaps lean: but I believe this word has some other derivation: we say a withered man has a sharp face; Falstaff dying, is said to have a nose as sharp as a pen: from this observation, a sickly man is said to peak or grow acuminated, from pique.]

1. To look sickly.

Weary se'nnights, nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. To make a mean figure; to sneak.

I, a dull and muddy-mettled rascal, peak,
Like John-a-dreams, unpregnant of my cause. Shakspeare.

The peaking cornuto her husband, dwelling in a continual larum of jealousy, comes me in the instant of our encounter.
Shakspeare.

Why stand'st thou here,
Sneaking, and peaking, as thou would'st steal linen?
Beaum. and Fl. Wild-Goose Chase.

PEA'KISH.* adj. [from peak.] Denoting or belonging to a hilly or acuminated situation.

Her skin as soft as Lemster wool,
As white as snow on peakish Hull,
Or swan that swims in Trent. Drayton, Egl. (1593.)

In my time a plain villager in the rude Peak — returns him this answer in his peakish dialect. Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

PEAL. n. s. [Perhaps from pello, pellere tympana, Lat.]

1. A succession of loud sounds: as, of bells, thunder, cannon, loud instruments.

They were saluted by the way, with a fair peal of artillery from the tower. Hayward.

The breach of faith cannot be so highly expressed, as in that it shall be the last peal to call the judgements of God upon men.
Bacon, Ess.

Woods of oranges will smell into the sea perhaps twenty miles; but what is that, since a peal of ordnance will do as much, which moveth in a small compass? Bacon.

A peal shall rouse their sleep;
Then, all thy saints assembled, thou shalt judge
Bad men and angels. Milton, P. R.

I myself
Vanquish'd with a peal of words, O weakness!
Gave up my fort of silence to a woman. Milton, S. A.
From the Moors' camp the noise grows louder still;
Peals of shouts that rend the heavens. Dryden.
Oh! for a peal of thunder that would make
Earth, sea and air, and heaven and Cato tremble! Addison.

2. It is once used by Shakspeare for a low dull noise, but improperly.

> Ere to black Hecat's summons
> The shard-borne beetle, with his drowsy hums,
> Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
> A deed of dreadful note. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To PEAL. v. n. [from the noun.] To play solemnly and loud.

> Let the pealing organ blow,
> To the full-voic'd quire below,
> In service high and anthem clear,
> As may with sweetness, through mine ear,
> Dissolve me into extasies,
> And bring all heaven before my eyes. Milton, Il Pens.
> The pealing organ, and the pausing choir;
> And the last words, that dust to dust convey'd. Tickell.

To PEAL.† v. a.

1. To assail with noise.

> Nor was his ear less peal'd
> With noises loud and ruinous, than when Bellona storms,
> With all her battering engines bent to rase
> Some capital city. Milton, P. L.

2. To stir with some agitation: as, to peal the pot, is when it boils to stir the liquor therein with a ladle. Ainsworth. Mr. Malone considers this as a corruption of keel. So Grose says, that peal means to cool; and cites, as a northern expression, peal the pot. See To KEEL.

PEAR.† n. s. [peꝛa, Saxon; poire, French; pyrum, Lat.] A fruit more produced toward the footstalk than the apple, but is hollow like a navel at the extreme part.

> Lies in a soft profusion scatter'd round. Thomson.

To PEAR.* See To PEER.

PEARCH.† n. s. [pertica, Lat. See PERCH.]

1. A long pole for various uses.
2. A kind of fish. [πέρκη, Gr.]

PEARCH-STONE. n. s. [from pearch and stone.] A sort of stone.

PEARL.† n. s. [perle, Fr. perla, Spanish: supposed by Salmasius to come from spherula, Latin. Mr. Bryant says, it is "the paral of the Amonians and Cuthites. Paralia is the land of pearls." Analys. of Anc. Myth. iii. 205.]

1. Pearls, though esteemed of the number of gems by our jewellers, are but a distemper in the creature that produces them: the fish in which pearls are most frequently found is the East Indian berbes or pearl oyster; others are found to produce pearls; as the common oyster, the muscle, and various other kinds: but the Indian pearls are superior to all: some pearls have been known of the size of a pigeon's egg; as they increase in size, they are less frequent and more valued: the true shape of the pearl is a perfect round; but some of a considerable size are of the shape of a pear, and serve for ear-rings. Hill.

A pearl-julep was made of a distilled milk. Wiseman.

Flowers purfled, blue and white,
Like saphire, pearl, in rich embroidery
Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee. Shakspeare.

Cataracts pearl-coloured, and those of the colour of burnished iron, are esteemed proper to endure the needle. Sharp.

2. [Poetically.] Any thing round and clear, as a drop.

Dropping liquid pearl,
Before the cruel queen, the lady and the girl
Upon their tender knees begg'd mercy. Drayton.

PEARL. n. s. [albugo, Lat.] A white speck or film growing on the eye. Ainsworth.

To PEARL.* v. n. To resemble pearls.

She —— let to fall
Few perling drops from her fair lamps of light.
Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 50.

PEA'RLED.† adj. [from pearl.]

1. Adorned or set with pearls; made of pearls.

And many a perled garniment
Embrouded was againe the daie. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 1.

You goodly nymphs —
That, when you list, in pearled boats of shell
Glide on the dancing wave. P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. i. st. 4.

The water nymphs
Held up their pearled wrists, and took her in,
Bearing her straight to aged Nereus' hall. Milton, Comus.

Resembling pearls.

Her weeping eyes in pearled dew she steeps.

Some in their pearly shells at ease, attend
Moist nutriment. Milton, P. L.

2. Resembling pearls.

Which when she heard, full pearly floods
I in her eyes might view. Drayton.

'Tis sweet the blushing morn to view,
And plains adorn'd with pearly dew. Dryden.

For what the day devours, the nightly dew
Shall to the morn in pearly drops renew. Dryden.

Another was invested with a pearly shell, having the sutures finely displayed upon its surface. Woodward.

PEARMAI'N.† n. s. [parmain, French.] An apple.

The pearmain, which to France long ere to us was known;
Which careful fruiterers now have denizen'd our own.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. 18.

Pearmain is an excellent and well known fruit. Mortimer.

PEA'RTREE. n. s. [pear and tree.] The tree that bears pears.

The peartree criticks will have to borrow his name of πῦρ, fire. Bacon.

PEA'SANT. n. s. [paisant, Fr.] A hind; one whose business is rural labour.

He holdeth himself a gentleman, and scorneth to work, which, he saith, is the life of a peasant or churl. Spenser.

I had rather coin my heart, than wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash. Shakspeare.

The poor peasants in the Alpine countries, diverted themselves in the fields, and after their labour, would be lively and brisk. Brown, Trav.

'Tis difficult for us, who are bred up with the same infirmities about us with which we were born, to raise our thoughts and imaginations to those intellectual perfections that attended our nature in the time of innocence, as it is for a peasant bred up in the obscurities of a cottage, to fancy in his mind the unseen splendours of a court. South, Serm.

The citizens bring two thousand men, with which they could make head against twelve thousand peasants. Addison.

PEA'SANT.* adj. Rustick; country.

Thou peasant knight mightst rightly reed
Me than to be full base and evil born,
If I would bear behind a burden of such scorn. Spenser, F. Q.

Like peasant foot-boys do they keep the walls,
And dare not take up arms like gentlemen.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

This have I rumour'd through the peasant towns.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II. Ind.

PEA'SANTLIKE.* } adj. [peasant and like.] Rude; un-
PEA'SANTLY. } taught; clownish; resembling the behaviour of peasants.

He is not esteemed to deserve the name of a complete architect, an excellent painter, or the like, that bears not a generous mind above the peasantly regard of wages and hire.
Milton, Animad. Rem. Defence.

We frame to ourselves a peasantly notion of good and evil.
Spencer on Prod. p. 350.

Learning is thought pedantic, agriculture peasantlike.
Gov. of the Tongue, p. 208.

PEA'SANTRY. n. s. [from peasant.] Peasants; rusticks; country people.

How many then should cover, that stand bare:
How much low peasantry would then be gleaned
From the true seed of honour? how much honour
Pickt from the chaff? Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

The peasantry in France under a much heavier pressure of want and poverty than the day-labourers of England of the reformed religion, understood it much better than those of a higher condition among us. Locke.

PEA'SCOD. } n. s. [pea, cod and shell.] The husk
PEA'SHELL. } that contains peas.

Thou art a sheal'd peascod. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

I saw a green caterpillar as big as a small peascod. Walton.

As peascods once I pluck'd, I chanc'd to see
One that was closely fill'd with three times three.
I o'er the door the spell in secret laid. Gay.

PEASE.† n. s. [Pea, when it is mentioned as a single body, makes peas; but when spoken of collectively, as food or a species, it is called pease, anciently peason; pıſa, Saxon; pois, French; piso, Italian; pisum, Latin. Dr. Johnson. — Pease was formerly used as the singular number, though now perhaps obsolete; but the regular plural of it, peason, is still spoken in several parts of England. Two examples from our old poets will be sufficient to shew the use of pease (instead of pea) in the singular number: "The vaunting poets found nought worth a pease." Spenser, Shep. Cal. Oct. "A bit of marmalade, no bigger than a pease." Beaum. and Fl. Doub. Marriage.] Food of pease.

Sowe peason and beans in the wane of the moon;
Who soweth them sooner, he soweth too soone. Tusser.

Pease, deprived of any aromatick parts, are mild and demulcent; but, being full of aerial particles, are flatulent.
Arbuthnot.

PEAT.† n. s. [" Peat is dug out of the marshes from the depth of one foot to that of six. That is accounted the best, which is nearest the surface. It appears to be a mass of black earth held together by vegetable fibres. I know not whether the earth be bituminous, or whether the fibres be not the only combustible part; which, by heating the interposed earth red-hot, make a burning mass. The common opinion is, that peat grows again where it has been cut; which, as it seems to be chiefly a vegetable substance, is not unlikely to be true, whether known or not to those who relate it." Dr. Johnson, Journ. to the Western Islands. "Peat, as well as the blackish earth I have spoken of above, is a product of vegetation; but the spoils of the vegetables that form it, lose much less of their bulk, and they retain their combustible faculty. These vegetables, at first simply withered, form a spongy mass, always soaked with water, on which new plants, some of them aquatic, grow in great abundance, and with much rapidity. It is, perhaps, owing to an antiseptic quality in some of these plants, that there happens such an accumulation of their spoils, constantly penetrated with water, without their undergoing any putrefaction; a circumstance that essentially distinguishes our peat-lands from marshes, for the air is always salubrious." M. De Luc, Geol. Letters to Prof. Blumenbach, Lett. 5. Br. Cr. 1794, vol. 4. p. 454.] A species of turf used for fire.

Turf and peat, and cowsheards are cheap fuels and last long. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Carew, in his survey of Cornwall, mentions nuts found in peat-earth two miles east of St. Michael's mount. Woodward.

PEAT.† n. s. [from petit, Fr.] A little fondling; a darling; a dear play thing. It is now commonly called pet. See PET.

A pretty peat! it is best put finger in the eye,
And she knew why. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.
A citizen and his wife the other day,
Both riding on one horse, upon the way
I overtook; the wench a pretty peat. Donne, Poems, p. 94.

Deliro's wife, and idol; a proud mincing peat, and as perverse as he is officious. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

PE'BBLE. } PE'BBLESTONE. } n. s. [pæbolſtana, Saxon.] A stone distinct from flints, being not in layers, but in one homogeneous mass, though sometimes of many colours. Popularly a small stone.

Through the midst of it ran a sweet brook, which did both hold the eye open with her azure streams, and yet seek to close the eye with the purling noise it made upon the pebblestones it ran over. Sidney.

The bishop and the duke of Glo'ster's men,
Forbidden late to carry any weapon,
Have fill'd their pockets full of pebblestones. Shakspeare.

Suddenly a file of boys deliver'd such a shower of pebbles loose shot, that I was fain to draw mine honour in. Shakspeare.

You may see pebbles gathered together, and a crust of cement between them, as hard as the pebbles. Bacon.

Collecting toys,
As children gathering pebbles on the shore. Milton, P. R.
Winds murmur'd through the leaves your long delay;
And fountains o'er the pebbles chid your stay. Dryden.

Another body, that hath only the resemblance of an ordinary pebble, shall yield a metallic and valuable matter. Woodward.

PEBBLE-CRYSTAL. n. s.

The crystal, in form of nodules, is found lodged in the earthy strata left in a train by the water departing at the conclusion of the deluge: this sort, called by the lapidaries pebble-crystal, is in shape irregular. Woodward.

PE'BBLED. adj. [from pebble.] Sprinkled or abounding with pebbles.

This bank fair spreading in a pebbled shore. Thomson.

PE'BBLY.† adj. [from pebble.] Full of pebbles.

Strow'd bibulous above I see the sands,
The pebbly gravel next. Thomson.

We passed many rivers and rivulets, which commonly ran with a clear shallow stream over a hard pebbly bottom. Dr. Johnson, Journ. West. Islands.

PECCABI'LITY. n. s. [from peccable.] State of being subject to sin.

Where the common peccability of mankind is urged to induce commiseration towards the offenders; if this be of force in sin, where the concurrence of the will renders the person more inexcusable, it will surely hold much more in bare error which is purely involuntary. Decay of Chr. Piety.

PE'CCABLE.† adj. [from pecco, Lat.] Liable to sin.

Both he and they were originally created pure and innocent, though fallible and peccable at the same time. Barrow, Pre-ex. Lapse of Hum. Souls, p. 6.

PECCADI'LLO.† n. s. [Spanish; peccadille, French. This word had been introduced into our language, long before the time of Dryden, from whose writings Dr. Johnson's earliest example is cited. It had also another meaning, which escaped the notice of Dr. Johnson.]

1. A petty fault; a slight crime; a venial offence.

We pay no Peter-pence; we run not to Rome-market to buy trash. I hope his Holiness dispenseth with us for these peccadillos. Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, (1620,) p. 238.

Not to take exception, no peccadillo. Mountagu, App. to Cæs. (1625,) p. 304.

He means those little vices, which we call follies and the defects of the human understanding, or at most the peccadillos of life, rather than the tragical vices to which men are hurried by their unruly passions. Dryden.

'Tis low ebb with his accusers, when such peccadilos as these are put in to swell the charge. Atterbury.

2. A sort of stiff ruff. See PICCADIL.

How earnest were some preachers against careless ruffs, yea and against set ruffs too! Both which they at length came to wear, rather than pickadilloes, which they thought had too much of the courtier; or little plain bands, which they liked not, because the Jesuits wore such. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 119.

But that no more concerns the cause,
Than other perjuries do the laws;
Which, when they're prov'd in open court,
Wear wooden peccadillos for't! Hudibras, iii. i.

PE'CCANCY.† n. s. [from peccant.]

1. Bad quality.

Apply refrigerants without any preceding evacuation, because the disease took its original merely from the disaffection of the part, and not from the peccancy of the humours. Wiseman.

2. Offence.

This distorting of equivocal words, which passeth commonly for a trivial peccancy, if it be well examined, will be found a very dangerous admission. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 144.

PE'CCANT. adj. [peccant, Fr. peccans, Latin.]

1. Guilty; criminal.

From them I will not hide
My judgements, how with mankind I proceed;
As how with peccant angels late they saw. Milton, P. L.

That such a peccant creature should disapprove and repent of every violation of the rules of just and honest, this right reason could not but infer. South, Serm.

2. Ill disposed; corrupt; bad; offensive to the body; injurious to health. It is chiefly used in medical writers.

With laxatives preserve your body sound,
And purge the peccant humours that abound. Dryden.

Such as have the bile peccant or deficient are relieved by bitters, which are a sort of subsidiary gall. Arbuthnot.

3. Wrong; bad; deficient; unformal.

Nor is the party cited bound to appear, if the citation be peccant in form or matter. Ayliffe, Parergon.

PE'CCANT.* n. s. An offender. Not in use.

This conceitedness, and itch of being taken for a counsellor, maketh more reprovers than peccants in the world. Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. (1654,) p. 388.

*PECCAVI. [Latin. A colloquial expression still in use: as, he cried peccavi.] I have offended. Cockeram, and Bullokar.

In queen Mary's time, upon the return of the Catholique religion, the nunnes came again to Wilton abbey; and this William earl of Pembroke, came to the gate with his cappe in his hand, and fell upon his knee to the lady abbesse and the nunnes, crying peccavi! Upon queen Mary's death, the earl came to Wilton, like a tygre, and turned them out, crying, Out ye whores, to worke, to worke! Aubrey, Anecd. ii. 479.

PECK.† n. s. [from pocca, or perhaps from fat, a vessel. Skinner, and Dr. Johnson. — Serenius likewise gives the Sax. pocca, and the Icel. poke, a pouch, a sack, as the etymon. Mr. G. Chalmers cites from Ash the Sax. pecca; but where is that word to be found? It is an oversight, no doubt, for pocca. Poke is a northern word for all measures. See Ray's Collect. 2d. edit. p. 55.]

1. The fourth part of a bushel.

Burn our vessels, like a new
Seal'd peck or bushel, for being true. Hudibras.

To every hill of ashes, some put a peck of unslacked lime, which they cover with the ashes till rain slacks the lime, and then they spread them. Mortimer, Husb.

He drove about his turnips in a cart;
And from the same machine sold pecks of pease. King.

2. Proverbially; a great deal. [In low language.] See also the 6th sense of PACK.

Her finger was so small, the ring
Would not stay on which they did bring;
It was too wide a peck;
It look'd like the great collar just
About our young colt's neck. Suckling.

To PECK.† v. a. [becquer, French; picken, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — Icel. piacka; Su. Goth. picka; "frequenter pungere, stimulare. Vox antiquissima." Serenius.]

1. To strike with the beak as a bird.

As a hooded hawk, or owl; —
She in vain doth rouse, and peck
This and that way with her beak.
Fanshaw, Tr. of Past. Fido, iii. 2.

Thy baiting does no good,
Nor thy pecking through thy hood,
Nor thy stretching out thy claws. Ibid.

2. To pick up food with the beak.

She was his only joy, and he her pride,
She, when he walk'd, went pecking by his side. Dryden.

Can any thing be more surprising, than to consider Cicero observing, with a religious attention, after what manner the chickens pecked the grains of corn thrown them. Addison.

3. To strike with any pointed instrument.

With a pick-ax of iron about sixteen inches long, sharpened at the one end to peck, and flat headed at the other to drive little iron wedges to cleave rocks. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

4. To strike; to make blows.

Two contrary factions, both inveterate enemies of our church, which they are perpetually pecking and striking at with the same malice. South, Serm.

They will make head against a common enemy, whereas mankind lie pecking at one another, till they are torn to pieces. L'Estrange.

5. The following passage is perhaps more properly written to pick, to throw.

Get up o' th' rail, I'll peck you o'er the pales else. Shakspeare.

PE'CKER. n. s. [from peck.]

1. One that pecks.

2. A kind of bird: as, the wood-pecker.

The titmouse and the pecker's hungry brood,
And Progne with her bosom stain'd in blood. Dryden.

PE'CKLED. adj. [corrupted from speckled.] Spotted; varied with spots.

Some are peckled, some greenish. Walton, Angler.

PE'CTINAL. n. s. [from pecten, Lat. a comb.]

There are other fishes whose eyes regard the heavens, as plain and cartilaginous fishes, as pectinals, or such as have their bones made laterally like a comb. Brown.

PE'CTINATED. adj. [from pecten.] Standing from each other like the teeth of a comb.

To sit cross legg'd or with our fingers pectinated, is accounted bad. Brown, Vulg. Err.

PECTINA'TION. n. s. The state of being pectinated.

The complication or pectination of the fingers was an hieroglyphic of impediment. Brown, Vulg. Err.

PE'CTORAL.† adj. [from pectoralis, Lat.] Belonging to the breast.

Take your spectacles, sir; it sticks in the paper, and was a pectoral roll we prepared for you to swallow down to your heart. Milton, Anim. Rem. Defence.

Tar water is extremely pectoral and restorative.
Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 21.

PE'CTORAL.† n. s.

1. A medicine intended against diseases of the breast.

Being troubled with a cough, pectorals were prescribed; and he was thereby relieved. Wiseman.

2. [pectorale, Lat. pectoral, Fr.] A breast plate.

The twelve stones in the pectoral of the high priest.
Hammond, Works, iii. 424.

Letters graven in the high priest's pectoral.
Lively, Oracles, &c. p. 54.

PE'CULATE.† } n. s. [peculatus, Lat. peculat, Fr.]
PECULA'TION. } Robbery of the publick; theft of publick money.

The popular clamours of corruption and peculate, with which the nation had been so much possessed, were in a great measure dissipated. Burnet, Hist. of his own Times.

One of these gentlemen was accused of the grossest peculations. Burke, Sp. on Mr. Fox's E. Ind. Bill.

To PE'CULATE.* v. n. [peculor, Lat.] To rob or defraud the publick.

An oppressive, irregular, capricious, unsteady, rapacious, and peculating despotism.
Burke, Sp. on Mr. Fox's E. Ind. Bill.

PE'CULATOR. n. s. [Latin.] A robber of the publick.

PECU'LIAR.† adj. [peculiaris, from peculium, Lat. peculier, old French.]

1. Appropriate; belonging to any one with exclusion of others.

I agree with Sir William Temple, that the word humour is peculiar to our English tongue; but not that the thing itself is peculiar to the English, because the contrary may be found in many Spanish, Italian, and French productions. Swift.

2. Not common to other things.

The only sacred hymns they are that Christianity hath peculiar unto itself, the other being songs too of praise and of thanksgiving, but songs wherewith as we serve God, so the Jews likewise. Hooker.

3. Particular; single. To join most with peculiar, though found in Dryden, is improper.

One peculiar nation to select
From all the rest, of whom to be invok'd. Milton, P. L.

Space and duration being ideas that have something very abstruse and peculiar in their nature, the comparing them one with another may be of use for their illustration. Locke.

I neither fear, nor will provoke the war;
My fate is Juno's most peculiar care. Dryden.

PECU'LIAR. n. s.

1. The property; the exclusive property.

By tincture or reflection, they augment
Their small peculiar. Milton, P. L.

Revenge is so absolutely the peculiar of heaven, that no consideration whatever can empower even the best men to assume the execution of it. South, Serm.

2. Something abscinded from the ordinary jurisdiction.

Certain peculiars there are, some appertaining to the dignities of the cathedral church at Exon. Carew.

Some peculiars exempt from the jurisdiction of the bishops. Leslie.

Peculia'rity. n. s. [from peculiar.] Particularity; something found only in one.

If an author possessed any distinguishing marks of style or peculiarity of thinking, there would remain in his least successful writings some few tokens whereby to discover him. Swift.

To Pecu'liarize.* v. a. [from peculiar.] To appropriate; to make peculiar.

I would not willingly seem to any ὡς ἀλλοτριοεπίσκοπος, to play the bishop in another's diocess, or to meddle with those matters that are peculiarized to another coat. Smith on Old Age, (1666,) p. 188.

There was to be no more distinction betwixt the children of Abraham and other people, and no one land more peculiarized than another. Nelson, Fest. Circumcision.

Pecu'liarly. adv. [from peculiar.]

1. Particularly; singly.

That is peculiarly the effect of the sun's variation. Woodward.

2. In a manner not common to others.

Thus Tivy boasts this beast peculiarly her own. Drayton.

When his danger encreased, he then thought fit to pray peculiarly for him. Fell.

Pecu'liarness.* n. s. [from peculiar.] Appropriation.

Mankind by tradition had learned to accommodate the worship of their God, by appropriating some place to that use; nature teaching them, that the work was honoured and dignified by the peculiarness of the place appointed for the same. Mede, Rev. of God's House, (1638,) p. 5.

PECU'NIARY. adj. [pecuniarius, from pecunia, Lat. pecuniaire, Fr.]

1. Relating to money.

Their impostures delude not only unto pecuniary defraudations, but the irreparable deceit of death. Brown.

2. Consisting of money.

Pain of infamy is a severer punishment upon ingenuous natures than a pecuniary mulct. Bacon.

The injured person might take a pecuniary mulct by way of atonement. Broome.

Pecu'nious.* adj. [pecunieux, Fr.] Full of money. Not in use. Sherwood.

Ped. n. s. [commonly pronounced pad.]

1. A small packsaddle. A ped is much shorter than a pannel, and is raised before and behind, and serves for small burdens.

A pannel and wanty, packsaddle and ped. Tusser.

2. A basket; a hamper.

A hask is a wicker ped, wherein they use to carry fish. E. K. Notes on Spenser's Shep. Cal.

Pedago'gical.† adj. [from pedagogue.] Suiting or belonging to a schoolmaster.

Those pedagogical Jehus, those furious school-drivers. South, Serm. on Education.

Pedago'gick.* adj. [from pedagogue.] Suiting a schoolmaster.

In the pedagogic character he also published Holcot's [Huloet's] dictionary. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 259.

Pe'dagogism.* n. s. [from pedagogue.] Office or character of a pedagogue.

Now the worm of criticism works in him, he will tell us the derivation of "German rutters, of meat, and of ink;" which doubtless, rightly applied with some gall in it, may prove good to heal this tetter of pedagogism that bespreads him. Milton, Apol. for Smectymn. § 6.

PE'DAGOGUE.† n. s. [pedagogus, Lat. παιδαγωγός, Gr. παῖς and ἄγω.] One who teaches boys; a schoolmaster; a pedant.

If thou hast sons, in the first place be careful of their pedagogue, that he be modest, sober, learned. Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634,) p. 133.

Few pedagogues but curse the barren chair,
Like him who hang'd himself for mere despair
And poverty. Dryden.

To Pe'dagogue. v. a. [παιδαγωγέω, from the noun.] To teach with superciliousness.

This may confine their younger stiles,
Whom Dryden pedagogues at Will's;
But never cou'd be meant to tie
Authentick wits, like you and I. Prior.

Pe'dagogy. n. s. [παιδαγωγία.] Preparatory discipline.

The old sabbath appertained to the pedagogy and rudiments of the law; and therefore when the great master came and fulfilled all that was prefigured by it, it then ceased. White.

In time the reason of men ripening to such a pitch, as to be above the pedagogy of Moses's rod and the discipline of types, God thought fit to display the substance without the shadow. South, Serm.

Pe'dal. adj. [pedalis, Lat.] Belonging to a foot. Dict.

Pe'dals. n. s. pl. [pedalis, Lat. pedales, Fr.] The large pipes of an organ; so called because played upon and stopt with the foot. Dict.

Peda'neous. adj. [pedaneus, Lat.] Going on foot. Dict.

PE'DANT. n. s. [pedant, Fr.]

1. A schoolmaster.

A pedant that keeps a school i' the church. Shakspeare.

The boy who scarce has paid his entrance down
To his proud pedant, or declin'd a noun. Dryden.

2. A man vain of low knowledge; a man awkwardly ostentatious of his literature.

The pedant can hear nothing but in favour of the conceits he is amorous of. Glanville.

The preface has so much of the pedant, and so little of the conversation of men in it, that I shall pass it over. Addison.

In learning let a nymph delight,
The pedant gets a mistress by't. Swift.

Pursuit of fame with pedants fills our schools,
And into coxcombs burnishes our fools. Young.

Peda'ntical. } adj. [pedantesque, Fr. from pedant.]
Peda'ntick. } Awkwardly ostentatious of learning.

Mr. Cheeke had eloquence in the Latin and Greek tongues; but for other sufficiencies pedantick enough. Hayward.

When we see any thing in an old satirist, that looks forced and pedantick, we ought to consider how it appeared in the time the poet writ. Addison.

The obscurity is brought over them by ignorance and age, made yet more obscure by their pedantical elucidators. Felton.

A spirit of contradiction is so pedantick and hateful, that a man should watch against every instance of it. Watts.

We now believe the Copernican system; yet we shall still use the popular terms of sun-rise and sun-set, and not introduce a new pedantick description of them from the motion of the earth. Bentley, Serm.

Peda'ntically.† } adv. [from pedantical.] With Peda'ntickly. } awkward ostentation of literature.

And what thou dost pedantickly object
Concerning my rude, rugged, uncouth style,
As childish toy I manfully neglect,
And at thy hidden snares do inly smile. More, Poems, (1647,) p. 305.

The earl of Roscommon has excellently rendered it; too faithfully is, indeed, pedantically; 'tis a faith like that, which proceeds from superstition. Dryden.

To Pe'dantize.* v. n. [pedantizer, French; from pedant.] To play the pedant; to domineer over lads; to use pedantical expressions. Not now in use. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

Pe'dantry.† n. s. [pedanterie, Fr.]

1. Awkward ostentation of needless learning.

'Tis a practice that savours much of pedantry, a reserve of puerility we have not shaken off from school. Brown.

Horace has enticed me into this pedantry of quotation. Cowley.

Make us believe it, if you can; it is in Latin, if I may be allowed the pedantry of a quotation, non persuadebis, etiamsi persuaseris. Addison, Freeholder.

From the universities the young nobility are sent for fear of contracting any airs of pedantry by a college education. Swift.

2. An obstinate addiction to the forms of some private life, and not regarding general things enough. Sprat.

There is a pedantry in manners, as in all arts and sciences; and sometimes in trades. Pedantry is properly the overrating any kind of knowledge we pretend to. And if that kind of knowledge be a trifle in itself, the pedantry is the greater. For which reason, I look upon fiddlers, dancing-masters, heralds, masters of ceremony, &c. to be greater pedants than Lipsius or the elder Scaliger. Swift on Good Manners.

To PE'DDLE.† v. n. [perhaps from petty. See PETTY.] To be busy about trifles. Ainsworth. It is commonly written piddle: as, what piddling work is here.

PE'DDLING.† adj. Petty; trifling; unimportant.

Unnecessary rigours, and peddling severities. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 86.

So slight a pleasure I may part with, and find no miss; this peddling profit I may resign, and 'twill be no breach in my estate. Decay of Chr. Piety.

PEDERE'RO. n. s. [pedrero, Spanish, from piedra, a stone, with which they charged it.] A small cannon managed by a swivel. It is frequently written paterero.

PE'DESTAL. n. s. [piedstal, Fr.] The lower member of a pillar; the basis of a statue.

The poet bawls
And shakes the statues and the pedestals. Dryden.

In the centre of it was a grim idol; the forepart of the pedestal was curiously embossed with a triumph. Addison.

So stiff, so mute! some statue you would swear
Stept from its pedestal to take the air. Pope.

PEDE'STRIAL.* adj. [pedestris, Lat.] Employing the foot; belonging to the foot. Modern.

Of the different methods that have been described in history, by which archery has been practised, that in use among the Ethiopians, and a few other nations, is undoubtedly the most extraordinary. We read, that these people, instead of holding their bow in the left hand, as is the usual custom, drew it by the assistance of their feet. The fact is recorded by Diodorus Siculus, and Strabo; the latter of whom informs us of a curious expedient of this pedestrial archery, used by the Ethiopians in hunting elephants. Moseley, Ess. on Archery, p. 86.

PEDE'STRIAN.* adj. [pedestris, Lat.] On foot.

PEDE'STRIAN.* n. s. One who makes a journey on foot; one distinguished for his powers of walking. Modern.

PEDE'STRIOUS. adj. [pedestris, Lat.] Not winged; going on foot.

Men conceive they never lie down, and enjoy not the position of rest, ordained unto all pedestrious animals. Brown.

PE'DICLE. n. s. [from pedis, Lat. pedicule, Fr.] The footstalk, that by which a leaf or fruit is fixed to the tree.

The cause of the holding green, is the close and compact substance of their leaves and pedicles. Bacon.

PEDI'CULAR. adj. [pedicularis, Lat. pediculaire, Fr.] Having the phthiriasis or lousy distemper. Ainsworth.

PE'DIGREE. n. s. [per and degré, Skinner.] Genealogy; lineage; account of descent.

I am no herald to enquire of men's pedigrees, it sufficeth me if I know their virtues. Sidney.

You tell a pedigree
Of threescore and two years, a silly time. Shakspeare.

Alterations of sirnames, which in former ages have been very common, have obscured the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little labour to deduce many of them. Camden.

To the old heroes hence was given
A pedigree which reach'd to heaven. Waller.

The Jews preserved the pedigrees of their several tribes, with a more scrupulous exactness than any other nation. Atterbury.

PE'DIMENT.† n. s. [pedis, Lat.] In architecture, an ornament that crowns the ordonances, finishes the fronts of buildings, and serves as a decoration over gates, windows and niches: it is ordinarily of a triangular form, but sometimes makes the arch of a circle. Dict.

The pediment of the southern transept is pinnacled, not inelegantly, with a flourished cross. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 8.

PE'DLER.† n. s. [a petty dealer; a contraction produced by frequent use. Dr. Johnson. — Others from pied pouldreux, dusty foot. But perhaps Dr. Johnson is right. See PIEPOWDER.] One who travels the country with small commodities.

All as a poor pedler he did wend,
Bearing a trusse of trifles at his backe;
As bells and babies and glasses in his packe. Spenser.

If you did but hear the pedler at the door, you would never dance again after a tabor and pipe. Shakspeare.

He is wit's pedler, and retails his wares
At wakes and wassals, meetings, markets, fairs. Shakspeare.

Had sly Ulysses at the sack
Of Troy brought thee his pedler's pack. Cleaveland.

A narrow education may beget among some of the clergy in possession such contempt for all innovators, as merchants have for pedlers. Swift.

Atlas was so exceeding strong,
He bore the skies upon his back,
Just as a pedler does his pack. Swift.

PE'DLERESS.* n. s. A female pedler.

The companion of his [the tinker's] travels is some foul, sun-burnt quean, that since the terrible statute recanted gypsisme, and is turned pedleress. Overbury, Charact. sign. I. 2.

PE'DLERY.† adj. [from pedler.] Sold by pedlers.

Images, reliques, and other pedlarye wares. Bale on the Rev. P. iii. A a. 4. b.

The sufferings of those of my rank are trifles in comparison of what all those are who travel with fish, poultry, pedlery ware to sell. Swift.

PE'DLERY.* n. s.

1. The articles sold by pedlers.

Fearing that the quick-sighted protestant's eye — may at one time or other look with good judgement into these their deceitful pedleries. Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.

2. The employment of selling petty articles.

My next lover was Fungosa, the son of a stock-jobber: — I durst not dismiss him, and might perhaps have been doomed for ever to the grossness of pedlary, and jargon of usury, had not a fraud been discovered in the settlement. Johnson, Rambler, No. 119.

PEDOBA'PTISM.† n. s. [παιδὸς and βάπτισμα.] Infant baptism. Dict.

The second errour of the anabaptists, which A. R. strenuously propugneth, is their decrying down pædobaptism, and witholding Christ's lambs from being bathed in the sacred font. Featley, Dippers Dipt, p. 72.

PEDOBA'PTIST. n. s. [παιδὸς and βαπτιστής.] One that holds or practises infant baptism.

PEDO'METER.* n. s. [pes, Lat. a foot, and μέτρον, measure, Gr. pédomètre, Fr.] A mathematical instrument, by the management of the wheels of which, paces are numbered, and distance from one place to another exactly measured.

To PEE.* v. n. To look with one eye. In use to this day in Cumberland. "He pees: he looks with one eye." Ray.

PEED.* adj. Blind of one eye. North. Ray.

To PEEL.† v. a. [peler, Fr. from pellis, Lat. peal, old Fr. the skin.]

1. To decorticate; to flay.

The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands,
And stuck them up before the fulsome ewes. Shakspeare.

2. [piller, Fr. to rob.] To plunder. According to analogy this should be written pill. And it is usually so written by our old authors.

Go, ye swift messengers to a nation scattered and peeled. Isaiah, xviii. 2.

Who once just and temperate conquer'd well,
But govern ill the nations under yoke,
Peeling their provinces, exhausted all
But lust and rapine. Milton, P. R.

Lord-like at ease, with arbitrary pow'r,
To peel the chiefs, the people to devour;
These, traitor, are thy talents. Dryden.

PEEL.† n. s. [peal, old French; pellis, Lat.] The skin or thin rind of any thing.

PEEL.† n. s. [paelle, Fr.] A broad thin board with a long handle, used by bakers to put their bread in and out of the oven. Huloet.

A notable hot baker 'twas when he plied the peel. B. Jonson, Barthol. Fair.

PEE'LED.* See PIELED.

PEE'LER. n. s. [from peel.]

1. One who strips or flays.
2. A robber; a plunderer.

Yet otes with her sucking a peeler is found,
Both ill to the maister and worse to some ground. Tusser.

As 'tis a peeler of land, sow it upon lands that are rank. Mortimer.

To PEEP.† v. n. [This word has no etymology, except that of Skinner, who derives it from ophessen, Dutch, to lift up; and of Casaubon, who derives it from ὀπιπεύειν, a spy; perhaps it may come from pip, pipio, Latin, to cry as young birds: when the chickens first broke the shell and cried, they were said to begin to pip or peep; and the word that expressed the act of crying, was by mistake applied to the act of appearing that was at the same time: this is offered till something better may be found.]

1. To make the first appearance.

She her gay painted plumes disordered,
Seeing at last herself from danger rid,
Peeps forth and soon renews her native pride. Spenser.

Your youth
And the true blood, which peeps forth fairly through it,
Do plainly give you out an unstain'd shepherd. Shakspeare.

England and France might through their amity,
Breed him some prejudice; for from this league,
Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

I can see his pride
Peep through each part of him. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

The timorous maiden-blossoms on each bough
Peept forth from their first blushes; so that now
A thousand ruddy hopes smil'd in each bud,
And flatter'd every greedy eye that stood. Crashaw.

With words not hers, and more than human sound,
She makes the obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground. Roscommon.

Earth, but not at once, her visage rears,
And peeps upon the seas from upper grounds. Dryden.

Fair as the face of nature did appear,
When flowers first peep'd, and trees did blossoms bear,
And winter had not yet deform'd th' inverted year. Dryden.

Printing and letters had just peeped abroad in the world; and the restorers of learning wrote very eagerly against one another. Atterbury.

Though but the very white end of the sprout peep out in the outward part of the couch, break it open, you will find the sprout of a greater largeness. Mortimer.

So pleas'd at first the towering Alps we try,
And the first clouds and mountains seem the last;
But those attain'd, we tremble to survey
The growing labours of the lengthen'd way;
The increasing prospect tires our wand'ring eyes,
Hills peep o'er hills, and Alps on Alps arise. Pope.

Most souls but peep out once an age,
Dull sullen pris'ners in the body's cage. Pope.

2. To look slily, closely or curiously; to look through any crevice.

Who is the same, which at my window peeps? Spenser.

Come thick night!
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heaven peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry hold. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time;
Some that will evermore peep through their eyes,
And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper. Shakspeare.

A fool will peep in at the door. Ecclus. xxi. 23.

The trembling leaves through which he play'd,
Dappling the walk with light and shade,
Like lattice-windows give the spy
Room but to peep with half an eye. Cleaveland.

All doors are shut, no servant peeps abroad,
While others outward went on quick dispatch. Dryden.

The daring flames peept in, and saw from far
The awful beauties of the sacred quire;
But since it was prophan'd by civil war,
Heav'n thought it fit to have it purg'd by fire. Dryden.

From each tree
The feather'd people look down to peep on me. Dryden.

Those remote and vast bodies were formed not merely to be peept at through an optick glass. Bentley, Serm.

O my muse, just distance keep;
Thou art a maid, and must not peep. Prior.

In vain his little children peeping out
Into the mingling storm, demand their sire. Thomson.

3. [pipio, Lat. piepen, Teut. pepier, Fr.] To chirp; to cry as young birds; to utter in a small voice; to whisper. In the etymology Dr. Johnson has noticed this sense, but has made no farther mention of it. It is in our old lexicography.

Wisards that peep, and that mutter. Isaiah, viii. 19.

None that moved the wing, or opened the mouth, or peeped. Isaiah, x. 14.

Thy speech shall whisper [in the margin, peep, or chirp,] out of the dust. Isaiah, xxix. 4.

O, the only oracle,
That ever peep'd or spake out of a doublet. B. Jonson, Staple of News.

By peeping and muttering are meant the answers of those who, pretending to have familiar spirits, muttered or spoke imperfectly, as if their voice proceeded out of the caverns of the earth; or spoke inwardly, so that their words seemed to come out of their belly; from whence they were called ἐγγαστρίμυθοι in Greek. W. Lowth on Isaiah, p. 73.

PEEP. n. s.

1. First appearance: as, at the peep and first break of day.
2. A sly look.

Would not one think, the almanackmaker was crept out of his grave to take t' other peep at the stars? Swift.

PEE'PER.† n. s.

1. One that peeps.
2. A young chicken just breaking the shell.

Dishes I chuse, though little, yet genteel;
Snails the first course, and peepers crown the meal. Bramston.

3. [In cant language.] A looking-glass, and also the eye.

PEE'PHOLE. } n. s. [peep and hole.] Hole through PEE'PINGHOLE. } which one may look without being discovered.

The fox spied him through a peepinghole he had found out to see what news. L'Estrange.

By the peepholes in his crest,
Is it not virtually confest,
That there his eyes took distant aim? Prior.

PEER. n. s. [pair, Fr.]

1. Equal; one of the same rank.

His peers upon this evidence
Have found him guilty of high treason. Shakspeare.

Amongst a man's peers, a man shall be sure of familiarity; and therefore it is good a little to keep state. Bacon.

Oh! what is man, great maker of mankind!
That thou to him so great respect do'st bear!
That thou adorn'st him with so bright a mind,
Mak'st him a king, and ev'n an angel's peer. Davies.

2. One equal in excellence or endowments.

All these did wise Ulisses lead, in counsell peer to Jove. Chapman.

In song he never had his peer,
From sweet Cecilia down to chanticleer. Dryden.

3. Companion; fellow.

He all his peers in beauty did surpass. Spenser.

If you did move to night,
In the dances, with what spight
Of your peers you were beheld,
That at every motion swell'd. B. Jonson.

Who bear the bows were knights in Arthur's reign,
Twelve they, and twelve the peers of Charlemagne. Dryden.

4. A nobleman as distinct from a commoner; of nobility we have five degrees, who are all nevertheless called peers, because their essential privileges are the same.

I see thee compast with thy kingdom's peers,
That speak my salutation in their minds:
Hail king of Scotland. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

King Henry's peers and chief nobility
Destroy themselves, and lost the realm of France. Shakspeare.

Be just in all you say, and all you do;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be
A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden.

To Peer.† v. n. [By contraction from appear. Dr. Johnson. — Perhaps no contraction; but from the old French perer, "paroître, apparere." Lacombe. So Chaucer: "There was I bid in paine of deth to pere." Court of Love, ver. 55.]

1. To come just in sight.

As the sun breaks through the darkest clouds,
So honour peereth in the meanest habit. Shakspeare.

Yet a many of your horsemen peer,
And gallop o'er the field. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Ev'n through the hollow eyes of death
I spy life peering. Shakspeare.

See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was. B. Jonson.

Hell itself will pass away,
And leave her dolorous mansion to the peering day. Milton, Ode, Nativ.

2. To look narrowly; to peep.

Now for a clod-like hare in form they peer,
Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move,
Now the ambitious lark with mirrour clear
They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love. Sidney.

Peering in maps for ports, and peers, and roads,
And every object that might make me fear
Misfortune to my ventures. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Pee'rage. n. s. [pairie, Fr. from peer.]

1. The dignity of a peer.

His friendships he to few confin'd;
No fools of rank or mongrel breed,
Who fain would pass for Lords indeed;
Where titles give no right or power,
And peerage is a wither'd flower. Swift.

2. The body of peers.

Not only the penal laws are in force against papists, and their number is contemptible, but also the peerage and commons are excluded from parliament. Dryden.

Pee'rdom. n. s. [from peer.] Peerage. Ainsworth.

Pee'ress. n. s. [female of peer.] The lady of a peer; a woman ennobled.

Statesman and patriot ply alike the stocks;
Peeress and butler share alike the box. Pope.

Pee'rless. adj. [from peer.] Unequalled; having no peer.

I bind,
On pain of punishment, the world to weet,
We stand up peerless. Shakspeare.

Her peerless feature, joined with her birth,
Approves her fit for none but for a king. Shakspeare.

Hesperus, that led
The starry host, rode brightest; till the moon,
Rising in clouded majesty, at length,
Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerless light. Milton, P. L.

Such musick worthiest were to blaze
The peerless light of her immortal praise,
Whose lustre leads us. Milton, Arcades.

Her dress, her shape, her matchless grace,
Were all observ'd, as well as heavenly face;
With such a peerless majesty she stands,
As in that day she took the crown. Dryden.

Pee'rlessly.* adv. [from peerless.] Without an equal; matchlessly.

The gentlewoman is a good, pretty, proud, hard-favour'd thing; marry, not so peerlessly to be doted upon, I must confess. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

Pee'rlessness. n. s. [from peerless.] Universal superiority.

PEE'VISH.† adj. [This word Junius, with more reason than he commonly discovers, supposes to be formed by corruption from perverse; Skinner rather derives it from beeish, as we say waspish. Dr. Johnson. — Neither Junius, nor Skinner, in this instance, will probably be regarded. Serenius derives it from pipa, to pipe, figuratively to complain; and cites the Sueth. peplig, querulous, morose. This, though not the real etymon, has led me to consider a kindred expression as the probable parent of our peevish; and that is the word pew, to complain; to emit a mournful sound, as applied to birds; a Scottish expression, which may be directly from the Fr. piou, the voice of chickens, in Cotgrave; as that is from the verb piouler, "to peep as a young bird, to pule or howl as a young whelp." From this term of complaint might easily be formed, in order to denote a querulous person, the word peevish; and accordingly the Scotch have peuische, which Ruddiman calls peevish, among other explanations; and which, among the vulgar Scotch, is used, according to Dr. Jamieson, for niggardly, covetous. The origin, Dr. Jamieson adds, is quite uncertain. See his Scottish Dict. in V. Peuage, Peuis, Peuische. Thus our old word also was peuisse, or pevysse, as in the Morality of Hycke Scorner, where it means silly, foolish: "To learne to pater to make me pevysse." And I may further observe, that the word is pewish, meaning cross, froward, in Wodroephe's Fr. and Eng. Grammar, 4to. 1623, p. 294. "Sir, you will become so pewish, that no man shal be able to endre [endure] you."]

1. Petulant; waspish; easily offended; irritable; irascible; soon angry; perverse; morose; querulous; full of expressions of discontent; hard to please.

She is peevish, sullen, froward,
Proud, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty. Shakspeare.

If thou hast the metal of a king,
Being wrong'd as we are by this peevish town,
Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours, against these saucy walls. Shakspeare.

Neither will it be satire or peevish invective to affirm, that infidelity and vice are not much diminished. Swift.

2. Expressing discontent, or fretfulness.

For what can breed more peevish incongruities,
Than man to yield to female lamentations. Sidney.

Those deserve to be doubly laughed at, that are peevish and angry for nothing to no purpose. L'Estrange.

3. Silly; childish. [Peevish is translated into the Lat. delirus, by some of our old lexicographers.] This old sense is overpassed by Dr. Johnson; which indeed, as well as peevishness for silliness, is obsolete.

How now! a madman? Why thou peevish sheep,
What ship of Epidamnum stays for me? Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

I will not presume
To send such peevish tokens to a king. Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

Never was any so peevish to imagine the moon either capable of affection, or shape of a mistress. Lily, Endym. (1591.)

PEE'VISHLY. adv. [from peevish.] Angrily; querulously; morosely.

He was so peevishly opinionative and proud, that he would neither ask nor hear the advice of any. Hayward.

PEE'VISHNESS. n. s. [from peevish.] Irascibility; querulousness; fretfulness; perverseness.

Some miscarriages in government might escape through the peevishness of others, envying the publick should be managed without them. King Charles.

It will be an unpardonable, as well as childish peevishness, if we undervalue the advantages of our knowledge, and neglect to improve it. Locke.

You may find
Nothing but acid left behind:
From passion you may then be freed,
When peevishness and spleen succeed. Swift.

PEG.† n. s. [pegghe, Teutonick; supposed by some to be from the Greek πηγνύω πήγνυμι, to fasten or join; Dor. πάγω, to fix; or from the Su. Goth. picka, to point, whence the Su. pigg, a spike.]

1. A piece of wood driven into a hole, which does the office of an iron nail.

Solid bodies foreshew rain; as boxes and pegs of wood, when they draw and wind hard. Bacon.

The teeth are about thirty in each jaw; all of them claviculares or peg teeth, not much unlike the tusks of a mastiff. Grew, Mus.

If he be cholerick, we shall treat him like his little friend, and hang him upon a peg till he comes to himself. Addison.

The pegs and nails in a great building, though they are but little valued in themselves, are absolutely necessary to keep the whole frame together. Addison, Spect.

A finer petticoat can neither make you richer, more virtuous or wise, than if it hung upon a peg. Swift.

2. The pins of an instrument in which the strings are strained.

You are well tun'd now; but I'll let down
The pegs that make this musick. Shakspeare, Othello.

3. To take a PEG lower; to depress; to sink: perhaps from relaxing the cords of musical instruments. Dr. Johnson. — There can be little doubt of this, as the following example from Bishop Hall will shew.

Those only know how to want, that have learned to frame their mind to their estate; like to a skilful musician, that can let down his strings a peg lower, when the tune requires it. Bp. Hall, Of Contentation, § 4.

Remember how in arms and politicks,
We still have worsted all your holy tricks,
Trepann'd your party with intrigue,
And took your grandees down a peg. Hudibras.

4. The nick name of Margaret.

To PEG. v. a. To fasten with a peg.

I will rend an oak,
And peg thee in his knotty entrails, till
Thou'st howl'd away twelve winters. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Taking the shoots of the past spring, and pegging them down in very rich earth, by that time twelvemonth they will be ready to remove. Evelyn, Kal.

PE'GGER.* n. s. [from peg.] One who fastens with pegs. Not now in use. Sherwood.

PEGM.* n. s. [πῆγμα, Gr.] A sort of moving machine in the old pageants.

In the centre or midst of the pegm there was an aback or square, wherein this elogy was written. B. Jonson, K. James I. Entertainment.

To PEIZE.* v. a. [peser, Fr.] To poise; to balance; to weigh. Obsolete. See To PAYSE.

Not speaking words as they changeably fall from the mouth, but peyzing each syllable. Sidney, Def. of Poesy.

All the wrongs that he therein could lay,
Might not it peise. Spenser, F. Q.

Lest leaden slumber peize me down. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Again I view the parts so peized,
And these in number so, and measure, raised. B. Jonson, Verses to T. May.

PEISE.* n. s. [pesa, Span.] A weight, or poize; a blow; a stroke. Obsolete.

With a grete peyse they let the crosse and the body fall down togyder in to the mortesse. Lib. Fest. fol. 35.

Great Ptolemè it for his leman's sake
Ybuilded all of glasse by magicke powre,
And also it impregnable did make;
Yet, when his love was false, he with a peaze it brake. Spenser, Q. F. iii. ii, 20.

PELA'GIAN.* n. s. One of the followers of Pelagius, a monk; who, at the beginning of the fifth century, formed his schism. He denied original sin; and maintained free will and the merit of good works.

Original sin standeth not in the following of Adam, as the Pelagians do vainly talk; but is the fault and corruption of every man that naturally is ingendered of the offspring of Adam, whereby man is very far gone from original righteousness, and is of his own nature inclined to evil, so that the flesh lusteth always contrary to the spirit. Artic. of Religion, Art. 9.

The Pelagians held man led altogether by his will, so as that can alone enable him to do good, and to feoffe him in blessedness. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 97.

PELA'GIAN.* adj. Belonging to the notions of the Pelagians.

Throughout all this Pelagian scheme we have not so much as one word of man's natural impotency to spiritual things. South, Serm. iii. 36.

PELA'GIANISM.* n. s. The doctrine of Pelagius and his followers.

This persuasion of man's being able to merit of God, is the source and foundation of two of the greatest corruptions of religion that have infested the Christian church; and those are pelagianism and popery. South, Serm. iii. 34.

PELF.† n. s. [In low Latin, pelfra, not known whence derived; peuffe, in Norman, is frippery. Dr. Johnson. — Our word was formerly pelfry or pelfray: "Indulgences, beades, pardons, pilgremages, and suche other pelfray." Abp. Cranmer, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner, Pref. A. iij. And I am thus led to think that it has the same origin as paltry, viz. paltor, Icel. rags, or palt; Teut. a scrap. Riches or money might contemptuously be called pelf or rubbish; as they also are muck; and the corruption of pelt into pelf is easy.] Money; riches.

The thought of this doth pass all worldly pelf. Sidney.

Hardy elf,
Thou darest view my direful countenance,
I read thee rash and heedless of thyself,
To trouble my still seat and heaps of precious pelf. Spenser.

Of traffick or return she never taketh care;
Not provident of pelf, as many islands are. Drayton.

Immortal gods, I crave no pelf;
I pray for no man but myself. Shakspeare.

He call'd his money in;
But the prevailing love of pelf
Soon split him on the former shelf:
He put it out again. Dryden, Hor.

To the poor if he refus'd his pelf,
He us'd them full as kindly as himself. Swift.

PE'LFRY.* See the etymology of PELF.

PE'LICAN.† n. s. [πελεκὰν, Gr. pelicanus, low Lat. pellican, Fr.]

1. A large bird.

There are two sorts of pelicans; one lives upon the water and feeds upon fish; the other keeps in deserts, and feeds upon serpents and other reptiles: the pelican has a peculiar tenderness for its young; it generally places its nest upon a craggy rock: the pelican is supposed to admit its young to suck blood from its breast. Calmet.

Should discarded fathers
Have this little mercy on their flesh;
'Twas this flesh begot those pelican daughters. Shakspeare.

The pelican hath a beak broad and flat, like the slice of apothecaries. Hakewill on Providence.

2. A glass vessel used by chymists: written also pellicane, and pelecan.

Retorts, receivers, pellicanes, bolt-heads,
All struck in shivers! B. Jonson, Alchemist.

*PELI'SSE. n. s. [French; pelyce, Sax. from the Lat. pellis, a skin.] A kind of coat or robe. See PILCH, the old word.

Coats lined with these skins are called pelisses. Guthrie of Crim-Tartary.

PE'LLET. n. s. [from pila, Lat. pelote, Fr.]

1. A little ball.

A cube or pellet of yellow wax as much as half the spirit of wine, burnt only eighty-seven pulses. Bacon.

That which is sold to the merchants, is made into little pellets, and sealed. Sandys.

I dressed with little pellets of lint. Wiseman, Surgery.

2. A bullet; a ball to be shot.

The force of gunpowder hath been ascribed to rarefaction of the earthy substance into flame, and so followeth a dilatation; and therefore, lest two bodies should be in one place, there must needs also follow an expulsion of the pellet or blowing up of the mine: but these are ignorant speculations; for flame, if there were nothing else, will be suffocated with any hard body; such as a pellet is, or the barrel of a gun; so as the hard body would kill the flame. Bacon.

How shall they reach us in the air with those pellets they can hardly roll upon the ground. L'Estrange.

In a shooting trunk, the longer it is to a certain limit, the more forcibly the air passes and drives the pellet. Ray.

To PE'LLET.* v. a. [from the noun.] To form into little balls. Not in use.

Oft did she heave her napkin to her eyne,
Which on it had conceited characters,
Laundering the silken figures in the brine
That season'd woe had pelleted in tears.
Shakspeare, Lover's Complaint.

PE'LLETED. adj. [from pellet.] Consisting of bullets.

My brave Egyptians all,
By the discandying of this pelleted storm,
Lie graveless. Shakspeare.

PE'LLICAL. n. s. [pellicula, Latin.]

1. A thin skin.

After the discharge of the fluid, the pellicle must be broke. Sharp, Surgery.

2. It is often used for the film which gathers upon liquors impregnated with salts or other substances, and evaporated by heat.

PE'LLITORY.† n. s. [parietaria, Lat.] An herb.

The pellitory healing fire contains,
That from a raging tooth the humour drains. Tate, Cowley.

PELLME'LL.† adv. [pesle mesle, Fr.] Confusedly; tumultuously; one among another; with confused violence.

When we have dash'd them to the ground,
Then defie each other; and pell-mell
Make work upon ourselves. Shakspeare, K. John.

After these senators have in such manner, as your grace hath heard, battered episcopal government, with their paper-shot, then they fall pell-mell upon the service book. White.

The battle was a confused heap: the ground unequal; men, horses, chariots, crowded pell mell. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 2.

He knew when to fall on pellmell,
To fall back and retreat as well. Hudibras.

PELLS. n. s. [pellis, Lat.]

Clerk of the pells, an officer belonging to the exchequer, who enters every teller's bill into a parchment roll called pellis acceptorum, the roll of receipts; and also makes another roll called pellis excituum, a roll of the disbursements. Bailey.

PELLU'CID.† adj. [pellucidus, Lat.] Clear; transparent; not opake; not dark.

It being a rare kind of knowledge and chymistry to transmute dust and sand (for they are the only main ingredients) to such a diaphanous, pellucid, dainty body, as you see crystal glass is. Howell, Lett. (dat. 1621,) i. i. 29.

The colours are owing to the intermixture of foreign matter with the proper matter of the stone: this is the case of agates and other coloured stones, the colours of several whereof may be extracted, and the bodies rendered as pellucid as crystal, without sensibly damaging the texture. Woodward.

If water be made warm in any pellucid vessel emptied of air, the water in the vacuum will bubble and boil as vehemently as it would in the open air in a vessel set upon the fire, till it conceives a much greater heat. Newton, Opt.

PELLUCI'DITY. } n. s. [from pellucid.] Transparency; clearness; not opacity.
PELLU'CIDNESS. }

The air is a clear and pellucid menstruum, in which the insensible particles of dissolved matter float, without troubling the pellucidity of the air; when on a sudden by a precipitation they gather into visible misty drops that make clouds. Locke.

We consider their pellucidness and the vast quantity of light, that passes through them without reflection. Keil.

PELT.† n. s. [pellis, Lat. pels, Sueth.]

1. Skin; hide.

The church is fleeced, and hath nothing but a bare pelt left upon her back. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

They used raw pelts clapped about them for their clothes. Fuller, Holy War, p. 145.

The camel's hair is taken for the skin or pelt with the hair upon it. Brown, Vulg. Err.

A scabby tetter on their pelts will stick,
When the raw rain has pierc'd them to the quick. Dryden.

2. [pelte, Fr. pelta, Lat.] A kind of buckler: more correctly written pelta.

Under the conduct of Demetia's prince
March twice three thousand, arm'd with pelts and glaves.
Play of Fuimus Troes, (1633.)

On the left arm of Smyrna is the pelta or buckler of the Amazons. Addison on Medals.

3. The quarry of a hawk all torn. Ainsworth.

4. A blow from something thrown; a stroke. This usage is, in several parts of England, common in colloquial language: but Dr. Johnson has taken no notice of it.

George hit the dragon such a pelt!
Ballad of St. George for England, P. ii.

Pelt-monger. n. s. [pellio, Lat. pelt and monger.] A dealer in raw hides.

To PELT. v. a. [poltern, German, Skinner; contracted from pellet, Mr. Lye.]

1. To strike with something thrown. It is generally used of something thrown, rather with teazing frequency than destructive violence.

Do but stand upon the foaming shore,
The chiding billows seem to pelt the clouds. Shakspeare.

No zealous brother there would want a stone
To maul us cardinals, and pelt pope Joan. Dryden.

Obscure persons have insulted men of greath worth, and pelted them from coverts with little objections. Atterbury.

The whole empire could hardly subdue me, and I might easily with stones pelt the metropolis to pieces. Swift.

2. To throw; to cast.

My Phillis me with pelted apples plies,
Then tripping to the woods the wanton hies. Dryden.

Pe'lter.* n. s. A pinch-penny; one withered with covetousness; a mean paltry wretch. Not now in use. See Pelting, and Paltry. Huloet.

Pe'lting.† adj. This word in Shakspeare signifies, I know not why, mean; paltry; pitiful. Dr. Johnson.—I have in the etymology of paltry, shewn whence pelting has this signification. Nor is the word peculiar to Shakspeare. It is used by writers before and after him; and appears to have been common.

They shall not suffer, that any of these light wanderers in markets, and pelting sellers, which carry about and sell pinnes, points, and other small trifles, whom they call pedlars, to set out theyr wares to sale, either in the church-yeardes, or in the porches of churches.
Booke of Certaine Canons, &c. (1571,) C. ii. b.

Could great men thunder, Jove could ne'er be quiet;
For every pelting petty officer
Would use his heaven for thunder.
Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Fogs — falling in the land,
Have every pelting river made so proud,
That they have overborne their continents.
Shakspeare, Mid. S. N. Dream.

They from sheepcotes and poor pelting villages
Enforce their charity. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

A tenement or pelting farm. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Penny-pot poets are such pelting thieves.
Beaum. and Fl. Bl. Brother.

Abused and baffled by every pelting paultry lust.
Hammond, Works, iv. 562.

Pe'lting.* n. s. [from To pelt.] Assault; violence.

Poor naked wretches wheresoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
How shall your houseless heads, and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you!
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Pe'ltry.* n. s. [peltrie, old Fr.] Furs or skins in general.

The profits of a little traffick he drove in peltry. Smollet.

PELVIS. n. s. [Latin.] The lower part of the belly.

PEN.† n. s. [penna, Latin.]

1. An instrument of writing.

Never durst poet touch a pen to write,
Until his ink were temper'd with love's sighs. Shakspeare.

Eternal deities!
Who write whatever time shall bring to pass,
With pens of adamant on plates of brass. Dryden.

He takes the papers, lays them down again;
And, with unwilling fingers, tries the pen. Dryden.

He remembers not that he took off pen from paper till he had done. Fell.

I can, by designing the letters, tell what new idea it shall exhibit the next moment, barely by drawing my pen over it, which will neither appear, if my hands stand still; or though I move my pen, if my eyes be shut. Locke.

2. Feather. [penne, old French. Old also, in this sense, in our own language; and still so used in the north of England. Wicliffe employs it.]

The pens that did his pinions bind,
Were like main-yards with flying canvas lin'd. Spenser.

The proud peacock, overcharg'd with pens.
B. Jonson, Staple of News.

3. Wing; though even here it may mean feather.

Feather'd soon and fledg'd,
They summ'd their pens; and, soaring the air sublime,
With clang despis'd the ground. Milton, P. L.

4. [From pennan, Saxon.] A small inclosure; a coop.

My father stole two geese out of a pen. Shakspeare.

The cook was ordered to dress capons for supper, and take the best in the pen. L'Estrange.

She in pens his flocks will fold. Dryden, Hor.

Ducks in thy ponds, and chickens in thy pens,
And be thy turkeys numerous as thy hens. King.

To Pen.† v. a. preter. and part. pass. pent. [pennan and pynban, Saxon; which Serenius would derive from the Su. Goth. pinne, "clavus ligneus, q. d. ejusmodi clavis circumsepire."]

1. To coop; to shut up; to incage; to imprison in a narrow place.

Away with her, and pen her up. Shakspeare.

My heavy son
Private in his chamber pens himself. Shakspeare.

The plaister alone would pen the humour already contained in the part, and forbid new humour. Bacon.

Their armour help'd their harm, crush'd in and bruis'd,
Into their substance pent. Milton, P. L.

As when a prowling wolf
Whom hunger drives to seek new haunt for prey
Watching where shepherds pen their flocks at eve
In hurdled cotes, amid the field secure,
Leaps o'er the fence with ease into the fold. Milton, P. L.

The glass, wherein it is penned up, hinders it to deliver itself by an expansion of its parts. Boyle.

The prevention of mischief is prescribed by the Jewish custom; they pen up their daughters, and permit them to be acquainted with none. Harvey on Consumptions.

Ah! that your bus'ness had been mine,
To pen the sheep. Dryden.

2. [from the noun; pret. and part. pass. penned.] To write. It probably meant at first only the manual exercise of the pen, or mechanical part of writing; but it has been long used with relation to the style or composition.

For prey these shepherds two he took,
Whose mental stiff he knew he could not bend
With hearsay pictures, or a window look,
With one good dance or letter finely penn'd. Sidney.

I would be loth to cast away my speech; for, besides that it is excellently well penn'd, I have taken great pains to con it.
Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

A sentence spoken by him in English, and penned out of his mouth by four good secretaries, for trial of our orthography, was set down by them. Camden, Rem.

He frequented sermons, and penned notes with his own hand.
Hayward, Edw. VI.

The precepts penned, or preached by the holy Apostles, were as divine and as perpetual in respect of obligation. White.

The digesting my thoughts into order, and the setting them down in writing was necessary; for without such strict examination, as the penning them affords, they would have been disjointed and roving ones. Digby on the Soul.

Almost condemn'd, he mov'd the judges thus:
Hear, but instead of me, my Oedipus;
The judges hearing with applause, at the end
Freed him, and said, no fool such lines had penn'd. Denham.

Gentlemen should extempore, or after a little meditation, speak to some subject without penning of any thing. Locke.

Should I publish the praises that are so well penned, they would do honour to the persons who write them. Addison.

Twenty fools I never saw
Come with petitions fairly penn'd,
Desiring I should stand their friend. Swift.

PE'NAL. adj. [penal, Fr. from pœna, Lat.]

1. Denouncing punishment; enacting punishment.

Gratitude plants such generosity in the heart of man, as shall more effectually incline him to what is brave and becoming than the terrour of any penal law. South.

2. Used for the purposes of punishment; vindictive.

Adamantine chains and penal fire. Milton, P. L.

PENA'LITY. n. s. [penalité, old French.] Liableness to punishment; condemnation to punishment.

Many of the ancients denied the Antipodes, and some unto the penality of contrary affirmations; but the experience of navigation, can now assert them beyond all dubitation. Brown.

PE'NALTY. n. s. [from penalité, old French.]

1. Punishment; censure; judicial infliction.

Political power is a right of making laws with penalties of death, and consequently all less penalties, for preserving property, and employing the force of the community in the execution of laws. Locke.

Beneath her footstool, science groans in chains,
And wit dreads exile, penalties, and pains. Pope, Dunciad.

2. Forfeiture upon non-performance.

Lend this money, not as to thy friend,
But lend it rather to thine enemy,
Who, if he break, thou may'st with better face
Exact the penalty. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

PE'NANCE. † n. s. [penance, peneance, old French; for penitence.]

1. Infliction either publick or private, suffered as an expression of repentance for sin.

And bitter Penance, with an iron whip,
Was wont him once to disple every day. Spenser, F. Q.

Mew her up,
And make her bear the penance of her tongue. Shakspeare.

No penitentiary, though he enjoined him never so straight penance to expiate his first offence, would have counselled him to have given over pursuit of his right. Bacon.

The scourge
Inexorable, and the torturing hour
Calls us to penance. Milton, P. L.

A Lorain surgeon, who whipped the naked part with a great rod of nettles till all over blistered, persuaded him to perform this penance in a sharp fit he had. Temple.

2. Repentance.

Seeking to bring forth worthy fruits of penance.
Commination, Comm. Prayer.

PENCE. n. s. The plural of penny; formed from pennies, by a contraction usual in the rapidity of colloquial speech.

The same servant found one of his fellow servants, which owed him an hundred pence, and took him by the throat. St. Matthew.

PE'NCIL. † n. s. [penicillum, Latin.]

1. A small brush of hair which painters dip in their colours.

The Indians will perfectly represent in feathers whatsoever they see drawn with pencils. Heylin.

Pencils can by one slight touch restore
Smiles to that changed face, that wept before. Dryden.

For thee the groves green liv'ries wear,
For thee the graces lead the dancing hours,
And nature's ready pencil paints the flow'rs. Dryden.

A sort of pictures there is, wherein the colours, as laid by the pencil on the table, mark out very odd figures. Locke.

The faithful pencil has design'd
Some bright idea of the master's mind,
Where a new world leaps out at his command,
And ready nature waits upon his hand. Pope.

2. A black lead pen, with which cut to a point they write without ink.

Mark with a pen or pencil the most considerable things in the book you desire to remember. Watts.

3. Any instrument of writing without ink.

4. A little flag or streamer. [pennoncel, old French.] Obsolete.

She made him wear a pencell of her sleve.
Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. v. 1043

To PE'NCIL. † v. a. [from the noun.] To paint.

Smooth forehead, like the table of high Jove,
Small pencill'd eyebrows, like two glorious rainbows.
Trag. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

Painting is almost the natural man;
For since dishonour trafficks with man's nature,
He is but outside: pencill'd figures are
Ev'n such as they give out. Shakspeare, Timon.

She shall see deeds of honour in their kind,
Which sometimes shew well, pencill'd.
Beaum. and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

Pulse of all kinds diffus'd their od'rous pow'rs,
Where nature pencils butterflies on flow'rs. Harte.

PE'NDANT. n. s. [pendant, French.]

1. A jewel hanging in the ear.

The spirits —
Some thrid the mazy ringlets of her hair,
Some hang upon the pendants of her ear.
Pope, Rape of the Lock.

2. Any thing hanging by way of ornament.

Unripe fruit, whose verdant stalks do cleave
Close to the tree, which grieves no less to leave
The smiling pendant which adorns her so,
And until Autumn, on the bough should grow. Waller.

3. A pendulum. Obsolete.

To make the same pendant go twice as fast as it did, or make every undulation of it in half the time it did, make the line, at which it hangs, double in geometrical proportion to the line at which it hanged before. Digby on the Soul.

4. A small flag in ships.

PE'NDENCE. n. s. [from pendeo, Lat.] Slopeness; inclination.

The Italians give the cover a graceful pendance or slopeness, dividing the whole breadth into nine parts, whereof two shall serve for the elevation of the highest top or ridge from the lowest. Wotton on Architecture.

PE'NDENCY. n. s. [from pendeo, Latin.] Suspense; delay of decision.

The judge shall pronounce in the principal cause, nor can the appellant allege pendency of suit. Ayliffe.

PE'NDENT. adj. [pendens, Latin; some write pendant, from the French.]

1. Hanging.

Quaint in green she shall be loose enrob'd
With ribbons pendant, flaring about her head. Shakspeare.

I sometimes mournful verse indite, and sing
Of desperate lady near a purling stream,
Or lover pendent on a willow tree. Philips.

2. Jutting over.

A pendent rock,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory
With trees upon't, that nod unto the world,
And mock her eyes with air. Shakspeare.

3. Supported above the ground.

They brought, by wonderous art
Pontifical, a ridge of pendent rock
Over the vex'd abyss. Milton, P. L.

PE'NDICE. * See PENTICE.

PE'NDING. adj. [pendente lite.] Depending; remaining yet undecided.

A person, pending suit with the diocesan, shall be defended in the possession. Ayliffe.

PENDULO'SITY. } n. s. [from pendulous.] The state
PE'NDULOUSNESS. } of hanging; suspension.

His slender legs he encreased by riding, that is, the humours descended upon their pendulosity, having no support or suppedaneous stability. Brown, Vulg. Err.

PE'NDULOUS. † adj. [pendulus, Latin.]

1. Hanging; not supported below.

All the plagues, that in the pendulous air
Hang fated o'er men's faults, light on thy daughter.
Shakspeare.

Bellerophon's horse, fram'd of iron, and placed between two loadstones with wings expanded, hung pendulous in the air.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

The grinders are furnished with three roots, and in the upper jaw often four, because these are pendulous. Ray.

2. Doubtful; unsettled.

He expressly speaks of that immortality which is with God; and which far exceeds that pendulous (if I may so speak) and adventitious immortality, which Adam had in the earthly paradise: and he affirms that the protoplast, if he had retained and cherished the divine portion of the spirit given to him, should at length have attained such immortality.
Bp. Bull, Works, iii. 1094.

In a pendulous state of mind. Atterbury, Serm. iii. 273.

PE'NDULUM. n. s. [pendulus, Lat. pendule, Fr.] Any weight hung so as that it may easily swing backwards and forwards, of which the great law is, that its oscillations are always performed in equal time.

Upon the bench I will so handle 'em,
That the vibration of this pendulum
Shall make all taylors' yards of one
Unanimous opinion. Hudibras.

PE'NETRABLE. adj. [penetrable, Fr. penetrabilis, Latin.]

1. Such as may be pierced; such as may admit the entrance of another body.

Let him try thy dart,
And pierce his only penetrable part. Dryden.

2. Susceptive of moral or intellectual impression.

I am not made of stone,
But penetrable to your kind entreaties. Shakspeare.

Peace,
And let me wring your heart, for so I shall,
If it be made of penetrable stuff. Shakspeare.

PENETRABI'LITY. n. s. [from penetrable.] Susceptibility of impression from another body.

There being no mean between penetrability and impenetrability, passivity and activity, they being contrary; therefore the infinite rarefaction of the one quality is the position of its contrary. Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

PE'NETRAIL. n. s. [penetralia, Latin.] Interiour parts. Not in use.

The heart resists purulent fumes, into whose penetrails to insinuate some time must be allowed. Harvey.

PE'NETRANCY. n. s. [from penetrant.] Power of entering or piercing.

The subtility, activity and penetrancy of its effluvia no obstacle can stop or repel, but they will make their way through all bodies. Ray on the Creation.

PE'NETRANT.† adj. [penetrant, Fr.]

1. Having the power to pierce or enter; sharp; subtile.

If the operation of these salts be in convenient glasses promoted by warmth, the ascending steams may easily be caught and reduced into a penetrant spirit. Boyle.

The food, mingled with some dissolvent juices, is evacuated into the intestines, where it is further subtilized and rendered so fluid and penetrant, that the finer part finds its way in at the streight orifices of the lacteous veins. Ray.

2. Having power to affect the mind.

A modest and friendly stile doth suit truth; it, like its author, doth usually reside (not in the rumbling wind, nor in the shaking earthquake, nor in the raging fire, but) in the small still voice: sounding in this, it is most audible, most penetrant, and most effectual. Barrow, Serm. 4. on Tit. iii. 2.

The learned writings of St. Austin, St. Hierom, &c. — [and] penetrant and powerful arguments.
Boyle, Style of H. Script. p. 188.

To PE'NETRATE.† v. a. [penetro, Lat. penetrer, French.]

1. To pierce; to enter beyond the surface; to make way into a body.

Thy groans
Did make wolves howl, and penetrate the breasts
Of ever-angry bears. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Marrow is, of all other oily substances, the most penetrating.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To affect the mind.

3. To reach the meaning.

There shall we clearly see the uses of these things, which here were too subtile for us to penetrate. Ray.

To PE'NETRATE. v. n.

1. To make way.

Court virtues bear, like gems, the highest rate
Born where heav'n's influence scarce can penetrate:
Though the same sun with all diffusive rays
Smile in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,
We praise the stronger effort of his power,
And always set the gem above the flower. Pope.

2. To make way by the mind.

If we reached no farther than metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and have not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing. Locke.

PENETRA'TION. n. s. [penetration, Fr. from penetrate.]

1. The act of entering into any body.

It warms
The universe, and to each inward part
With gentle penetration though unseen
Shoots invisible virtue even to the deep. Milton, P. L.

2. Mental entrance into any thing abstruse.

A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, is not worth the labour of those who design either of the three learned professions. Watts.

3. Acuteness; sagacity.

The proudest admirer of his own parts might consult with others, though of inferior capacity and penetration. Watts.

PE'NETRATIVE. adj. [from penetrate.]

1. Piercing; sharp; subtile.

Let not air be too gross, nor too penetrative, nor subject to any foggy noisomeness from fens. Wotton.

2. Acute; sagacious; discerning.

O thou, whose penetrative wisdom found
The south sea rocks and shelves, where thousands drown'd.
Swift, Miscell.

3. Having the power to impress the mind.

Would'st thou see
Thy master thus with pleacht arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face subdu'd
To penetrative shame? Shakspeare.

PE'NETRATIVENESS. n. s. [from penetrative.] The quality of being penetrative.

PE'NGUIN.† n. s. [anser magellanicus, Lat.]

1. A bird. This bird was found with this name, as is supposed, by the first discoverers of America; and penguin signifying in Welsh a white head, and the head of this fowl being white, it has been imagined, that America was peopled from Wales; whence Hudibras: "British Indians nam'd from penguins." Grew gives another account of the name, deriving it from pinguis, Lat. fat; but is, I believe, mistaken. "The penguin is so called from his extraordinary fatness: for though he be no higher than a large goose, yet he weighs sometimes sixteen pounds: his wings are extreme short and little, altogether unuseful for flight, but by the help whereof he swims very swiftly." Grew's Museum

The isle is three miles about, in which we saw abundance of penguins, in Welch white-heads, agreeable to their colour.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 12.

There are very many great lazy fowls upon and about this island, with great coal-black bodies, and very white heads, called penguins. Terry, Voy. to the E. Ind. (1655,) p. 26.

2. A fruit.

The penguin is very common in the West Indies, where the juice of its fruit is often put into punch, being of a sharp acid flavour: there is also a wine made of the juice of this fruit, but it will not keep good long. Miller.

PENI'NSULA. n. s. [Lat. pene insula; peninsule, Fr.] A piece of land almost surrounded by the sea, but joined by a narrow neck to the main.

Aside of Milbrook lieth the peninsula of Inswork, on whose neckland standeth an ancient house. Carew.

Peni'nsulated.† adj. [from peninsula.] Almost surrounded by water.

The mountains, the river Neath, and its shady banks, form a beautiful back ground and contrast to the bold craggy shore, and the broken peninsulated knolls, which not unfrequently project from it. Wyndham's Tour.

PE'NITENCE.† } PE'NITENCY. } n. s. [penitence, Fr. pœnitentia, Lat.] Repentance; sorrow for crimes; contrition for sin, with amendment of life or change of the affections.

And there this short breath of mortality
I'll finish up in that repentant state,
Where not the allurements of earth's vanities
Can e'er o'ertake me; ——
Where penitency, not disturb'd, may grieve.
Tailor, Com. of the Hog hath lost his Pearl.

Death is deferr'd, and penitence has room
To mitigate, if not reverse the doom. Dryden.

Pe'nitent. adj. [penitent, Fr. pœnitens, Lat.] Repentant; contrite for sin; sorrowful for past transgressions, and resolutely amending life.

Much it joys me
To see you become so penitent. Shakspeare.

Nor in the land of their captivity
Humbled themselves, or penitent besought
The God of their forefathers. Milton, P. R.

Provoking God to raise them enemies;
From whom as oft he saves them penitent. Milton, P. L.

The proud he tam'd, the penitent he chear'd,
Nor to rebuke the rich offender fear'd,
His preaching much, but more his practice wrought
A living sermon of the truths he taught. Dryden.

Pe'nitent. n. s.

1. One sorrowful for sin.

Concealed treasures shall be brought into use by the industry of converted penitents, whose carcases the impartial laws shall dedicate to the worms of the earth. Bacon.

The repentance, which is formed by a grateful sense of the divine goodness towards him, is resolved on while all the appetites are in their strength: the penitent conquers the temptations of sin in their full force. Rogers.

2. One under censures of the church, but admitted to penance.

The counterfeit Dionysius describes the practice of the church, that the catechumens and penitents were admitted to the lessons and psalms, and then excluded. Stillingfleet.

3. One under the direction of a confessor.

Penite'ntial. adj. [from penitence.] Expressing penitence; enjoined as penance.

I have done penance for contemning love,
Whose high imperious thoughts have punish'd me
With bitter fasts and penitential groans. Shakspeare.

Is it not strange, that a rational man should adore leeks and garlick, and shed penitential tears at the smell of a deified onion? South.

Penite'ntial. n. s. [penitenciel, Fr. pœnitentiale, low Lat.] A book directing the degrees of penance.

The penitentials or book of penance contained such matters [illegible]ated to the imposing of penance, and the reconciliation [illegible] person that suffered penance. Ayliffe.

[illegible]ntiary. n. s. [penitencier, Fr. pœnitentiarius, [illegible]t.]

1. One who prescribes the rules and measures of penance.

Upon the loss of Urbin, the duke's undoubted right, no penitentiary, though he had enjoined him never so straight penance to expiate his first offence, would have counselled him to have given over pursuit of his right, which he prosperously re-obtained. Bacon.

The great penitentiary with his counsellors prescribes the measure of penance. Ayliffe.

2. A penitent; one who does penance.

A prison restrained John Northampton's liberty, who, for abusing the same in his unruly mayoralty of London, was condemned hither as a perpetual penitentiary. Carew.

To maintain a painful fight against the law of sin, is the work of the penitentiary. Hammond.

3. The place where penance is enjoined. Ainsworth.

Penite'ntiary.* adj. Relating to the rules and measures of penance.

There needed no other penitentiary tax.
Bp. Bramhall, Schism Guarded, p. 152.

Pe'nitently. adv. [from penitent.] With repentance; with sorrow for sin; with contrition.

Pe'nknife. n. s. [pen and knife.] A knife used to cut pens.

Some schoolmen, fitter to guide penknives than swords, precisely stand upon it. Bacon.

We might as soon fell an oak with a penknife. Holyday.

Pe'nman.† n. s. [pen and man.]

1. One who professes the art of writing.

I shall speak of this master and accountant, [E. Powell,] not only as a dexterous penman, but also as a scholar very well versed in classical learning.
Massey, Orig. and Progr. of Letters, P. ii. p. 115.

2. An author; a writer.

And thou, the pen-man of my historic,
Prepare sad verse for my sad tragedie. Mir. for Mag. p. 604.

The four evangelists, within fifty years after our Saviour's death, consigned to writing that history, which had been published only by the apostles and disciples: the further consideration of these holy penmen will fall under another part of this discourse. Addison on the Chr. Religion.

The descriptions which the evangelists give, shew that both our blessed Lord and the holy penmen of his story were deeply affected. Atterbury.

Pe'nmanship.* n. s. [from penman.] The use of the pen; art of writing.

In 1664 he [Cocker] published his Guide to penmanship.
Massey, Orig. and Progr. of Letters, P. ii. p. 56.

Pe'nnached. adj. [pennaché, French.] Applied to flowers when the ground of the natural colour of their leaves is radiated and diversified neatly without any confusion. Trevoux.

Carefully protect from violent rain your pennached tulips, covering them with matrasses. Evelyn.

Pe'nnant. n. s. [pennon, Fr.]

1. A small flag, ensign or colours.

2. A tackle for hoisting things on board. Ainsworth.

Pe'nnated. adj. [pennatus, Lat.]

1. Winged.

2. Pennated, amongst botanists, are those leaves of plants as grow directly one against another on the same rib or stalk; as those of ash and walnut-tree. Quincy.

Pe'nned.* adj. [from pen.] Winged; plumed. Huloet.

Pe'nner.† n. s. [from pen.]

1. A writer.

He talked to me a great deal of the declaration: — he told me, he was the penner of it.
Diary of Hen. Earl of Clarendon, (1688,) p. 219.

2. A penease. Ainsworth. So it is called in Scotland. Dr. Johnson. — And, it may be added, so it is found in our dictionaries more than a century before Ainsworth's.

PE'NNILESS.† adj. [from penny.] Moneyless; poor; wanting money.

The doors, for ever barred to the pennyless populace, seemed to open themselves at his producing a silver sixpence. Arbuthnot and Pope.

Hail, ticking! surest guardian of distress!
Beneath thy shelter pennyless I quaff
The cheerful cup! Warton on Oxford Ale.

PE'NNING.* n. s. [from To pen.] Written work; composition.

Read this challenge; mark but the penning of it. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

I may the better be encouraged to go on with my plain manner of penning, though it be unpolished. Bryskett, Disc. of Civ. Life, p. 99.

How shall he be thought wise, whose penning is thin and shallow? B. Jonson, Discoveries.

PE'NNON.† n. s. [pennon, Fr.]

1. A small flag or colour.

Her yellow locks crisped like golden wire,
About her shoulders weren loosely shed,
And when the wind amongst them did inspire,
They waved like a pennon wide dispred. Spenser.
Harry sweeps through our land
With pennons painted in the blood of Harfleur. Shakspeare.
High on his pointed lance his pennon bore,
His Cretan fight, the conquer'd Minotaur. Dryden.

2. A pinion. [penna, Lat.] Perhaps peculiar to Milton.

All unawares
Fluttering his pennons vain, plumb down he drops
Ten thousand fathom deep. Milton, P. L. ii. 933.

PE'NNY. n. s. plural pence. [peniȝ, Sax.]

1. A small coin, of which twelve make a shilling: a penny is the radical denomination from which English coin is numbered, the copper halfpence and farthings being only nummorum famuli, a subordinate species of coin.

She sighs and shakes her empty shoes in vain,
No silver penny to reward her pain. Dryden.
One frugal on his birth-day fears to dine,
Does at a penny's cost on herbs repine. Dryden.

2. Proverbially. A small sum.

You shall hear
The legions, now in Gallia, sooner landed
In our not fearing Britain, than have tidings
Of any penny tribute paid. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

We will not lend thee a penny. Shakspeare.

Because there is a latitude of gain in buying and selling, take not the utmost penny that is lawful, for although it be lawful, yet it is not safe. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

3. Money in general.

Pepper and Sabean incense take;
And with post-haste thy running markets make;
Be sure to turn the penny. Dryden.

It may be a contrivance of some printer, who hath a mind to make a penny. Swift, Miscell.

PENNYRO'YAL, or pudding grass. n. s. [pulegium, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

PE'NNYWEIGHT.† n. s. [penny and weight.] A weight containing twenty-four grains troy weight. So called from the ancient silver penny being of this weight.

The Sevil piece of Eight is 1 ½ pennyweight in the pound worse than the English standard, weighs fourteen pennyweight, contains thirteen pennyweight, twenty-one grains and fifteen mites, of which there are twenty in the grain of sterling silver, and is in value forty-three English pence and eleven hundredths of a penny. Arbuthnot on Coins.

PE'NNYWISE.† adj. [penny and wise.] Saving small sums at the hazard of larger; niggardly on improper occasions.

Be not pennywise; riches have wings and fly away of themselves. Bacon.

Pennywise, pound-foolish! Burton, Anat. of Mel. Pref. p. 38.

PE'NNYWORTH. n. s. [penny and worth.]

1. As much as is bought for a penny.

2. Any purchase; any thing bought or sold for money.

As for corn it is nothing natural, save only for barley and oats, and some places for rye; and therefore the larger pennyworths may be allowed to them. Spenser on Ireland.

Pirates may make cheap penn'worths of their pillage,
And purchase friends. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

I say nothing to him, for he hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian, and you may come into court, and swear that I have a poor pennyworth of the English. Shakspeare.

Lucian affirms, that the souls of usurers after their death are translated into the bodies of asses, and there remain certain days for poor men to take their pennyworths out of their bones and sides by cudgel and spur. Peacham.

Though in purchases of church lands men have usually the cheapest pennyworths, yet they have not always the best bargains. South.

3. Something advantageously bought; a purchase got for less than it is worth.

For fame he pray'd, but let the event declare
He had no mighty penn'worth of his pray'r. Dryden.

4. A small quantity.

My friendship I distribute in pennyworths to those about me and who displease me least. Swift.

PE'NSILE. adj. [pensilis, Lat.]

1. Hanging; suspended.

Two trepidations; the one manifest and local, as of the bell when it is pensile; the other, secret of the minute parts. Bacon.

This ethereal space,
Yielding to earth and sea the middle place,
Anxious I ask you, how the pensile ball
Should never strive to rise, nor never fear to fall. Prior.

2. Supported above the ground.

The marble brought, erects the spacious dome,
Or forms the pillars long-extended rows,
On which the planted grove, and pensile garden, grows. Prior.

PE'NSILENESS.† n. s. [from pensile.] The state of hanging.

Wherein the pensileness of the earth, the pole of the north, and the finiteness or convexity of heaven, are manifestly touched. Bacon on Learning, B. I.

PE'NSION.† n. s. [pension, Fr.]

1. A payment of money; a rent. This is the primary meaning, which Dr. Johnson has overlooked; and has cited no earlier example of the word, under his violent definition of it, than that from Addison. It is also a sum of money paid to some churches in lieu of tithes.

He commanded to give to all that kept the city pensions and wages. 1 Esdr. iv. 56.

Our Saviour rejects all such unwise and perverse traders, who will not exchange brittle glass for solid gold; — a small temporary pension for a vastly rich freehold. Barrow, vol. iii. S 15.

2. An allowance made to any one without an equivalent. In England it is generally understood to mean pay given to a state hireling for treason to his country. Dr. Johnson. — This definition extremely puzzled the great lexicographer himself, when it was proposed to bestow a pension on him, in the year 1762. See Boswell's Life of Johnson. And the candid biographer informs us, that Lord Loughborough told him, "the pension was granted to Johnson solely as the reward of his literary merit, without any stipulation whatever, or even tacit understanding that he should write for administration! — His definitions of pension and pensioner, partly founded on the satirical verses of Pope, which he quotes, may be generally true; and yet every body must allow, that there may be, and have been, instances of pensions given and received upon liberal and honourable terms." — Undoubtedly: and the true meaning of pension, in its secondary sense, (however a pension may be sometimes undeservedly accepted and bestowed,) is the allowance made as an acknowledgement for any eminent and distinguished services.

It would be very agreeable to her Majesty, if the pension of 5,000l. per ann. were continued and limited by act of parliament to the duke of Marlborough's posterity, for the more honourable support of their dignities, in like manner as his honours, and the honour and manor of Woodstock, and house of Blenheim, were already limited and settled. Message of Q. Anne to the Commons, Jan. 9th, 1706.

A charity bestowed on the education of her young subjects has more merit than a thousand pensions to those of a higher fortune. Addison, Guardian.

He has lived with the great without flattery and been a friend to men in power without pensions. Pope.

Chremes, for airy pensions of renown,
Devotes his service to the state, and crown. Young.

To PE'NSION. v. a. [from the noun.] To support by an arbitrary allowance.

One might expect to see medals of France in the highest perfection, when there is a society pensioned and set apart for the designing of them. Addison on Medals.

The hero William, and the martyr Charles,
One knighted Blackmore, and one pension'd Quarles. Pope.

PE'NSIONARY. adj. [pensionnaire, Fr.] Maintained by pensions.

Scorn his household policies,
His silly plots and pensionary spies. Donne.

They were devoted by pensionary obligations to the olive. Howell, Voc. For.

PE'NSIONARY.* n. s. [pensionarius, low Lat.] One receiving a pension, or annual payment.

All parsons, vicars, pensionaries, prebendaries, and other beneficed men. Injunct. by K. Edw. VI. (1547.)

PE'NSIONER.† n. s. [from pension.]

1. One who is supported by an allowance paid at the will of another; a dependant.

Prices of things necessary for sustentation, grew excessive to the hurt of pensioners, soldiers, and all hired servants. Camden.

Hovering dreams,
The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train. Milton, Il Pens.

Those persons whom he trusted with his greatest secret and greatest business, his charity, seldom had recourse to him, but he would make enquiry for new pensioners. Fell.

The rector is maintained by the perquisites of the curate's office, and therefore is a kind of pensioner to him. Collier.

2. A slave of state hired by a stipend to obey his master. See what Mr. Boswell has said under the second definition of PENSION.

In Britain's senate he a seat obtains,
And one more pensioner St. Stephen gains. Pope.

3. One of an order of students in the university of Cambridge.

About forty years since, forty pounds per annum for a commoner (or pensioner, as the term is at Cambridge,) was looked on as a sufficient maintenance. Dean Pridcaux, Life and Lett. (dat. 1715,) p. 196.

4. One of an honourable band of gentlemen, attendant upon the king; established in the sixteenth century, and still continued.

PE'NSIVE.† adj. [pensif, French; pensivo, Italian; from penser, Fr. pynsd, Su. Goth. to meditate. Serenius. Our word was at first pensife; and it was also written pensative. "Laodomie, his lustie wife, which for his love was pensife." Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4. See also Huloet's Dict. "He was very pensative to hear the follies that Don Quixote spake." Shelton, Tr. of Don Quix. i. 5.]

1. Sorrowfully thoughtful; sorrowful; mournfully serious; melancholy.

Think it still a good work, which they in their pensive care for the well bestowing of time account waste. Hooker.

Are you at leisure, holy father, —
— My leisure serves me, pensive daughter, now. Shakspeare.

Anxious cares the pensive nymph opprest,
And secret passions labour'd in her breast. Pope.

2. It is generally and properly used of persons; but Prior has applied it to things.

We at the sad approach of death shall know
The truth, which from these pensive numbers flow,
That we pursue false joy, and suffer real woe. Prior.

PE'NSIVELY. adv. [from pensive.] With melancholy; sorrowfully; with gloomy seriousness.

So fair a lady did I spy,
On herbs and flowers she walked pensively
Mild, but yet love she proudly did forsake. Spenser.

PE'NSIVENESS. n. s. [from pensive.] Melancholy; sorrowfulness; gloomy seriousness.

Concerning the blessings of God, whether they tend unto this life or the life to come, there is great cause why we should delight more in giving thanks than in making requests for them, inasmuch as the one hath pensiveness and fear, the other always joy annexed. Hooker.

Would'st thou unlock the door
To cold despairs and gnawing pensiveness. Herbert.

PE'NSTOCK.* n. s. [pen and stock.] A sort of sluice, placed in the water of a mill-pond; a flood-gate.

The author in the ensuing part of the pentateuch makes not unfrequent mention of the angels. Bentley.

PE'NTECOST.† n. s. [pentecoste, Saxon; πεντηκοστὴ, Gr. pentecôte, Fr.]

1. A feast among the Jews.

Pentecost signifies the fiftieth, because this feast was celebrated the fiftieth day after the sixteenth of Nisan, which was the second day of the feast of the passover: the Hebrews call it the feast of weeks, because it was kept seven weeks after the passover: they then offered the first fruits of the wheat harvest, which then was completed: it was instituted to oblige the Israelites to repair to the temple, there to acknowledge the Lord's dominion, and also to render thanks to God for the law he had given them from mount Sinai, on the fiftieth day after their coming out of Egypt. Calmet.

2. Whitsuntide.

'Tis since the nuptial of Lucentio,
Come pentecost as quickly as it will,
Some five-and-twenty years. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

PE'NTECOSTAL. adj. [from pentecost.] Belonging to Whitsuntide.

I have composed sundry collects, made up out of the church collects with some little variation; as the collects adventual, quadragesimal, paschal, or pentecostal. Sanderson.

PE'NTECOSTALS.* n. s. pl. Oblations formerly made at the feast of Pentecost by parishioners to their parish-priest, and sometimes by inferiour churches to the mother-church. See Cowel. A payment of this kind yet remains as a charge upon some particular churches.

PE'NTHOUSE. n. s. [pent, from pente, Fr. and house.] A shed hanging out aslope from the main wall.

This is the penthouse under which Lorenzo desired us to make a stand. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his penthouse lid. Shakspeare.

The Turks lurking under their penthouse, laboured with mattocks to dig up the foundation of the wall. Knolles.

Those defensive engines, made by the Romans into the form of penthouses to cover the assailants from the weapons of the besieged, would he presently batter in pieces with stones and blocks. Wilkins.

My penthouse eye-brows and my shaggy beard
Offend your sight; but these are manly signs. Dryden.

The chill rain
Drops from some penthouse on her wretched head. Rowe.

PE'NTICE.† n. s. [appentir, French; pendice, Italian. It is commonly supposed a corruption of penthouse; but perhaps pentice is the true word. It was also written pendice, after the Italian word.] A sloping roof.

Climes that fear the falling and lying of much snow, ought to provide more inclining pentices. Wotton.

And o'er their heads an iron pendice vast
They built by joining many a shield and targe.
Fairfax, Tass. xi. 33.

PE'NTILE. n. s. [pent and tile.] A tile formed to cover the sloping part of the roof: they are often called pantiles.

Pentiles are thirteen inches long, with a button to hang on the laths; they are hollow and circular. Moxon.

PENT up. part. adj. [pent, from pen, and up.] Shut up.

Close pent up guilts
Rive your concealing continents. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

PENU'MBRA. n. s. [pene and umbra, Latin.] An imperfect shadow; that part of the shadow which is half light.

The breadth of this image answered to the sun's diameter, and was about two inches and the eighth part of an inch, including the penumbra. Newton.

PENU'RIOUS.† adj. [from penuria, Latin.]

1. Niggardly; sparing; not liberal; sordidly mean.

As a grudging master,
As a penurious niggard of his wealth. Milton, Comus.

What more can our penurious reason grant
To the large whale, or castled elephant? Prior.

2. Scant; not plentiful.

I have but little gold of late, brave Timon,
The want whereof doth daily make revolt
In my penurious hand. Shakspeare, Timon of Athens.

PENU'RIOUSLY.† adv. [from penurious.] Sparingly; not plentifully.

The place is most penuriously empty of all other good outsides. B. Jonson, Cynth. Revels.

PENU'RIOUSNESS. n. s. [from penurious]

1. Niggardliness; parsimony.

If we consider the infinite industry and penuriousness of that people, it is no wonder that, notwithstanding they furnish as great taxes as their neighbours, they make a better figure. Addison.

2. Scantiness; not plenty.

PE'NURY. n. s. [penuria, Lat.] Poverty; indigence.

The penury of the ecclesiastical estate. Hooker.

Who can perfectly declare
The wondrous cradle of thy infancy?
When thy great mother Venus first thee bare,
Begot of plenty and of penury. Spenser.

Sometimes am I king;
Then treason makes me wish myself a beggar;
And so I am: then crushing penury
Persuades me, I was better when a king;
Then I am king'd again. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

All innocent they were exposed to hardship and penury, which, without you, they could never have escaped. Sprat.

Let them not still be obstinately blind,
Still to divert the good design'd,
Or with malignant penury
To starve the royal virtues of his mind. Dryden.

May they not justly to our climes upbraid
Shortness of night, and penury of shade. Prior

PE'ON.* n. s. In India a foot-soldier; one employed also as a servant or attendant. The original word is said to be peadah. The corruption, peon, has passed into the French language; and signifies a common man in the game of chess. See PAWN.

Little boys, or peunes, who, for four-pice a day, are ready to run, go errands, or the like. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 45.

PE'ONY. n. s. [pæonia, Latin.] A flower. Miller.

A physician had often tried the peony root unseasonably gathered without success; but having gathered it when the decreasing moon passes under Aries, and tied the slit root about the necks of his patients, he had freed more than one from epileptical fits. Boyle.

PE'OPLE. n. s. [peuple, Fr. populus, Lat.]

1. A nation; those who compose a community. In this sense is read peoples.

Prophesy again before many peoples and nations and tongues. Rev. x. 11.

Ants are a people not strong, yet they prepare their meat in summer. Prov. xxx. 25.

What is the city but the people?
True, the people are the city. Shakspeare, Coriol.

2. The vulgar.

I must like beasts or common people die,
Unless you write my elegy. Cowley.

The knowing artist may
Judge better than the people, but a play
Made for delight,
If you approve it not, has no excuse. Waller.

3. The commonalty; not the princes or nobles.

Of late
When corn was given gratis, you repin'd,
Scandal'd the suppliants; for the people, call'd them
Time-pleasers, flatterers. Shakspeare.

Myself shall mount the rostrum in his favour,
And strive to gain his pardon from the people. Addison.

4. Persons of a particular class.

If a man temper his actions to content every combination of people, the musick will be the fuller. Bacon.

A small red flower in the stubble fields country people call the wincopipe. Bacon.

5. Men, or persons in general. In this sense, the word people is used indefinitely, like on in French.

The frogs petitioning for a king, bids people have a care of struggling with heaven. L'Estrange.

People were tempted to lend by great premiums and large interest. Swift, Miscell.

Watery liquor will keep an animal from starving by diluting the fluids; for people have lived twenty-four days upon nothing but water. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

People in adversity should preserve laudable customs. Richardson, Clarissa.

To PE'OPLE. v. a. [peupler, French.] To stock with inhabitants.

Suppose that Brute, or whosoever else that first peopled this island, had arrived upon Thames, and called the island after his name Britannia. Ralegh, Hist.

He would not be alone, who all things can;
But peopled heaven with angels, earth with man. Dryden.

Beauty a monarch is,
Which kingly power magnificently proves
By crouds of slaves, and peopled empire loves. Dryden.

A peopled city made a desert place. Dryden.

Imperious death directs his ebon lance;
Peoples great Henry's tombs, and leads up Holbein's dance. Prior.

PE'PPER.† n. s. [peppoꞃ, Saxon; pipre, Latin; poivre, French.] An aromatick pungent spice.

We have three kinds of pepper; the black, the white, and the long, which are three different fruits produced by three distinct plants: black pepper is a dried fruit of the size of a vetch, and roundish, but rather of a deep brown than a black colour: with this we are supplied from Java, Malabar, and Sumatra, and the plant has the same heat and fiery taste that we find in the pepper: white pepper is commonly factitious, and prepared from the black by taking off the outer bark, but there is a rarer sort, which is a genuine fruit naturally white: long pepper is a fruit gathered while unripe and dried, of an inch, or an inch and a half in length, and of the thickness of a large goose quill. Hill.

Scatter o'er the blooms the pungent dust
Of pepper, fatal to the frosty tribe. Thomson, Spring.

To PE'PPER.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sprinkle with pepper.

Note the lining of the royall robe,
Its powder'd ermine, pepper'd too with stings,
That, like a nettle, make the wearer rub.
Davies, Wit's Pilgrimage, sign. S. 4. b.

Of praise a mere glutton, he swallow'd what came;
And the puff of a dunce he mistook it for fame;
Till his relish grown callous, almost to disease,
Who pepper'd the highest was surest to please.
Goldsmith, Retaliation.

2. To beat; to mangle with shot or blows.

I have peppered two of them; two I have paid, two rogues in buckram suits. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Thou art hurt.—I am pepper'd;
I was i' the midst of all, and bang'd of all hands;
They made an anvil of my head; it rings yet;
Never so thresh'd: do you call this fame?
Beaum. and Fl. Hum. Lieut.

PE'PPERBOX. n. s. [pepper and box.] A box for holding pepper.

I will not take the leacher; he cannot creep into a halfpenny purse nor into a pepperbox. Shakspeare.

PE'PPER-CAKE.* See PEPPER-GINGERBREAD.

PE'PPERCORN. n. s. [pepper and corn.] Any thing of inconsiderable value.

Our performances, though dues, are like those peppercorns which freeholders pay their landlord to acknowledge that they hold all from him. Boyle.

Folks from mud-wall'd tenement
Bring landlords peppercorn for rent. Prior.

PE'PPER-GINGERBREAD.* n. s. What is now called spice-gingerbread; and in the north pepper-cake.

Swear me, Kate, like a lady as thou art,
A good mouth-filling oath; and leave in sooth,
And such protest of pepper-gingerbread,
To velvet-guards and Sunday citizens. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

PE'PPERING.* adj. [from pepper.] Hot; fiery; angry.

I resented highly that he [lord Lansdown] should complain of me before he spoke to me. I sent him a peppering letter; and would not summon him by a note, as I did the rest; nor ever will have any thing to say to him, till he begs my pardon. Swift, Journ. 1711.

PE'PPERMINT. n. s. [pepper and mint; piperitis.] Mint eminently hot.

PE'PPERWORT. n. s. [pepper and wort.] A plant. Miller.

4. Survey of the bounds of the parish annually performed.

An exhortation to be spoken to such parishes, where they use their perambulation in rogation-week, for the oversight of their bounds, and limits of their town. Homilies, Rogat. Week.

PERA'MBULATOR.✱ n. s. [from perambulate.] A wheel for measuring roads.

The method of doing this, is either with an instrument and chain, or else with a perambulator or measuring wheel. Alingham on Maps, § 5.

PERCA'SE. adv. [par and case.] Perchance; perhaps. Not used.

A virtuous man will be virtuous in solitudine, and not only in theatro, though percase it will be more strong by glory and fame, as an heat which is doubled by reflexion. Bacon.

PE'RCEANT. adj. [perçant, Fr.] Piercing; penetrating. Obsolete.

Wonderous quick and perceant was his spright
As eagle's eyes, that can behold the sun. Spenser.

PERCEI'VABLE. adj. [from perceive.] Perceptible; such as falls under perception.

The body, though it really moves, yet not changing perceivable distance with some other bodies, as fast as the ideas of our own minds will follow one another, seems to stand still; as the hands of clocks. Locke.

That which we perceive when we see figure, as perceivable by sight, is nothing but the termination of colour. Locke.

PERCEI'VABLY. adv. [from perceivable.] In such a manner as may be observed or known.

PERCEI'VER.✱ n. s. [from perceive.] One who perceives or observes,

Which estimation they have gained among weak perceivers. Milton, Tetrachordon.

PERCEI'VANCE.✱ n. s. [from perceive.] Power of perceiving.

The senses, and common perceivance, might carry this message to the soul within, that it is neither easeful, profitable, nor praiseworthy, in this life to do evil. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

Hast thou any perceivance of these things, and do they make any impression upon thy mind? Transl. of Boetius, Oxf. (1674,) p. 13.

To PERCEI'VE. v. a. [percipio, Lat.]

PERCE'PTIBLE.✝ adj. [perceptible, Fr. perceptus, Latin.]

1. Such as may be known or observed.

No sound is produced but with a perceptible blast of the air, and with some resistance of the air strucken. Bacon.

When I think, remember or abstract; these intrinsick operations of my mind are not perceptible by my sight, hearing, taste, smell, or feeling. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

It perceives them immediately, as being immediately objected to and perceptible to the sense; as I perceive the sun by my sight. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

In the anatomy of the mind, as of the body, more good will accrue to mankind by attending to the large, open and perceptible parts, than by studying too much finer nerves. Pope.

2. Capable of perception.

The soul, when separated from the body, becomes more perceptible of happiness or misery. Bp. Greene, Four Last Things, p. 6.

PERCE'PTIBLY. adv. [from perceptible.] In such a manner as may be perceived.

The woman decays perceptibly every week. Pope.

PERCE'PTION. n. s. [perception, Fr. perceptio, Lat.]

1. The power of perceiving; knowledge; consciousness.

Matter hath no life nor perception, and is not conscious of its own existence. Bentley, Serm.

Perception is that act of the mind, or rather a passion or impression, whereby the mind becomes conscious of any thing; as when I feel hunger, thirst, cold, or heat. Watts.

2. The act of perceiving; observation.

3. Notion; idea.

By the inventors, and their followers that would seem not to come too short of the perceptions of the leaders, they are magnified. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

4. The state of being affected by something.

Great mountains have a perception of the disposition of the air to tempests sooner than the vallies below; and therefore they say in Wales, when certain hills have their night caps on, they mean mischief. Bacon.

This experiment discovereth perception in plants to move towards that which should comfort them, though at a distance. Bacon.

PERCE'PTIVE. adj. [perceptus, Lat.] Having the power of perceiving.

There is a difficulty that pincheth: the soul is awake and sollicited by external motions, for some of them reach the perceptive region in the most silent repose and obscurity of night: what is it then that prevents our sensations? Glanville.

Whatever the least real point of the essence of the perceptive part of the soul does perceive, every real point of the perceptive must perceive at once. More, Div. Dialogues.

Percepti'vity. † n. s. [from perceptive.] The power of perception or thinking. Locke.

When the body is quite wearied out, consciousness and perceptivity do not leave the soul. A. Baxter on the Soul, (1737,) i. 352.

Although there be the difference of life and perceptivity between the animal and the plant, it is a difference which enters not into the account. Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 4. § 2.

Perch. n. s. [perca, Lat. perche, Fr. πέρκη, Gr. from πέρκος, tacheté de noir. Morin.] See Pearch.

A fish of prey, that, like the pike and trout, carries his teeth in his mouth, he dare venture to kill and destroy several other kinds of fish: he has a hooked or hog back, which is armed with stiff bristles, and all his skin armed with thick hard scales, and hath two fins on his back: he spawns but once a year, and is held very nutritive. Walton, Angler.

PERCH. n. s.

To weather him and his moist wings to dry. Spenser.

The world is grown so bad,
That wrens make prey, where eagles dare not perch. Shakspeare.

The morning muses perch like birds, and sing
Among his branches. Crashaw.

Let owls keep close within the tree, and not perch upon the upper boughs. South.

They wing'd their flight aloft, then stooping low,
Perch'd on the double tree, that bears the golden bough. Dryden.

Glory like the dazzling eagle stood
Perch'd on my beaver: in the Granick flood,
When Fortune's self my standard trembling bore,
And the pale fates stood frighted on the shore. Lee.

Hosts of birds that wing the liquid air,
Perch'd in the boughs, had nightly lodging there. Dryden.

To Perch. v. a. To place on a perch.

It would be notoriously perceptible, if you could perch yourself as a bird on the top of some high steeple. More.

As evening dragon came,
Assailant on the perched roosts,
And nests in order rang'd
Of tame villatick fowl. Milton, S. A.

Percha'nce. adv. [per and chance.] Perhaps; peradventure.

How long within this wood intend you stay? —
— Perchance till after Theseus' wedding day. Shakspeare.

Finding him by nature little studious, she chose rather to endue him with ornaments of youth; as dancing and fencing, not without aim then perchance at a courtier's life Wotton.

Only Smithfield ballad perchance to embalm the memory of the other. L'Estrange.

Pe'rchers. n. s. Paris candles used in England in ancient times; also the larger sort of wax candles, which were usually set upon the altars. Bailey.

Perci'pient. adj. [percipiens, Lat.] Perceiving; having the power of perception.

No article of religion hath credibility enough for them; yet these cautious and quicksighted gentlemen can wink and swallow this sottish opinion about percipient atoms. Bentley.

Sensation and perception are not inherent in matter as such; for if it were so, every stock or stone would be a percipient and rational creature. Bentley.

Perci'pient. n. s. One that has the power of perceiving.

The soul is the sole percipient, which hath animadversion and sense properly so called, and the body is only the receiver of corporeal impressions. Glanville, Scepsis.

Nothing in the extended percipient perceives the whole, but only part. More, Div. Dialogues.

Perclo'se. n. s. [per and close.] Conclusion; last part. Obsolete.

Experiments touching the straining and passing of bodies one through another, they call percolation. Bacon.

Water passing through the veins of the earth is rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filtre. Ray on the Creation.

To PERCU'SS. † v. a. [percussus, Lat.] To strike.

Flame percussed by air giveth a noise; as in blowing of the fire by bellows; and so likewise flame percussing the air strongly. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

We do love to cherish lofty spirits,
Such as percuss the earth, and bound
With an erected countenance to the clouds. Beaum. and Fl. Laws of Candy.

Percu'ssion. n. s. [percussio, Lat. percussion, Fr.]

1. The act of striking; stroke.

With thy grim looks, and
The thunder-like percussion of thy sounds,
Thou mad'st thine enemies shake. Shakspeare.

The percussion of the greater quantity of air is produced by the greatness of the body percussing. Bacon.

Some note, that the times when the stroke or percussion of an envious eye doth most hurt are, when the party envied is beheld in glory. Bacon, Ess.

The vibrations or tremors excited in the air by percussion, continue a little time to move from the place of percussion in concentric spheres to great distances. Newton, Opt.

Marbles taught him percussion and the laws of motion, and tops the centrifugal motion. Arbuthnot and Pope.

2. Effect of sound in the ear.

In double rhymes the percussion is stronger. Rymer.

Percu'tient. n. s. [percutiens, Lat.] Striking; having the power to strike.

Inequality of sounds is accidental, either from the roughness or obliquity of the passage, or from the doubling of the percutient. Bacon.

Perdi'tion. n. s. [perditio, Lat. perdition, Fr.]

1. Destruction; ruin; death.

Upon tidings now arrived, importing the meer perdition of the Turkish fleet, every man puts himself in triumph. Shakspeare.

We took ourselves for free men, seeing there was no danger of our utter perdition, and lived most joyfully; going abroad, and seeing what was to be seen. Bacon.

Quick let us part! Perdition's in thy presence,
And horror dwells about thee! Addison, Cato.

2. Loss.

There's no soul lost,
Nay not so much perdition as an hair
Betid to any creature in the vessel —
Which thou saw'st sink. Shakspeare, Tempest.

3. Eternal death.

As life and death, mercy and wrath, are matters of knowledge, all men's salvation and some men's endless perdition are things so opposite, that whoever doth affirm the one, must necessarily deny the other. Hooker.

Men once fallen away from undoubted truth, do after wander for ever more in vices unknown, and daily travel towards their eternal perdition. Ralegh, Hist.

PE'RDU.† adv. [This word comes from the French perdu, or forlorn hope, enfans perdu, advanced centinel. It is used also as a substantive and adjective. The accent is indifferently on either syllable.] Close; in ambush.

Few minutes he had laid in perdue,
To guard his desp'rate avenue. Hudibras.

If a man is always upon his guard, and (as it were) stands perdu at his heart. South, Serm. vi. 455.

If God keep not the house and the city, in vain the builder builds, and the watchman wakes, and the centinel stands perdu. Abp. Sancroft, Serm. p. 84.

PE'RDU.* n. s. One who is placed in ambush, or on the watch.

Was this a face
To be expos'd against the warring winds?
——— to watch, poor perdu!
With this thin helm? Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Another night would tire a perdu,
More than a wet furrow, or a great frost.
Davenant, Love and Honour.

PE'RDU.* adj. Employed on desperate purposes; accustomed to desperate purposes.

A perdue captain,
Full of my father's danger. Beaum. and Fl. Loy. Subject.

PE'RDULOUS. adj. [from perdo, Lat.] Lost; thrown away.

There may be some wandering perdulous wishes of known impossibilities; as a man who hath committed an offence, may wish he had not committed it: but to chuse efficaciously and impossibly, is as impossible as an impossibility.
Bramhall against Hobbes.

PE'RDURABLE. adj. [perdurable, Fr. perduro, Lat.] Lasting; long continued. A word not in use, nor accented according to analogy.

Confess me knit to thy deserving with cables of perdurable toughness. Shakspeare, Othello.

O perdurable shame; let's stab ourselves. Shakspeare.

The vigorous sweat
Doth lend the lively springs their perdurable heat. Drayton.

PE'RDURABLY. adv. [from perdurable.] Lastingly.

Why would he for the momentary trick,
Be perdurably fin'd? Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

PERDURA'TION. n. s. [perduro, Latin.] Long continuance. Ainsworth.

PE'RDY.* adv. [a corruption of the Fr. oath par Dieu.] A term of asseveration, frequent in our ancient poetry; certainly; verily; in truth. Obsolete.

That redcrosse knight, perdie, I never slew. Spenser, F. Q.

Perdy, your doors were lock'd, and you shut out.
Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

PE'REGAL. adj. [French.] Equal. Obsolete.

Whilom thou wast peregal to the best,
And wont to make the jolly shepherds glad;
With piping and dancing didst pass the rest. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

To PE'REGRINATE. v. n. [peregrinus, Lat.] To travel; to live in foreign countries. Dict.

PEREGRINA'TION.† n. s. [peregrination, old French.] Travel; abode in foreign countries.

It was agreed between them, what account he should give of his peregrination abroad. Bacon, Hen. VII.

It is not amiss to observe the heads of doctrine, which the apostles agreed to publish in all their peregrinations. Hammond.

That we do not contend to have the earth pass for a paradise, we reckon it only as the land of our peregrination, and aspire after a better country. Bentley.

PE'REGRINATOR.* n. s. [from peregrinate.] A traveller.

He makes himself a great peregrinator, to satisfy his curiosity, or improve his knowledge in natural things.
Casaubon on Credulity, p. 66.

PE'REGRINE.† adj. [peregrin, old Fr. peregrinus, Lat.] Foreign; not native; not domestick.

A faucon peregrine seemed she. Chaucer, Squ. Tale.

The received opinion, that putrefaction is caused by cold or peregrine and preternatural heat, is but nugation.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

PEREGRI'NITY.* n. s. [peregrinité, old Fr.] Strangeness. Mr. Boswell says, that Dr. Johnson coined this word; and, upon being asked if it was an English one, he replied no. See his Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides. It is, however, an old English word; and, being inserted in the vocabulary of Cockeram, early in the seventeenth century, may be presumed to have been in use; but it is not worthy to be revived.

These people, sir, that Gerrard talks of, may have somewhat of a peregrinity in their dialect, which relation has augmented to a different language!
Johnson in Boswell's Tour, 2d edit. p. 140.

To PERE'MPT. v. a. [peremptus, Lat.] To kill; to crush. A law term.

Nor is it any objection, that the cause of appeal is perempted by the desertion of an appeal; because the office of the judge continues after such instance is perempted. Ayliffe.

PERE'MPTION. n. s. [peremptio, Lat. peremption, Fr.] Crush; extinction. Law term.

This peremption of instance was introduced in favour of the publick, lest suits should be rendered perpetual. Ayliffe.

PE'REMPTORILY. adv. [from peremptory.] Absolutely; positively; so as to cut off all farther debate.

Norfolk denies them peremptorily. Daniel.

Not to speak peremptorily or conclusively, touching the point of possibility, till they have heard me deduce the means of the execution. Bacon, Holy War.

Some organs are so peremptorily necessary, that the extinguishment of the spirits doth speedily follow, but yet so as there is an interim. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In all conferences it was insisted peremptorily, that the king must yield to what power was required. Clarendon.

God's laws peremptorily injoin us, and the things therein implied do strictly oblige us to partake of the holy sacrament.
Kettlewell.

Some talk of letters before the deluge; but that is a matter of mere conjecture, and nothing can be peremptorily determined either the one way or the other. Woodward.

Never judge peremptorily on first appearances.
Richardson, Clarissa.

PE'REMPTORINESS. n. s. [from peremptory.] Positiveness; absolute decision; dogmatism.

Peremptoriness is of two sorts; the one a magisterialness in matters of opinion; the other a positiveness in relating matters of fact. Gov. of the Tongue.

Self-conceit and peremptoriness in a man's own opinion are not commonly reputed vices. Tillotson.

PE'REMPTORY. adj. [peremptorius, low Latin; peremptoire, Fr. from peremptus, killed.] Dogmatical: absolute; such as destroys all further expostulation.

If I entertaine
As peremptorie a desire, to levell with the plaine
A citie, where they loved to live; stand not betwixt my ire
And what it aimes at. Chapman.

As touching the apostle, wherein he was so resolute and peremptory, our Lord Jesus Christ made manifest unto him, even by intuitive revelation, wherein there was no possibility of errour. Hooker.

He may have fifty-six exceptions peremptory against the jurors; of which he shall shew no cause. Spenser.

To-morrow be in readiness to go;
Excuse it not for I am peremptory. Shakspeare.

Not death himself
In mortal fury is half so peremptory,
As we to keep this city. Shakspeare, K. John.

Though the text and the doctrine run peremptory and absolute, whosoever denies Christ shall assuredly be denied by him; yet still there is a tacit condition, unless repentance intervene. South.

The more modest confess, that learning was to give us a fuller discovery of our ignorance, and to keep us from being peremptory and dogmatical in our determinations. Collier.

He would never talk in such a peremptory and discouraging manner, were he not assured that he was able to subdue the most powerful opposition against the doctrine which he taught. Addison on the Chr. Religion.

PERE'NNIAL.† adj. [perennel, old French; perennis, Lat.]

1. Lasting through the year.

If the quantity were precisely the same in these perennial fountains, the difficulty would be greater. Cheyne.

2. Perpetual; unceasing.

The matter wherewith these perennial clouds are raised, is the sea that surrounds them. Harvey.

PERE'NNIAL.* n. s. [In botany.] A plant, of which the roots will endure many years.

PERE'NNITY.† n. s. [perennité, old Fr. from perennitas, Lat.] Equality of lasting through all seasons; perpetuity.

That springs have their origin from the sea, and not from rains and vapours, I conclude from the perennity of divers springs. Derham, Phys. Theol.

PERERRA'TION.* n. s. [pererratus, Lat.] Travel; act of rambling through various places.

These may be said to have been carried up and down through many countries; and, after a long pererration to and fro, to return as wise as they went. Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. p. 189.

PE'RFECT.† adj. [perfect, old French; parfait, modern; perfectus, Lat.]

1. Complete; consummate; finished; neither defective nor redundant.

We count those things perfect, which want nothing requisite for the end, whereto they were instituted. Hooker.

Anon they move
In perfect phalanx. Milton, P. L.

Uriel, no wonder if thy perfect sight
See far and wide. Milton, P. L.

Whoever thinks a perfect work to see,
Thinks what ne'er was, nor is, nor e'er shall be. Pope.

As full as perfect in a hair, as heart. Pope.

2. Fully informed; fully skilful.

Within a ken our army lies;
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armour all as strong, our cause the best;
Then reason wills our hearts should be as good. Shakspeare.

Fair dame! I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect. Shakspeare.

I do not take myself to be so perfect in the privileges of Bohemia, as to handle that part; and will not offer at that I cannot master. Bacon.

3. Pure; blameless; clear; immaculate. This is a sense chiefly theological.

My parts, my title, and my perfect soul
Shall manifest me rightly. Shakspeare, Othello.

Thou shalt be perfect with the Lord thy God. Deut. xviii.

4. Confident; certain.

Thou art perfect then, our ship hath touch'd upon
The deserts of Bohemia. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

To PE'RFECT. v. a. [perfectus, from perficio; Latin; parfaire, French.]

1. To finish; to complete; to consummate; to bring to its due state.

If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us. 1 John, iv. 12.

Beauty now must perfect my renown;
With that I govern'd him that rules this isle. Waller.

In substances rest not in the ordinary complex idea commonly received, but enquire into the nature and properties of the things themselves, and thereby perfect our ideas of their distinct species. Locke.

Endeavour not to settle too many habits at once, lest by variety you confound them, and so perfect none. Locke.

What toil did honest Curio take
To get one medal wanting yet,
And perfect all his Roman set? Prior.

2. To make skilful; to instruct fully.

Her cause and yours
I'll perfect him withal, and he shall bring you
Before the duke. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

PE'RFECTER.† n. s. [from perfect.] One that makes perfect.

Looking up unto Jesus, the Captain and Perfecter of our faith. Barrow, vol. ii. S. 31.

The person, whose condition marked her out as the defender and perfecter of our reformation. Burnet, Hist. of his own Times, in 1694.

This practice was altered; they offered not to Mercury, but to Jupiter the perfecter. Broome, on the Odyssey.

PERFE'CTION, n. s. [perfectio, Lat. perfection, Fr.]

1. The state of being perfect.

Man doth seek a triple perfection; first a sensual, consisting in those things which very life itself requireth, either as necessary supplements or as ornaments thereof; then an intellectual, consisting in those things which none underneath man is capable of; lastly, a spiritual and divine, consisting in those things whereunto we tend by supernatural means here, but cannot here attain. Hooker.

It is a judgement maim'd and most imperfect,
That will confess perfection so could err
Against all rules of nature. Shakspeare, Othello.

True virtue being united to the heavenly grace of faith makes up the highest perfection. Milton on Education.

No human understanding being absolutely secured from mistake by the perfection of its own nature, it follows that no man can be infallible but by supernatural assistance. Tillotson.

Many things impossible to thought,
Have been by need to full perfection brought. Dryden.

Too few, or of an improper figure and dimension to do their duty in perfection. Blackmore.

The question is not, whether gospel perfection can be fully attained; but whether you come as near it as a sincere intention, and careful diligence can carry you. Law.

2. Something that concurs to produce supreme excellence. In this sense it has a plural.

What tongue can her perfections tell,
In whose each part all pens may dwell? Sidney.

An heroick poem requires, as its last perfection, the accomplishment of some extraordinary undertaking, which requires more of the active virtue than the suffering. Dryden.

3. Attribute of God.

If God be infinitely holy, just, and good, he must take delight in those creatures that resemble him most in these perfections. Atterbury.

4. Exact resemblance.

PERFE'CTIONAL.* adj. [from perfection.] Made complete.

Now this life eternal may be looked upon under three considerations; as initial, as partial, and as perfectional. — I call that perfectional, which shall be conferred upon the elect immediately after the blessing pronounced by Christ, "Come, ye blessed children of my Father, receive the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 12.

To PERFE'CTIONATE.† v. a. [perfectionner, Fr. from perfection.] To make perfect; to advance to perfection. A word proposed by Dryden, but not received nor worthy of reception. Dr. Johnson.—Dryden most probably adopted it from Butler, who uses it in his Remains; and I think I have seen this unworthy word in employment long before the time of Butler.

Painters and sculptors, chusing the most elegant natural beauties, perfectionate the idea, and advance their art above nature itself in her individual productions; the utmost mastery of human performance. Dryden.

He has founded an academy for the progress and perfectionating of painting. Dryden.

PERFE'CTIONIST.* n. s. [from perfection.] One pretending to extreme perfection; a puritan.

Amongst the most seraphical illuminati, and the highest puritan perfectionists, you shall find people of fifty, threescore, and fourscore years old, not able to give that account of their faith, which you might have had heretofore from a boy of nine or ten. South, Serm. v. 35.

PERFE'CTIVE. adj. [from perfect.] Conducing to bring to perfection: with of.

Praise and adoration are actions perfective of our souls. Mortimer.

Eternal life shall not consist in endless love; the other faculties shall be employed in actions suitable to, and perfective of their natures. Ray on the Creation.

PERFE'CTIVELY. adv. [from perfective.] In such a manner as brings to perfection.

As virtue is seated fundamentally in the intellect, so perfectively in the fancy; so that virtue is the force of reason in the conduct of our actions and passions to a good end. Grew.

PE'RFECTLY. adv. [from perfect.]

1. In the highest degree of excellence.
2. Totally; completely.

Chawing little sponges dipt in oil, when perfectly under water, he could longer support the want of respiration. Boyle.

Words recal to our thoughts those ideas only which they have been wont to be signs of, but cannot introduce any perfectly new and unknown simple ideas. Locke.

3. Exactly; accurately.

We know bodies and their properties most perfectly. Locke.

PE'RFECTNESS.† n. s. [from perfect.]

1. Completeness; consummate excellence; perfection.

How then can mortal tongue hope to express
The image of such endless perfectness! Spenser, Hymns.
The greatest aim of perfectness men liv'd by.
Beaum. and Fl. Valentinian.
Use makes perfectness. Beaum. and Fl. Kn. Burn. Pestle.

2. Goodness; virtue. A scriptural word.

Put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness. Col. iii. 14.

3. Skill.

Is this your perfectness? Shakspeare.

PERFI'DIOUS.† adj. [perfidus, Lat. perfide, Fr. Dr. Johnson has chosen to exemplify the first sense of this word only in three ridiculous lines from the Widow and Cat. More suitable exemplifications of this impressive meaning are now given from the writings of Shakspeare, and of Milton, and of Hall.]

1. Treacherous; false to trust; guilty of violated faith.

A most perfidious slave,
With all the spots o' the world tax'd and debosh'd.
Shakspeare, All's Well.

That a brother should
Be so perfidious! Shakspeare, Tempest.
That fatal and perfidious bark. Milton, Lycidas.
With perfidious hatred they pursued
The sojourners of Goshen. Milton, P. L.

To be perfidious is nothing, so he may be secret: his Master knows him [Judas] for a traitor. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

2. Expressing treachery; proceeding from treachery.

O spirit accurs'd
Forsaken of all good, I see thy fall
Determin'd, and thy hapless crew involv'd
In this perfidious fraud. Milton, P. L.

PERFI'DIOUSLY. adv. [from perfidious.] Treacherously; by breach of faith.

Perfidiously
He has betray'd your business, and given up
For certain drops of salt, your city Rome. Shakspeare.
They eat perfidiously their words,
And swear their ears through two inch boards. Hudibras.

Can he not deliver us possession of such places as would put him in a worse condition, whenever he should perfidiously renew the war. Swift, Miscell.

PERFI'DIOUSNESS. n. s. [from perfidious.] The quality of being perfidious.

Some things have a natural deformity in them; as perjury, perfidiousness, and ingratitude. Tillotson.

PE'RFIDY.† n. s. [perfidia, Latin; perfidie, French.] Treachery; want of faith; breach of faith.

Whatever poets may write — of rural innocence and truth, and of the perfidy of courts, this is undoubtedly true; that shepherds and ministers are both men; their nature and passions the same, the modes of them only different.
Ld. Chesterfield.

The magician Merlin intended to build a wall of brass about Carmardin; but being hastily called away by the Lady of the Lake, and slain by her perfidy, he left his friends still at work on this mighty structure. Warton, Observ. on Spenser.

Whilst the sanction of Swift could support his lordship's [Orrery's] ill founded claims to genius, boundless was the respect which he professed to entertain for his literary patron; but when the venerable pile was mouldering in the dust, the right honourable biographer erected on the ruins a temple to Perfidy: and though he had not even the courage of the ass to insult the dying lion, yet, monster-like, he preyed upon the carcass. M. Berkeley, Literary Relics, p. xvi.

PE'RFLABLE. adj. [from perflo, Lat.] Having the wind driven through.

To PE'RFLATE. v. a. [perflo, Lat.] To blow through.

If eastern winds did perflate our climates more frequently, they would clarify and refresh our air. Harvey.

The first consideration in building of cities, is to make them open, airy, and well perflated. Arbuthnot on Air.

PERFLA'TION. n. s. [from perflate.] The act of blowing through.

Miners, by perflations with large bellows, give motion to the air, which ventilates and cools the mines. Woodward.

To PE'RFORATE. v. a. [perforo, Lat.] To pierce with a tool; to bore.

Draw the bough of a low fruit tree newly budded without twisting, into an earthen pot perforate at the bottom, and then cover the pot with earth, it will yield a very large fruit.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A perforated bladder does not swell. Boyle.
The labour'd chyle prevades the pores,
In all the arterial perforated shores. Blackmore.

The aperture was limited by an opaque circle placed between the eye-glass and the eye, and perforated in the middle with a little round hole for the rays to pass through to the eye.
Newton, Opt.

Worms perforate the guts. Arbuthnot on Diet.

PERFORA'TION. n. s. [from perforate.]

1. The act of piercing or boring.

The likeliest way is the perforation of the body of the tree in several places one above another, and the filling of the holes. Bacon.

The industrious perforation of the tendons of the second joints of fingers and toes, and the drawing the tendons of the third joints through them. More, Div. Dialogues.

2. Hole; place bored.

That the nipples should be made spongy, and with such perforations as to admit passage to the milk, are arguments of providence. Ray on the Creation.

PE'RFORATIVE.* adj. [from perforate.] Having power to pierce: applied to the chirurgical instrument, called a trepan.

PE'RFORATOR. n. s. [from perforate.] The instrument of boring.

The patient placed in a convenient chair, dipping the trocar in oil, stab it suddenly through the teguments, and withdrawing the perforator, leave the waters to empty by the canula. Sharp, Surgery.

PERFO'RCE.† adv. [per and force.]

1. By violence; violently.

Guyon, to him leaping, staid
His hand, that trembled as one terrify'd;
And though himself were at the sight dismay'd,
Yet him perforce restrain'd. Spenser, F. Q.

Jealous Oberon would have the child,
But she perforce withholds the loved boy. Shakspeare, M. N. Dream.

She amaz'd, her cheeks
All trembling, and arising, full of spots,
And pale with death at hand, perforce she breaks
Into the inmost rooms. Peacham on Poetry.

2. Of necessity.

So forth he far'd, as now befell, on foot,
Sith his good steed is lately from him gone;
Patience perforce! Spenser, F. Q.

Patience perforce is a medicine for a mad dog. Ray, Proverbs.

To PERFO'RM. v. a. [performare, Italian.] To execute; to do; to discharge; to atchieve an undertaking; to accomplish.

All three set among the foremost ranks of fame for great minds to attempt, and great force to perform what they did attempt. Sidney.

To PERFO'RM. v. n. To succeed in an attempt.

When a poet has performed admirably in several illustrious places, we sometimes also admire his very errours. Watts.

PERFO'RMABLE. adj. [from perform.] Practicable; such as may be done.

Men forget the relations of history, affirming that elephants have no joints, whereas their actions are not performable without them. Brown, Vulg. Err.

PERFO'RMANCE. n. s. [from perform.]

1. Completion of something designed; execution of something promised.

His promises were, as he then was, mighty;
But his performance, as he now is, nothing. Shakspeare.

Promising is the very air o' th' time; it opens the eyes of expectation: performance is ever the duller for his act, and but in the plainer kind of people the deed is quite out of use. Shakspeare, Timon.

Perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance. 2 Cor. viii. 11.

The only means to make him successful in the performance of these great works, was to be above contempt. South.

Men may, and must differ in their employments; but yet they must all act for the same ends, as dutiful servants of God, in the right and pious performance of their several callings. Law.

2. Composition; work.

In the good poems of other men, I can only be sure, that 'tis the hand of a good master; but in your performances 'tis scarcely possible for me to be deceived. Dryden.

Few of our comic performances give good examples. Richardson, Clarissa.

3. Action; something done.

In this slumbry agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances, what have you heard her say? Shakspeare.

PERFU'MATORY.† adj. [from perfume.] That perfumes.

A perfumatory or incense altar. Leigh, Crit. Sacra, (1650,) p. 214.

PERFU'ME.† n. s. [parfum, Fr. Both the substantive and verb are sometimes, though rarely, accented on the first syllable.]

1. Strong odour of sweetness used to give scents to other things.

Pomanders and knots of powders for drying rheums are not so strong as perfumes; you may have them continually in your hand, whereas perfumes you can take but at times. Bacon.

Perfumes, though gross bodies that may be sensibly wasted, yet fill the air, so that we can put our nose in no part of the room where a perfume is burned, but we smell it. Digby.

2. Sweet odour; fragrance.

And in some perfumes is there more delight. Shakspeare, Sonnet.

Even the rough rocks with tender myrtle bloom,
And trodden weeds send out a rich perfume. Addison.

No rich perfumes refresh the fruitful field,
Nor fragrant herbs their native incense yield. Pope.

Pinks and roses bloom,
And every bramble sheds perfume. Gay.

To PERFU'ME. v. a. [from the noun.] To scent; to impregnate with sweet scent.

Your papers
Let me have them very well perfum'd,
For she is sweeter than perfume itself
To whom they go. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,
And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber,
Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
Under the canopies of costly state,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody? Shakspeare.

Then will I raise aloft the milk-white rose,
With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfum'd. Shakspeare.

The distilled water of wild poppy, mingled at half with rose water, take with some mixture of a few cloves in a perfuming pan. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Smells adhere to hard bodies; as in perfuming of gloves, which sheweth them corporeal. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The pains she takes are vainly meant,
To hide her amorous heart,
'Tis like perfuming an ill scent,
The smell's too strong for art. Granville.

See spicy clouds from lowly Sharon rise,
And Carmel's flowery top perfumes the skies! Pope.

PERFU'MER. n. s. [from perfume.] One whose trade is to sell things made to gratify the scent.

A moss the perfumers have out of apple trees, that hath an excellent scent. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

First issued from perfumers' shops
A croud of fashionable fops. Swift.

PERFU'NCTORILY. adv. [from perfunctory.] Carelessly; negligently; in such a manner as to satisfy external form.

His majesty casting his eye perfunctorily upon it, and believing it had been drawn by mature advice, no sooner received it, than he delivered it to the lord keeper. Clarendon.

Lay seriously to heart the clearness and evidence of these proofs, and not perfunctorily pass over all the passages of the gospel, which are written on purpose that we may believe, without weighing them. Lucas.

Whereas all logic is reducible to the four principal operations of the mind, the two first of these have been handled by Aristotle very perfunctorily; of the fourth he has said nothing at all. Baker on Learning.

PERFU'NCTORINESS.* n. s. [from perfunctory.] Negligence; carelessness.

Nothing more frequent than comparative openings of one another; their deserts, with the nimble perfunctoriness of some commentators that skip over hard places; but their faults, infirmities, or miscarriages, with descants no less tedious than malicious. Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. p. 454.

PERFU'NCTORY.† adj. [perfunctorius, Latin.] Slight; careless; negligent.

It was discerned, indeed, that the king's meaning was, after some ceremonies and perfunctory insisting thereupon, to grow apart to a peace with the French, excluding her majesty. Bacon, Obs. on a Libel, in 1592.

I have run over the citations here out of Taylor, and find scarce one of those difficulties so peculiar to Scripture, as not to be common to other authors: to know which with exactness, as becomes every writer, especially a declared adversary to a whole order professing learning, is no easy and perfunctory matter; as our author to his shame and sorrow may hereafter find and feel. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 29.

A transient and perfunctory examination of things leads men into considerable mistakes, which a more correct and rigorous scrutiny would have detected. Woodward.

To PERFU'SE. v. a. [perfusus, Lat.] To tincture; to overspread.

These dregs immediately perfuse the blood with melancholy, and cause obstructions. Harvey on Consumptions.

*PERGOLA. n. s. [Italian.] A kind of arbour; a covering with boughs.

He was ordained his standing in the pergola of the banqueting-house, on the left hand of that appointed for his majesty and the queen, with carpets to lean and tread on. Finett, Obs. on Ambassadors, (1656,) p. 210.

PERHA'PS. adv. [per and hap.] Peradventure; it may be.

Perhaps the good old man that kiss'd his son,
And left a blessing on his head,
His arms about him spread,
Hopes yet to see him ere his glass be run. Flatman.

Somewhat excellent may be invented, perhaps more excellent than the first design, though Virgil must be still excepted, when that perhaps takes place. Dryden.

His thoughts inspir'd his tongue,
And all his soul receiv'd a real love,
Perhaps new graces darted from her eyes,
Perhaps soft pity charm'd his yielding soul,
Perhaps her love, perhaps her kingdom charm'd him. Smith.

It is not his intent to live in such ways as, for ought we know, God may perhaps pardon, but to be diligent in such ways, as we know that God will infallibly reward. Law.

PE'RIAPT.† n. s. [periapte, old French; from περιάπτω, Gr.] Amulet; charm worn as preservative against diseases or mischief. Hanmer.

The regent conquers, and the Frenchmen fly:
Now help, ye charming spells and periapts!
Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

PERICA'RDIUM.† n. s. [περὶ and καρδία; pericarde, French.]

The pericardium is a thin membrane of a conick figure that resembles a purse, and contains the heart in its cavity: its basis is pierced in five places, for the passage of the vessels which enter and come out of the heart: the use of the pericardium is to contain a small quantity of clear water, which is separated by small glands in it, that the surface of the heart may not grow dry by its continual motion. Quincy.

A man may come unto the pericardium, but not the heart, of truth. Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 4.

He desired us first of all to observe the pericardium, or outward case of the heart. Addison, Spect. No. 281.

PERICA'RPIUM. n. s. [περὶ and καρπος; pericarpe, Fr.] In botany, a pellicle or thin membrane encompassing the fruit or grain of a plant, or that part of a fruit that envelops the seed.

Besides this use of the pulp or pericarpium for the guard of the seed, it serves also for the sustenance of animals. Ray.

To PERI'CLITATE.* v. n. [periclitor, Lat. periclitor, Fr.] To hazard. Cockeram.

PERICLITA'TION.† n. s. [from periclitor, Lat. periclitér, Fr.]

1. The state of being in danger. Cockeram.
2. Trial; experiment.

PERICRA'NIUM. n. s. [from περὶ and cranium; pericrane, Fr.]

The pericranium is the membrane that covers the skull: it is a very thin and nervous membrane of an exquisite sense, such as covers immediately not only the cranium, but all the bones of the body, except the teeth, for which reason it is also called the periosteum. Quincy.

Having divided the pericranium, I saw a fissure running the whole length of the wound. Wiseman, Surgery.

PERI'CULOUS. adj. [periculosus, Lat.] Dangerous; jeopardous; hazardous. A word not in use.

As the moon every seventh day arriveth unto a contrary sign, so Saturn, which remaineth about as many years in one sign, and holdeth the same consideration in years as the moon in days, doth cause these periculous periods. Brown.

PERIE'RGY. n. s. [περὶ and ἔργον.] Needless caution in an operation; unnecessary diligence.

PERIGE'E.† } n. s. [περὶ and γῆ; perigée, Fr.] That PERIGE'UM. } point in the heavens, wherein a planet is said to be in its nearest distance possible from the earth. Harris.

The sun in his apogee is distant from the centre of the earth 1550 semidiameters of the earth, but in his perigee 1446. More, Song of the Soul, Notes, p. 379.

By the proportion of its motion, it was at the creation at the beginning of Aries, and the perigeum or nearest point in Libra. Brown, Vulg. Err.

PERIHE'LIUM. n. s. [περὶ and ἥλιος; perihelie, Fr.] That point of a planet's orbit, wherein it is nearest the sun. Harris.

Sir Isaac Newton has made it probable, that the comet which appeared in 1680, by approaching to the sun in its perihelium, acquired such a degree of heat, as to be 50,000 years a cooling. Cheyne, Philos. Prin.

PE'RIL. n. s. [peril, Fr. perikel, Dutch; periculum, Latin.]

1. Danger; hazard; jeopardy.

Dear Pirocles, be liberal unto me of those things, which have made you indeed precious to the world, and now doubt not to tell of your perils. Sidney.

How many perils do infold
The righteous man to make him daily fall. Spenser.

In the act what perils shall we find,
If either place or time, or other course,
Cause us to alter the order now assign'd. Daniel.

The love and pious duty which you pay,
Have pass'd the perils of so hard a way. Dryden.

Strong, healthy, and young people are more in peril by pestilential fevers, than the weak and old. Arbuthnot.

2. Denunciation; danger denounced.

I told her,
On your displeasure's peril,
She should not visit you. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

To PE'RIL.* v. n. [old Fr. periller; "être exposé à un peril." Lacombe.] To be in danger.

From the mixture of any ungenerous and unbeseeming motion, or any soil, wherewith it may peril to stain itself. Milton, Reas, of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

PE'RILOUS.† adj. [perileux, Fr. from peril.]

1. Dangerous; hazardous; full of danger.

Alterations in the service of God, for that they impair the credit of religion, are therefore perilous in common-weals, which have no continuance longer than religion hath all reverence done unto it. Hooker.

'Tis chastity, my brother, chastity;
She that has that is clad in complete steel;
And, like a quiver'd nymph, with arrows keen,
May trace huge forests, and unharbour'd heaths,
Infamous hills, and sandy perilous wilds. Milton, Comus.

Dictate propitious to my duteous ear,
What arts can captivate the changeful seer:
For perilous the assay, unheard the toil,
To elude the prescience of a God by guile. Pope.

2. It is used by way of emphasis, or ludicrous exaggeration of any thing bad.

Thus was the accomplish'd squire endu'd
With gifts and knowledge per'lous shrewd. Hudibras.

3. Smart; witty. In this sense it is, I think, only applied to children, and probably obtained its signification from the notion, that children eminent for wit, do not live; a witty boy was therefore a perilous boy, or a boy in danger. It is vulgarly parlous. Dr. Johnson. — Parlous, which is the same as perlous, in this sense, is surely applied otherwise than to children; and Dr. Johnson had forgotten his own citation from Dryden. See PARLOUS.

'Tis a per'lous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;
He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shakspeare.

PE'RILOUSLY.† adv. [from perilous.] Dangerously.

After a man is sanctified, he receiveth from God another special grace to raise him; even then, when he is most perilously fallen. Professor Benefield, Serm. (1615,) p. 36.

PE'RILOUSNESS. n. s. [from perilous.] Dangerousness.

PERI'METER. n. s. [περὶ and μετρέω; perimetre, Fr.] The compass or sum of all the sides which bound any figure of what kind soever, whether rectilinear or mixed.

By compressing the glasses still more, the diameter of this ring would increase, and the breadth of its orbit or perimeter decrease, until another new colour emerged in the centre of, the last. Newton, Opticks.

PE'RIOD. n. s. [periode, Fr. περίοδος.]

1. A circuit.

2. Time in which any thing is performed, so as to begin again in the same manner.

Tell these, that the sun is fixed in the centre, that the earth with all the planets roll round the sun in their several periods; they cannot admit a syllable of this new doctrine. Watts.

3. A stated number of years; a round of time, at the end of which the things comprised within the calculation shall return to the state in which they were at the beginning.

A cycle or period is an account of years that has a beginning and end, and begins again as often as it ends. Holder on Time.

We style a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period; and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof. Holder on Time.

4. The end or conclusion.

If my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness;
But mine is made the prologue to their play. Shakspeare.

There is nothing so secret that shall not be brought to light within the compass of our world; whatsoever concerns this sublunary world in the whole extent of its duration, from the chaos to the last period. Burnet, Theory.

What anxious moments pass between
The birth of plots and their last fatal periods.
Oh! 'tis a dreadful interval of time. Addison.

5. The state at which any thing terminates.

Beauty's empires, like to greater states,
Have certain periods set, and hidden fates. Suckling.

Light-conserving stones must be set in the sun before they retain light, and the light will appear greater or lesser, until they come to their utmost period. Digby.

6. Length of duration.

Some experiment would be made how by art to make plants more lasting than their ordinary period; as to make a stalk of wheat last a whole year. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

7. A complete sentence from one full stop to another.

Periods are beautiful when they are not too long: for so they have their strength too as in a pike or javelin. B. Jonson.

Is this the confidence
You gave me brother? — Yes, and keep it still;
Lean on it safely, not a period,
Shall be unsaid for me. Milton, Comus.

Syllogism is made use of to discover a fallacy, cunningly wrapt up in a smooth period. Locke.

For the assistance of memories, the first words of every period in every page may be written in distinct colours. Watts.

8. A course of events, or series of things memorably terminated; as the periods of an empire.

From the tongue
The unfinished period falls. Thomson, Spring.

To PE'RIOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To put an end to. A bad word.

Your honourable letter he desires
To those have shut him up; which failing to him,
Periods his comfort. Shakspeare, Timon.

PERIO'DICAL. } adj. [periodique, Fr. from period.]
PERIO'DICK. }

1. Circular; making a circuit; making a revolution.

Was the earth's periodick motion always in the same plane with that of the diurnal, we should miss of those kindly increases of day and night. Derham.

Four moons perpetually roll round the planet Jupiter, and are carried along with him in his periodical circuit round the sun. Watts on the Mind.

2. Happening by revolution at some stated time.

Astrological undertakers would raise men out of some slimy soil, impregnated with the influence of the stars upon some remarkable and periodical conjunctions. Bentley.

3. Regular; performing some action at stated times.

The confusion of mountains and hollows furnished me with a probable reason for those periodical fountains in Switzerland, which flow only at such particular hours of the day. Addison.

4. Relating to periods or revolutions.

It is implicitly denied by Aristotle in his politicks, in that discourse against Plato, who measured the vicissitude and mutation of states by a periodical fatal number. Brown.

PERIO'DICALLY. adv. [from periodical.] At stated periods.

The three tides ought to be understood of the space of the night and day, then there will be a regular flux and reflux thrice in that time every eight hours periodically. Broome.

PERIO'STEUM. n. s. [περὶ and ὀςέον; perioste, Fr.]

All the bones are covered with a very sensible membrane, called the periosteum. Cheyne, Philos. Prin.

PERIPATE'TICAL.* } adj. [περιπατητικὸς, Gr.] Be-PERIPATE'TICK. } longing to the Peripateticks; denoting the Peripateticks. See the substantive.

Aristotle, our great master in the school of nature, would needs persuade us, that to make up a complete happy man, besides the inward virtues of the soul, there is required a measure of the outward benefits both of person and of fortune. But, beloved, those peripatetical discourses, that thus compound an happy man of so many ingredients, are like unto the bills of some deceitful physicians, who, to make the greater ostentation and shew of art, are wont to put in many ingredients, which do neither good nor harm. Hales, Rem. p. 239.

Peregrination may be not improperly called a moving academy, or the true peripatetick school.
Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. p. 8.

With those of the peripatetick school, he allows that ideas are impressed upon the mind from sensible objects.
Norris, Reflect. on Locke, p. 19.

PERIPATE'TICISM.* n. s. [from peripatetick.] The notions of the Peripateticks.

No man will dispute whether that be genuine peripateticism, which is plainly read in the writings of Aristotle.
Barrow, Expos. of the Creed.

PERIPATE'TICK.* n. s. [περιπατητικος, Gr. from περὶ, about, and πατέω, to walk.]

1. One of the followers of Aristotle; so called, because they used to teach and dispute in the Lyceum at Athens, walking about.

Those
Surnam'd Peripateticks, and the sect
Epicurean, and the Stoick severe. Milton, P. R.

2. Ludicrously used for one who is obliged to walk, who cannot afford to ride.

The horses and slaves of the rich take up the whole street, while we peripateticks are very glad to watch an opportunity to whisk cross a passage, very thankful that we are not run over for interrupting the machine that carries in it a person neither more handsome, wise, or valiant than the meanest of us. Tatler, No. 144.

PERI'PHERY.† n. s. [περὶ and φέρω; peripherie, Fr.] Circumference.

The first periferie of all
Engendreth mist, and overmore
The dewes, and the frostes hore. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 7.

Neither is this sole vital faculty sufficient to exterminate noxious humours to the periphery or outward parts. Harvey.

To PE'RIPHRASE. v. a. [periphraser, Fr.] To express one word by many; to express by circumlocution.

PERI'PHRASIS. n. s. [περίφρασις; periphrase, Fr.] Circumlocution; use of many words to express the sense of one: as, for death, we may say, the loss of life.

She contains all bliss,
And makes the world but her periphrasis. Cleaveland.

They make the gates of Thebes and the mouths of this river a constant periphrasis for this number seven. Brown.

They shew their learning uselessly, and make a long periphrasis on every word of the book they explain. Watts.

The periphrases and circumlocutions, by which Homer expresses the single act of dying, have supplied succeeding poets with all their manners of phrasing it. Pope.

PERIPHRA'STICAL. adj. [from periphrasis.] Circumlocutory; expressing the sense of one word in many.

PERIPHRA'STICALLY.* adv. [from periphrastical.] With circumlocution.

Dr. Grainger, — having become sensible that introducing rats in a grave poem, might be liable to banter; could not, however, bring himself to relinquish the idea; for they are thus, in a still more ludicrous manner, periphrastically exhibited in his poem [the Sugar-Cane] as it now stands:
"Nor with less waste the whisker'd vermin race,
"A countless clan, despoil the lowland cane."
Boswell, Life of Johnson.

PE'RIPLUS.* n. s. [περίπλους, Gr. periple, Fr.] A voyage round a certain sea or sea-coast; circumnavigation.

The periplus of the Erythrean sea. Dr. Vincent.

PERIPNEU'MONY. } n. s. [περὶ and πνεύμων; perip-
PERIPNEUMO'NIA. } neumonie, Fr.] An inflammation of the lungs.

Lungs oft imbibing phlegmatick and melancholick humours, are now and then deprehended schirrous, by dissipation of the subtiler parts, and lapidification of the grosser that may be left indurated, through the gross reliques of peripneumonia or inflammation of the lungs. Harvey.

A peripneumony is the last fatal symptom of every disease; for no body dies without a stagnation of the blood in the lungs, which is the total extinction of breath. Arbuthnot.

PERI'SCIAN.* adj. [from periscii, Lat.] Having shadows all around.

In every clime we are in a periscian state; and, with our light, our shadow and darkness walk about us.
Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 11.

*PERISCII. n. s. [Lat. περίσκιοι, of περὶ, about, and σκιὰ, shadow, Gr.] Those who, living within the polar circle, see the sun move round them, and consequently project their shadows in all directions. Dr. Johnson, Note on Sir T. Brown.

To PE'RISH. v. n. [perir, Fr. pereo, Lat.]

1. To die; to be destroyed; to be lost; to come to nothing. It seems to have for or with before a cause, and by before an instrument. Locke has by before the cause.

I burn, I pine, I perish,
If I achieve not this young modest girl. Shakspeare.

If I have seen any perish for want of cloathing, then let mine arm fall from my shoulder-blade. Job, xxxi. 29.

He keepeth back his soul from the pit, and his life from perishing by the sword. Job, xxxiii. 18.

They perish quickly from off the good land. Deut. xi. 17.

I perish with hunger. St. Luke, xv. 17.

The sick, when their case comes to be thought desperate, are carried out and laid on the earth to perish without assistance or pity. Locke.

Characters drawn on dust, that the first breath of wind effaces, are altogether as useful as the thoughts of a soul that perish in thinking. Locke.

Exposing their children, and leaving them in the fields to perish by want, has been the practice. Locke.

Still when the lust of tyrant pow'r succeeds,
Some Athens perishes, or some Tully bleeds. Pope.

In the Iliad, the anger of Achilles had caused the death of so many Grecians; and in the Odyssey, the subjects perished through their own fault. Pope.

2. To be in a perpetual state of decay.

Duration, and time which is a part of it, is the idea we have of perishing distance, of which no two parts exist together, but follow in succession; as expansion is the idea of lasting distance, all whose parts exist together. Locke.

3. To be lost eternally.

These, as natural brute beasts made to be destroyed, speak evil of the things they understand not, and shall utterly perish. 2 Peter, ii. 12.

O suffer me not to perish in my sins, Lord carest thou not that I perish, who wilt that all should be saved, and that none should perish. Bp. Moreton, Daily Exercise.

To PE'RISH.† v. a. To destroy; to decay. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says. Yet surely it is quite common to say of decayed fruit, that "it is perished;" and for a person much affected by cold weather to say, that "he is almost perished by cold."

The splitting rocks cow'r'd in the sinking sands,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides;
Because thy flinty heart, more hard than they,
Might in thy palace perish Margaret.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. II.

His wants
And miseries have perish'd his good face,
And taken off the sweetness that has made
Him pleasing in a woman's understanding.
Beaum. and Fl. Hon. Man's Fortune.

Rise, prepar'd in black, to mourn thy perish'd lord. Dryden.

He was so reserved, that he would impart his secrets to nobody; whereupon this closeness did a little perish his understandings. Collier on Friendship.

Familiar now with grief your ears refrain,
And in the publick woe forget your own,
You weep not for a perish'd lord alone. Pope.

PE'RISHABLE. adj. [from perish.] Liable to perish; subject to decay; of short duration.

We derogate from his eternal power to ascribe to them the same dominion over our immortal souls, which they have over all bodily substances and perishable natures. Raleigh.

To these purposes nothing can so much contribute as medals of undoubted authority, not perishable by time, nor confined to any certain place. Addison.

It is princes greatest present felicity to reign in their subjects hearts; but these are too perishable to preserve their memories, which can only be done by the pens of faithful historians. Swift.

Human nature could not sustain the reflection of having all its schemes and expectations to determine with this frail and perishable composition of flesh and blood. Rogers.

Thrice has he seen the perishable kind
Of men decay. Pope, Odyss.

PE'RISHABLENESS. n. s. [from perishable.] Liableness to be destroyed; liableness to decay.

Suppose an island separate from all commerce, but having nothing because of its commonness and perishableness, fit to supply the place of money; what reason could any have to enlarge possessions beyond the use of his family? Locke.

PERISSO'LOGY.* n. s. [περισσολογια. Gr.] A figure of rhetorick, called also macrology. See MACROLOGY.

PERISTA'LTICK. adj. [περιςέλλω; peristaltique, Fr.]

Peristaltick motion is that vermicular motion of the guts, which is made by the contraction of the spiral fibres, whereby the excrements are pressed downwards and voided. Quincy.

The peristaltick motion of the guts, and the continual expression of the fluids, will not suffer the least matter to be applied to one point the least instant. Arbuthnot.

PERISTE'RION. n. s. * The herb vervain. Dict.

PE'RISTYLE. n. s. [peristile, Fr.] A circular range of pillars.

The Villa Gordiana had a peristyle of two hundred pillars. Arbuthnot on Coins.

PERISY'STOLE. n. s. [περὶ and συςολὴ.] The pause or interval betwixt the two motions of the heart or pulse; namely, that of the systole or contraction of the heart, and that of diastole or dilatation. Dict.

PERI'TE.* adj. [peritus, Latin.] Skilful. Not in use.

A consumption of the whole body — left by the most perite physicians as incurable. Whitaker, Blood of the Grape, (1654.)

PERITONE'UM. n. s. [περιτόναιον; peritoine, Fr.] This lies immediately under the muscles of the lower belly, and is a thin and soft membrane, which encloses all the bowels contained in the lower belly, covering all the inside of its cavity. Dict.

Wounds penetrating into the belly, are such as reach no farther inward than to the peritoneum. Wiseman.

PE'RJURE. n. s. [perjurus, Lat.] A perjured or forsworn person. Not now in use.

Hide thee, thou bloody hand,
Thou perjure, and thou simular of virtue,
That art incestuous. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

To PE'RJURE. v. a. [perjuro, Lat.] To forswear; to taint with perjury. It is used with the reciprocal pronoun: as, he perjured himself.

Who should be trusted now, when the right hand
Is perjur'd to the bosom. Shakspeare.

The law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for perjured persons. 1 Tim. i. 10.

PE'RJURER.† n. s. [from perjure.] One that swears falsely.

The common oath of the Scythians was by the sword and fire; for that they accounted those two special divine powers, which should work vengeance on the perjurers. Spenser.

Nor kiss the book to be a perjurer. Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 5.

They write of a river in Bithynia, whose water hath a peculiar virtue to discover a perjurer; for if he drink thereof, it will presently boil in his stomach, and put him to visible tortures. Howell, Lett. ii. 54.

PERJU'RIOUS.* adj. [from perjury.] Guilty of perjury.

The last [means] was their perfidious and perjurious equivocating, abetted, allowed, and justified by the Jesuits.
Sir E. Coke in the Proceed. against Garnet, (1606.)

Thy perjurious lips confirm not thy untruth.
Quarles, Judg. and Mercy, The Liar.

PE'RJURY. n. s. [perjurium, Lat.] False oath.

My great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,
Cried aloud —— What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence,
And so he vanish'd. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

PE'RIWIG.† n. s. [perruque, Fr. The formation of our word, from the French, is curious; and I am surprized that Dr. Johnson should have taken no notice of it. Late in the sixteenth century, it was written perwicke; as, by T. Churchyard; and in the following, perewake, by Fuller; afterwards it became periwig; and in modern times has sunk into wig!] Adscititious hair; hair not natural, worn by way of ornament or concealment of baldness.

Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow;
If that be all the difference in his love,
I'll get me such a colour'd periwig. Shakspeare.

It offends me to hear a robustious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to split the ears of the groundlings. Shakspeare.

The sun's
Dishevell'd beams and scatter'd fires
Serve but for ladies periwigs and tires
In lovers sonnets. Donne.

Madam Time, be ever bald,
I'll not thy periwig be call'd. Cleaveland.

For vailing of their visages his highness and the marquiss bought each a periwig, somewhat to overshadow their foreheads. Wotton.

They used false hair or periwigs. Arbuthnot on Coins.

From her own head Megara takes
A periwig of twisted snakes. Swift.

To PE'RIWIG.† v. a. [from the noun.] To dress in false hair.

Now when the winter's keener breath began
To crystallize the Baltick ocean,
To glaze the lakes, to bridle up the floods,
And periwig with snow the bald-pate woods.
Sylvester, Du Bartas.

Having by much dress, and secrecy, and dissimulation, as it were periwigged his sin and covered his shame, he looks after no other innocence but concealment. South, Serm. viii. 26.

Near the door an entrance gapes,
Crouded round with antick shapes,
Discord periwgg'd with snakes,
See the dreadful strides she takes. Swift, Miscell.

PE'RIWINKLE. n. s.

1. A small shell fish; a kind of fish snail.

Thetis is represented by a lady of a brownish complexion, her hair dishevelled about her shoulders, upon her head a coronet of periwinkle and escallop shells. Peacham.

2. [Clematis.] A plant.

There are in use, for the prevention of the cramp, bands of green periwinkle tied about the calf of the leg. Bacon.

The common simples with us are comfry, bugle, ladies' mantle, and periwinkle. Wiseman, Surgery.

To PERK.† v. n. [from perch. Skinner. Dr. Johnson. — Skinner is certainly right. The original word is used by Nash in his Lenten Stuffe, 1599. C. 2. "In 1240 it perch'd up to be governed by balies." Probably from a bird's mounting on a perch in his cage. Malone.] To hold up the head with an affected briskness.

Is not this therefore a fit bishop of Pergamus, that perks thus above all kings, and emperours, and princes of the earth? More on the Seven Churches, p. 61.

If, after all, you think it a disgrace,
That Edward's miss thus perks it in your face;
To see a piece of failing flesh and blood,
In all the rest so impudently good;
Faith, let the modest matrons of the town
Come here in crouds, and stare the strumpet down. Pope.

To PERK. v. a. To dress; to prank.

'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glist'ring grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

PERK.† adj. [from the verb.] Pert; brisk; airy. Obsolete, Dr. Johnson says; but, I believe, it is yet in use among the vulgar.

My ragged ronts ——
They wont in the wind wag their wriggle tails,
Perk as a peacock; but now it avails. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

PE'RLOUS. adj. [from perilous.] Dangerous; full of hazard.

A perlous passage lies,
Where many maremaids haunt, making false melodies.
Spenser, F. Q.

Late he far'd
In Phædria's fleet bark over the perlous shard. Spenser, F. Q.

PERLUSTRA'TION.* n. s. [perlustratus, Latin.] The act of viewing all over.

By the perlustration of such famous cities, castles, amphitheatres, and palaces, some glorious and new, some mouldered and eaten away by the iron teeth of time, he may come to discern the best of all earthly things to be but frail and transitory. Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. p. 196.

PE'RMAGY. n. s. A little Turkish boat. Dict.

PE'RMANENCE. }
PE'RMANENCY. } n. s. [from permanent.]

1. Duration; consistency; continuance in the same state; lastingness.

Salt, they say, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variously blended together, but would remain incompacted. Boyle.

Shall I dispute whether there be any such material being that hath such a permanence or fixedness in being. Hale.

From the permanency and immutability of nature hitherto, they argued its permanency and immutability for the future. Burnet, Theory.

2. Continuance in rest.

Such a punctum to our conceptions is almost equivalent to permanency and rest. Bentley.

PE'RMANENT. adj. [permanent, Fr. permanens, Latin.]

1. Durable; not decaying; unchanged.

If the authority of the maker do prove unchangeableness in the laws which God hath made, then must all laws which he hath made be necessarily for ever permanent, though they be but of circumstance only. Hooker.

That eternal duration should be at once, is utterly unconceivable, and that one permanent instant should be commensurate or rather equal to all successions of ages. More.

Pure and unchang'd, and needing no defence
From sins, as did my frailer innocence;
Their joy sincere, and with no more sorrow mixt,
Eternity stands permanent and fixt. Dryden.

2. Of long continuance.

His meaning is, that in these, or such other light injuries, which either leave no permanent effect, or only such as may be born without any great prejudice, we should exercise our patience. Kettlewell.

PE'RMANENTLY. adv. [from permanent.] Durably; lastingly.

It does, like a compact or consistent body, deny to mingle permanently with the contiguous liquor. Boyle.

PERMA'NSION.† n. s. [from permaneo, Lat.] Continuance.

Although we allow that hares may exchange their sex sometimes, yet not in that vicissitude it is presumed; from female unto male, and from male to female again, and so in a circle without a permansion in either. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Bodies of so long permansion. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 11.

PE'RMEABLE. adj. [from permeo, Lat.] Such as may be passed through.

The pores of a bladder are not easily permeable by air. Boyle.

PE'RMEANT. adj. [permeans, Lat.] Passing through.

It entereth not the veins, but taketh leave of the permeant parts at the mouths of the meseraicks. Brown.

To PE'RMEATE. v. a. [permeo, Latin.] To pass through.

This heat evaporates and elevates the water of the abyss, pervading not only the fissures, but the very bodies of the strata, permeating the interstices of the sand, or other matter whereof they consist. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

PERMEA'TION.† n. s. [from permeate.] The act of passing through.

The sensible world is inclosed within the intelligible; but withall I must add, that here is not a mere involution only, but a spiritual permeation. Bp. Hall, Invis. World, B. i. § 2.

PERMI'SCIBLE. adj. [from permisceo, Lat.] Such as may be mingled.

PERMI'SSIBLE. adj. [permissus, Lat.] What may be permitted.

PERMI'SSION. n. s. [permission, Fr. permissus, Lat.] Allowance; grant of liberty.

With thy permission then, and thus forewarn'd,
The willinger I go. Milton, P. L.

You have given me your permission for this address, and encouraged me by your perusal and approbation. Dryden.

PERMI'SSIVE. adj. [from permitto, Lat.]

1. Granting liberty, not favour; not hindering, though not approving.

We bid this be done,
When evil deeds have their permissive pass,
And not the punishment. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.
Hypocrisy, the only evil that walks
Invisible, except to God alone
By his permissive will, through heaven and earth. Milton, P. L.

2. Granted; suffered without hindrance; not authorized or favoured.

If this doth authorise usury, which before was but permissive, it is better to mitigate usury by declaration, than to suffer it to rage by connivance. Bacon, Ess.

Thus I embolden'd spake, and freedom us'd
Permissive, and acceptance found. Milton, P. L.
Clad
With what permissive glory since his fall
Was left him, or false glitter. Milton, P. L.

PERMI'SSIVELY. adv. [from permissive.] By bare allowance; without hindrance.

As to a war for the propagation of the christian faith, I would be glad to hear spoken concerning the lawfulness, not only permissively, but whether it be not obligatory to christian princes to design it. Bacon, Holy War.

PERMI'STION. n. s. [permistus, Latin.] The act of mixing.

To PERMI'T. v. a. [permitto, Lat. permettre, Fr.]

1. To allow without command.

What things God doth neither command nor forbid, the same he permitteth with approbation either to be done or left undone. Hooker.

2. To suffer, without authorizing or approving.

3. To allow; to suffer.

Women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak. 1 Cor. xiv. 34.

Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate
The mystick wonders of your silent state. Dryden.

Age oppresses us by the same degrees that it instructs us, and permits not that our mortal members, which are frozen with our ears, should retain the vigour of our youth. Dryden.

We should not permit an allowed, possible, great and weighty good to slip out of our thoughts, without leaving any relish, any desire of itself there. Locke.

After men have acquired as much as the laws permit them, they have nothing to do but to take care of the publick. Swift.

4. To give up; to resign.

Nor love thy life, nor hate; but what thou liv'st,
Live well; how long or short, permit to heav'n. Milton, P. L.

If the course of truth be permitted unto itself it cannot escape many errours. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To the gods permit the rest. Dryden.

Whate'er can urge ambitious youth to fight,
She pompously displays before their sight;
Laws, empire, all permitted to the sword. Dryden.
Let us not aggravate our sorrows,
But to the gods permit th' event of things. Addison, Cato.

PERMI'T. n. s. A written permission from an officer for transporting of goods from place to place, showing the duty on them to have been paid.

PERMI'TTANCE. n. s. [from permit.] Allowance; forbearance of opposition; permission. A bad word.

When this system of air comes, by divine permittance, to be corrupted by poisonous acrimonious steams, what havock is made in all living creatures? Derham, Phys. Theol.

PERMI'XTION. n. s. [from permistus, Lat.] The act of mingling; the state of being mingled.

They fell into the opposite extremity of one nature in Christ, the divine and human natures in Christ, in their conceits, by permixtion and confusion of substances, and of properties growing into one upon their adunation. Brerewood.

PERMUTA'TION.† n. s. [permutation, Fr. permutatio, Latin.]

1. Exchange of one for another.

If you can, by permutation, make the benefices more compatible. Bacon on the Ch. of England.

A permutation of number is frequent in languages. Bentley.

Gold and silver, by their rarity, are wonderfully fitted for this use of permutation for all sorts of commodities. Ray.

2. [In algebra.] Change, or different combination, of any number of quantities.

Permutation of proportion hath place only in homogeneals. Wallis, Correct. of Hobbes, § 1[illegible].

PERMU'TER.† n. s. [permutant, Fr. from permute.] An exchanger; he who permutes. Huloet.

PERNI'CIOUS. adj. [perniciosus, Lat. pernicieux, French.]

1. Mischievous in the highest degree; destructive.

To remove all out of the church, whereat they shew themselves to be sorrowful, would be, as we are persuaded, hurtful, if not pernicious thereunto. Hooker.

I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your high engender'd battles, 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Let this pernicious hour
Stand ay accursed in the kalendar! Shakspeare.

2. [Pernix, Lat.] Quick. An use which I have found only in Milton, and which, as it produces an ambiguity, ought not to be imitated.

Part incentive reed
Provide, pernicious with one touch to fire. Milton, P. L.

PERNI'CIOUSLY. adv. [from pernicious.] Destructively; mischievously; ruinously.

Some wilful wits wilfully against their own knowledge, perniciously against their own conscience, have taught. Ascham.

All the commons
Hate him perniciously, and wish him
Ten fathom deep. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

PERNI'CIOUSNESS. n. s. [from pernicious.] The quality of being pernicious.

PERNI'CITY. n. s. [from pernix.] Swiftness; celerity.

PERPE'NDER. n. s. [perpigne, Fr.] A coping stone.

PERPE'NDICLE. n. s. [perpendicule, Fr. perpendiculum, Lat.] Any thing hanging down by a strait line. Dict.

PERPENDI'CULAR. adj. [perpendiculaire, Fr. perpendicularis, Latin.]

1. Crossing any other line at right angles. Of two lines, if one be perpendicular, the other is perpendicular too.

If in a line oblique their atoms rove,
Or in a perpendicular they move;
If some advance not slower in their race,
And some more swift, how could they be entangled? Blackmore.

The angle of incidence, is that angle, which the line, described by the incident ray, contains with the perpendicular to the reflecting or refracting surface at the point of incidence. Newton, Opt.

2. Cutting the horizon at right angles.

Some define the perpendicular altitude of the highest mountains to be four miles. Brown, Vulg. Err.

PERPENDI'CULAR.† n. s.

1. A line crossing the horizon at right angles.

Though the quantity of water thus rising and falling be nearly constant as to the whole, yet it varies in the several parts of the globe; by reason that the vapours float in the atmosphere, and are not restored down again in a perpendicular upon the same precise tract of land. Woodward.

2. A level.

Her feet were placed upon a cube, to shew stability; and in her lap she held a perpendicular, or level, as the ensign of evenness and rest. B. Jonson, K. James I. Entertainment.

PERPENDI'CULARLY. adv. [from perpendicular.]

1. In such a manner as to cut another line at right angles.

To PE'RPETRATE. v. a. [perpetro, Lat. perpetrer, French.]

1. To commit; to act. Always in an ill sense.

My tender infants or my careful sire,
These they returning will to death require,
Will perpetrate on them the first design,
And take the forfeit of their heads for mine. Dryden.

The forest, which, in after-times,
Fierce Romulus, for perpetrated crimes,
A sacred refuge made. Dryden.

Hear of such a crime
As tragick poets, since the birth of time,
Ne'er feign'd a thronging audience to amaze;
But true and perpetrated in our days. Tate, Juv.

2. It is used by Butler in a neutral sense, in compliance with his verse, but not properly.

Success, the mark no mortal wit,
Or surest hand can always hit;
For whatsoe'er we perpetrate,
We do but row, we're steer'd by fate. Hudibras.

PERPETRA'TION. n. s. [from perpetrate]

1. The act of committing a crime.

A desperate discontented assassinate would, after the perpetration, have honested a meer private revenge. Wotton.

A woman, who lends an ear to a seducer, may be insensibly drawn into the perpetration of the most violent acts. Richardson, Clarissa.

2. A bad action.

The strokes of divine vengeance, or of men's own consciences, always attend injurious perpetrations. King Charles.

PERPE'TUAL. adj. [perpetuel, Fr. perpetuus, Latin.]

1. Never ceasing; eternal with respect to futurity.

Under the same moral, and therefore under the same perpetual law. Holyday.

Mine is a love, which must perpetual be,
If you can be so just as I am true. Dryden.

2. Continual: uninterrupted; perennial.

Within those banks, where rivers now
Stream, and perpetual draw their humid train. Milton, P. L.

By the muscular motion and perpetual flux of the liquids, a great part of them is thrown out of the body. Arbuthnot.

3. Perpetual screw; a screw which acts against the teeth of a wheel, and continues its action without end.

A perpetual screw hath the motion of a wheel and the force of a screw, being both infinite. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

PERPE'TUALLY. adv. [from perpetual.] Constantly; continually; incessantly.

This verse is every where sounding the very thing in your ears; yet the numbers are perpetually varied, so that the same sounds are never repeated twice. Dryden.

In passing from them to great distances, doth it not grow denser and denser perpetually; and thereby cause the gravity of those great bodies towards one another? Newton, Opt.

The bible and common prayer book in the vulgar tongue, being perpetually read in churches, have proved a kind of standard for language especially to the common people. Swift.

To PERPE'TUATE. v. a. [perpetuer, Fr. perpetuo, Latin.]

1. To make perpetual; to preserve from extinction; to eternize.

Medals, that are at present only mere curiosities, may be of use in the ordinary commerce of life, and at the same time perpetuate the glories of her majesty's reign. Addison.

Man cannot devise any other method so likely to preserve and perpetuate the knowledge and belief of a revelation, so necessary to mankind. Forbes.

2. To continue without cessation or intermission.

What is it, but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, resounding for ever in our ears? to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's importunity, till they awake from their lethargick sleep and arise from so mortiferous a state, and permit him to give them life. Hammond.

PERPETUA'TION.† n. s. [from perpetuate.] The act of making perpetual; incessant continuance.

Nourishing hair upon the moles of the face, is the perpetuation of a very ancient custom. Brown, Vulg. Err.

PERPETU'ITY. n. s. [perpetuité, Fr. perpetuitas, Lat.]

1. Duration to all futurity.

For men to alter those laws, which God for perpetuity hath established, were presumption most intolerable. Hooker.

Yet am I better
Than one that's sick o' the gout, since he had rather
Groan so in perpetuity, than be cur'd
By the sure physician, death. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

Time as long again
Would be fill'd up with our thanks;
And yet we should, for perpetuity,
Go hence in debt. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Nothing wanted to his noble and heroical intentions, but only to give perpetuity to that which was in his time so happily established. Bacon.

There can be no other assurance of the perpetuity of this church, but what we have from him that built it. Pearson.

2. Exemption from intermission or cessation.

A cycle or period begins again as often as it ends, and so obtains a perpetuity. Holder.

What the gospel enjoins is a constant disposition of mind to practise all christian virtues, as often as time and opportunity require; and not a perpetuity of exercise and action; it being impossible, at one and the same time to discharge variety of duties. Nelson.

3. Something of which there is no end.

A mess of pottage for a birth-right, a present repast for a perpetuity. South.

The ennobling property of the pleasure, that accrues to a man from religion, is, that he that has the property, may be also sure of the perpetuity. South.

The laws of God as well as of the land
Abhor a perpetuity should stand;
Estates have wings, and hang in fortune's power. Pope.

To PERPLE'X.† v. a. [perplexus, Latin; from the Greek περιπλέκω, to entangle, to involve.]

1. To disturb with doubtful notions; to entangle; to make anxious; to tease with suspense or ambiguity; to distract; to embarrass; to puzzle.

Although the long dissentions of the two houses had had lucid intervals, yet they did ever hang over the kingdom, ready to break forth into new perturbations and calamities. Bacon.

4. Cause of disquiet.

O polish'd perturbation! golden care!
That keep'st the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night: sleep with it now,
Yet not so sound, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow with homely biggen bound,
Sleeps out the watch of night. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

5. Commotion of passions.

Restore yourselves unto your temper, fathers;
And, without perturbation, hear me speak. B. Jonson

Where nature breeds
Perverse, all monstrous, all prodigious things. Milton, P. L.

2. Obstinate in the wrong; stubborn; untractable.

Thou for the testimony of truth hast born
Universal reproach; far worse to bear
Than violence; for this was all thy care
To stand approv'd in sight of God, though worlds
Judg'd thee perverse. Milton, P. L.

To so perverse a sex all grace is vain,
It gives them courage to offend again. Dryden.

3. Petulant; vexatious; peevish; desirous to cross and vex; cross.

O gentle Romeo,
If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully,
Or if you think I am too quickly won,
I'll frown and be perverse, and say thee nay,
So thou wilt wooe: but else not for the world. Shakspeare.

PERVE'RSELY. adv. [from perverse.] With intent to vex; peevishly; vexatiously; spitefully; crossly; with petty malignity.

Men perversely take up piques and displeasures at others, and then every opinion of the disliked person must partake of his fate. Decay of Chr. Piety.

Men that do not perversely use their words, or on purpose set themselves to cavil, seldom mistake the signification of the names of simple ideas. Locke.

A patriot is a dangerous post,
When wanted by his country most,
Perversely comes in evil times,
Where virtues are imputed crimes. Swift.

PERVE'RSENESS. n. s. [from perverse.]

1. Petulance; peevishness; spiteful crossness.

Virtue hath some perverseness; for she will Neither believe her good, nor others' ill. Donne.

Her whom he wishes most, shall seldom gain
Through her perverseness; but shall see her gain'd
By a far worse. Milton, P. L.

The perverseness of my fate is such,
That he's not mine, because he's mine too much. Dryden.

When a friend in kindness tries
To shew you where your error lies,
Conviction does but more incense;
Perverseness is your whole defence. Swift.

2. Perversion; corruption. Not in use.

Neither can this be meant of evil governours or tyrants; for they are often established as lawful potentates, but of some perverseness and defection in the nation itself. Bacon.

PERVE'RSION. n. s. [perversion, Fr. from perverse.] The act of perverting; change to something worse.

Women to govern men, slaves freemen, are much in the same degree; all being total violations and perversions of the laws of nature and nations. Bacon.

He supposes that whole reverend body are so far from disliking popery, that the hopes of enjoying the abby lands would be an effectual incitement to their perversion. Swift.

PERVE'RSITY. n. s. [perversité, Fr. from perverse.] Perverseness; crossness.

What strange perversity is this of man!
When 'twas a crime to taste th' inlightning tree,
He could not then his hand refrain. Norris.

PE'RVIOUS. adj. [pervius, Lat.]

1. Admitting passage; capable of being permeated.

The Egyptians used to say, that unknown darkness is the first principle of the world; by darkness they mean God, whose secrets are pervious to no eye. Bp. Taylor.

Leda's twins
Conspicuous both, and both in act to throw
Their trembling lances brandish'd at the foe,
Nor had they miss'd; but he to thickets fled,
Conceal'd from aiming spears, not pervious to the steed. Dryden.

Those lodged in other earth, more lax and pervious, decayed in tract of time, and rotted at length. Woodward.

2. Pervading; permeating. This sense is not proper.

What is this little, agile, pervious fire,
This flutt'ring motion which we call the mind? Prior.

PE'RVIOUSNESS. n. s. [from pervious.] Quality of admitting a passage.

The perviousness of our receiver to a body much more subtile than air, proceeded partly from the looser texture of that glass the receiver was made of, and partly from the enormous heat, which opened the pores of the glass. Boyle.

There will be found another difference besides that of perviousness. — Holder, Elem. of Speech.

PE'RVIS.* See PARVIS.

PE'RUKE.† n. s. [perruque, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — Wachter derives this word from the Gr. πύῤῥιχος, (Dor. for πυῤῥὸς,) signifying yellow; the first perukes consisting of hair of this light colour, which was anciently much esteemed.] A cap of false hair; a periwig.

Neither was the use of perruques unknown in those times, as may appear by this of the epigrammatist, [Martial,] "Calvo turpius est nihil comato." Hakewill on Providence, p. 413.

The deformity of their hair is usually supplied by borders and combings; also by whole perukes, like artificial skulls, fitted to their heads. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 44.

The pretence of making people sagacious, and pestilently witty! Echard, Gr. of the Cont. of the Clergy, p. 43.

PESTILLA'TION.† n. s. [from pestle. See PESTLE.] The act of pounding or breaking in a mortar.

The best diamonds are comminuble, and so far from breaking hammers, that they submit unto pestillation, and resist not any ordinary pestle. Brown, Vulg. Err.

PE'STLE.† n. s. [pestail, old French; pistillum, Latin.] An instrument with which any thing is broken in a mortar.

What real alteration can the beating of the pestle make in any body, but of the texture of it. Locke.

Upon our vegetable food the teeth and jaws act as the pestle and mortar. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

PESTLE of Pork.† n. s. A gammon of bacon. A very old expression. Huloet and Barret give it. And the Exmore dialect yet calls a leg of pork by this name.

With shaving you shine like a pestle of porke. Damon and Pythias.

To PE'STLE * v. n. [from the noun.] To use a pestle.

It will be a pestling device: it will pound all your enemy's practices to powder. B. Jonson, Epicoene.

PET.† n. s. [This word is of doubtful etymology; from despit, Fr. or impetus, Lat. or perhaps it may be derived some way from petit, as it implies only a little fume or fret. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius derives it from the Su. Goth. pett, an interjection expressing dislike or contempt. It may be from the Italian petto, the breast, Dr. Jamieson says; to be in a pet, thus signifying to retain something in one's breast. Huloet renders pettish into the Lat. impetuosus; thus seeming to countenance the proposed Lat. etymon, impetus.]

1. A slight passion; a slight fit of peevishness.

If all the world
Should in a pet of temperance feed on pulse,
Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but frieze,
The All-giver would be unthankt, would be unprais'd. Milton, Comus.

If we cannot obtain every vain thing we ask, our next business is to take pet at the refusal. L'Estrange.

Life, given for noble purposes, must not be thrown up in a pet, nor whined away in love. Collier.

They cause the proud their visits to delay,
And send the godly in a pet to pray. Pope.

2. A lamb taken into the house, and brought up by hand; a cade lamb: hence any creature that is fondled and indulged. See PEAT. [probably from petit, little.]

The other has transferred the amorous passions of her first years to the love of cronies, pets, and favourites, with which she is always surrounded. Tatler, No. 266.

To PET. * v. a. [from the noun.] To treat as a pet; to fondle; to indulge. A petted child is a very common phrase in the north of England.

PE'TAL. n. s. [petalum, Lat.]

Petal is a term in botany, signifying those fine coloured leaves that compose the flowers of all plants: whence plants are distinguished into monopetalous, whose flower is one continued leaf; tripetalous, pentapetalous, and polypetalous, when they consist of three, five, or many leaves. Quincy.

PE'TALISM. * n. s. [πεταλισμὸς, Gr. from πέταλον, a leaf; petalisme, Fr.] A form or sentence of banishment among the Syracusans, writing his name, whom they would be rid of, in an olive leaf. Cotgrave.

I wonder why Mr. Harrington — did not mention the petalism of Syracuse as well as the ostracism of Athens, in imitation of which it was invented. Bp. Wren, Monarchy Asserted, (1659,) p. 144.

PE'TALOUS. adj. [from petal.] Having petals.

PE'TAR.
PE'TARD. } n. s. [petard, Fr. petardo, Ital.]

A petard is an engine of metal, almost in the shape of an hat, about seven inches deep, and about five inches over at the mouth; when charged with fine powder well beaten, it is covered with a madrier or plank, bound down fast with ropes, running through handles, which are round the rim near the mouth of it: this petard is applied to gates or barriers of such places as are designed to be surprized, to blow them up: they are also used in countermines to break through into the enemies galleries. Military Dict.

'Tis the sport to have the engineer
Hoist with his own petar. Shakspeare, Hamlet.
Find all his having and his holding,
Reduc'd t' eternal noise and scolding;
The conjugal petard that tears
Down all portcullices of ears. Hudibras.

*PETE'CHIÆ. n. s. [Latin.] In medicine, pestilential spots.

A vast number of the true petechiæ, purple as violets, made their appearance. Fordyce on the Muriat. Acid, p. 13.

PETE'CHIAL. adj. [from petechiæ, Lat.] Pestilentially spotted.

In London are many fevers with buboes and carbuncles, and many petechial or spotted fevers. Arbuthnot.

The peterels, to which sailors have given the name of mother Carey's chickens. Hawkesworth's Voyages.

PE'TER-PENCE.* n. s. A tribute or tax formerly paid by this country to the pope, otherwise called Romescot, viz. a penny for every house, payable at Lammas day. Bullokar.

We pay no peter-pence, we run not to Rome market to buy trash. Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 238.

PE'TER-WORT. n. s. [Ascyron.] A plant.

PETIT.† adj. [French.] Small; little; inconsiderable.

It would be good to have some petite matters beside. Harmar, Tr. of Beza, (1587,) p. 415.

Do but view what petite things swell men up: the stage never presented the pride of a constable so really, as it is frequently to be found in men under that burdensome honour! I dare say Solomon, nay kings, at this day, hold their scepters with more humility, than those small officers their staves! Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 598.

By what small, petit hints does the mind catch hold of, and recover, a vanishing notion? South, Serm. i. 302.

PETI'TION. n. s. [petitio, Latin.]

1. Request; intreaty; supplication; prayer.

We must propose unto all men certain petitions incident and very material in causes of this nature. Hooker.

My next poor petition
Is, that his noble grace would have some pity
Upon my wretched women. Shakspeare.

Let my life be given at my petition, and my people at my request. Esther, vii. 3.

Thou didst choose this house to be called by thy name, and to be a house of prayer and petition for thy people. 1 Mac. vii.

We must not only send up petitions and thoughts now and then to heaven, but must go through all our worldly business with a heavenly spirit. Law.

2. Single branch or article of a prayer.

Then pray'd that she might still possess his heart,
And no pretending rival share a part;
This last petition heard of all her pray'r. Dryden.

To PETI'TION. v. a. [from the noun.] To solicit; to supplicate.

You have petition'd all the gods
For my prosperity. Shakspeare, Coriol.

The mother petitioned her goddess to bestow upon them the greatest gift that could be given. Addison.

PETI'TIONARILY. adv. [from petitionary.] By way of begging the question.

This doth but petitionarily infer a dextrality in the heavens, and we may as reasonably conclude a right and left laterality in the ark of Noah. Brown.

PETI'TIONARY. adj. [from petition.]

1. Supplicatory; coming with petitions.

Pardon thy petitionary countrymen. Shakspeare.

It is our base petitionary breath
That blows 'em to this greatness. B. Jonson.

2. Containing petitions or requests.

Petitionary prayer belongeth only to such as are in themselves impotent, and stand in need of relief from others. Hooker.

I return only yes or no to questionary and petitionary epistles of half a yard long. Swift.

PETI'TIONER. n. s. [from petition.] One who offers a petition.

When you have received the petitions, and it will please the petitioners well to deliver them into your own hand, let your secretary first read them, and draw lines under the material parts. Bacon.

What pleasure can it be to be encumbered with dependences, thronged and surrounded with petitioners? South.

Their prayers are to the reproach of the petitioners, and to the confusion of vain desires. L'Estrange.

His woes broke out, and begg'd relief
With tears, the dumb petitioners of grief. Dryden.

The Roman matrons presented a petition to the fathers; this raised so much raillery upon the petitioners, that the ladies never after offered to direct the lawgivers of their country. Addison.

PE'TITORY.† adj. [petitorius, Lat. petitoire, Fr.] Petitioning; claiming the property of any thing. Bullokar.

Oft have I season'd savoury periods
With sugar'd words, to delude Gustus' taste:—
And oft perfum'd my petitory style
With civet-speech, to entrap Olfactus' nose!
Brewer, Com. of Lingua, A. i. S. 1.

PE'TRE. n. s. [from petra, a stone.] Nitre; salt petre. See NITRE.

Powder made of impure and greasy petre, hath but a weak emission, and gives but a faint report. Brown.

The vessel was first well nealed to prevent cracking, and covered to prevent the falling in of any thing, that might unseasonably kindle the petre. Boyle.

Nitre, while it is in its native state, is called petre-salt, when refined salt-petre. Woodward.

PETRE'SCENT. adj. [petrescens, Latin.] Growing stone; becoming stone.

A cave, from whose arched roof there dropped down a petrescent liquor, which oftentimes before it could fall to the ground congealed. Boyle.

PETRIFA'CTION. n. s. [from petrifacio, Lat.]

1. The act of turning to stone; the state of being turned to stone.

Its concretive spirit has the seeds of petrifaction and gorgon within itself. Brown.

Look over the variety of beautiful shells, petrifactions, ores, minerals, stones, and other natural curiosities. Cheyne.

PETRIFA'CTIVE. adj. [from petrifacio, Lat.] Having the power to form stone.

There are many to be found, which are but the lapidescences and petrifactive mutation of bodies. Brown.

To PETRI'FICATE.* v. a. [petrifacio, Lat.] To petrify. Not now in use.

Though our hearts petrificated were,
Yet caused't thou thy law be graven there,
And set a guardian o'er 't, that never dies.
J. Hall, Poems, (1646,) p. 96.

PETRIFICA'TION.† n. s. [petrification, Fr. from petrify.]

1. A body formed by changing other matter to stone.

In these strange petrifications, the hardening of the bodies seems to be effected principally, if not only, as in the induration of the fluid substances of an egg into a chick, by altering the disposition of their parts. Boyle.

2. Obduracy; callousness.

It was observed long ago by Epictetus, that there were some persons that would deny the plainest and most evident truths; and this state and condition he terms a petrification or mortification of the mind. Hallywell, Melampron. p. 1.

PETRI'FICK. adj. [petrificus, Lat.] Having the power to change to stone.

The aggregated soil
Death with his mace petrifick, cold and dry,
As with a trident, smote. Milton, P. L.
Winter's breath,
A nitrous blast that strikes petrifick death. Savage.

PETRO'LEUM. }

Petrol or petroleum is a liquid bitumen, black, floating on the water of springs. Woodward.

PE'TRONEL. n. s. [petrinal, Fr.] A pistol; a small gun used by a horseman.

And he with petronel upheav'd,
Instead of shield the blow receiv'd:
The gun recoil'd as well it might. Hudibras.

PE'TTICOAT. n. s. [petit and coat.] The lower part of a woman's dress.

What trade art thou, Feeble? — A woman's taylor, sir. — Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle, as thou hast done in a woman's petticoat? Shakspeare.

Her feet beneath her petticoat,
Like little mice, stole in and out,
As if they fear'd the light. Suckling.

It is a great compliment to the sex, that the virtues are generally shewn in petticoats. Addison.

To fifty chosen sylphs, of special note,
We trust th' important charge, the petticoat;
Oft have we known that sevenfold fence to fail,
Though stiff with hoops, and arm'd with ribs of whale. Pope, Rape of the Lock.

To PETTIFOG.* v. n. [petit and voguer, Fr. See the neuter verb, To FOG.] To play the pettifogger. Sherwood.

What marvel if it cheered them to see some store of their friends, and in the Roman, not the pettifogging sense, their clients so near about them! Milton, Eiconoclast. § 4.

He is a common barreter for his pleasure, that takes no money, but pettifogs gratis. Butler, Charac.

PE'TTIFOGGER. n. s. [corrupted from pettivoguer; petit and voguer, Fr.] A petty small-rate lawyer.

The worst conditioned and least cliented petivoguers get, under the sweet bait of revenge, more plentiful prosecution of actions. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Your pettifoggers damn their souls
To share with knaves in cheating fools. Hudibras.

Consider, my dear, how indecent it is to abandon your shop and follow pettifoggers; there is hardly a plea between two country esquires about a barren acre, but you draw yourself in as bail, surety or solicitor. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

Physicians are apt to despise empyrics, lawyers, pettifoggers, merchants and pedlars. Swift.

PETTIFO'GGERY.* n. s. [from pettifogger.] The practice of a pettifogger; trick; quibble.

The last and lowest sort of their arguments, that men purchased not their tithe with their land, and such like pettifoggery, I omit. Milton, Means to remove Hirelings out of the Church.

Whence tedious suits, crafty pleadings, quirks of law, and pettifoggeries will necessarily creep in. Barrow, Serm. on the Unity of the Church.

PE'TTINESS. n. s. [from petty.] Smallness; littleness; inconsiderableness; unimportance.

The losses we have borne, the subjects we
Have lost, and the disgrace we have digested;
To answer which, his pettiness would bow under. Shakspeare.

PE'TTISH.† adj. [from pet.] Fretful: peevish.

They [melancholy persons] are apt to mistake and amplify; testy, pettish, peevish, and ready to snarle upon every small occasion. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 185.

There are those who are pettish and crabbed in youth; there are contrarily those who are mild, gentle, sociable, in their decayed years. Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

Nor doth their childhood prove their innocence;
They're froward, pettish, and unus'd to smile. Creech.

PE'TTISHLY.* adv. [from pettish.] In a pet.

Pettishly, ridiculously,
To fling away your fortune. Beaum. and Fl. Mad Lover.

PE'TTISHNESS. n. s. [from pettish.] Fretfulness; peevishness.

Like children, when we lose our favourite plaything, we throw away the rest in a fit of pettishness. Collier.

When they are very putrid and corrosive, which circumstances give them the name of foul phagedenick ulcers, some spirits of wine should be added to the fomentation. Sharp.

PHA'LANX. n. s. [phalanx, Lat. phalange, Fr.] A troop of men closely embodied.

Far otherwise th' inviolable saints,
In cubic phalanx firm, advanc'd entire Invulnerable, impenetrably arm'd. Milton, P. L.

The Grecian phalanx, moveless as a tow'r,
On all sides batter'd, yet resists his pow'r. Pope.

PHA'NTASM. } n. s. [φάντασμα, Gr. phantasma,
PHANTA'SMA. } Lat. phantasme, Fr.] Vain and airy appearance; something appearing only to imagination.

All the interim is
Like a phantasma or a hideous dream. Shakspeare.

This armado is a Spaniard that keeps here in court
A phantasm, a monarcho, and one that makes sport
To the prince and his book-mates. Shakspeare.

They believe, and they believe amiss, because they be but phantasms or apparitions. Ralegh, Hist.

If the great ones were in forwardness, the people were in fury, entertaining this airy body or phantasm with incredible affection; partly out of their great devotion to the house of York, partly out of proud humour. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Why,
In this infernal vale first met, thou call'st
Me father, and that phantasm call'st my son. Milton, P. L.

Assaying, by his devilish art, to reach
The organs of her fancy, and with them forge
Illusions, as he list, phantasms and dreams. Milton, P. L.

PHANTA'STICAL. } See FANTASTICAL.
PHANTA'STICK. }

PHA'NTASY.* See FANTASY.

PHA'NTOM. n. s. [phantome, Fr.]

1. A spectre; an apparition.

If he cannot help believing, that such things he saw and heard, he may still have room to believe that, what this airy phantom said is not absolutely to be relied on. Atterbury.

A constant vapour o'er the palace flies;
Strange phantoms rising as the mists arise;
Dreadful as hermits' dreams in haunted shades,
Or bright as visions of expiring maids. Pope.

2. A fancied vision.

Restless and impatient to try every overture of present happiness, he hunts a phantom he can never overtake. Rogers.

As Pallas will'd, along the sable skies,
To calm the queen, the phantom sister flies. Pope.

PHARISA'ICAL.† } adj. Ritual; externally religious, from the sect of the Pharisees, whose religion consisted almost wholly in ceremonies.
PHARISA'ICK. }

The causes of superstition are pleasing and sensual rites, excess of outward and pharisaical holiness, over-great reverence of traditions, which cannot but load the church. Bacon.

Cynical clouds, and pharisaick frowns
Bp. Taylor, Lett. Handsom. p. 191.

Suffer us not to be deluded with pharisaical washings instead of christian reformers. King Charles.

PHA'SELS. n. s. [phaseoli, Lat.] French beans.
Ainsworth.

PHA'SIS. n. s. In the plural phases. [φάσις; phase, Fr.] Appearance exhibited by any body: as the changes of the moon.

All the hypotheses yet contrived, were built upon too narrow an inspection of the phases of the universe. Glanville.

He o'er the seas shall love, or fame pursue;
And other months, another phasis view;
Fixt to the rudder, he shall boldly steer,
And pass those rocks which Tiphys us'd to fear. Creech.

PHASM.† } n. s. [φάσμα.] Appearance phantom; fancied apparition.
PHA'SMA. }

Thence proceed many aereal fictions and phasms, and chimaeras, created by the vanity of our own hearts or seduction of evil spirits, and not planted in them by God. Hammond.

In gross darkness the phasma having assumed a bodily shape, or other false representation. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 374.

Such phasms, such apparitions, are most of those excellencies which men applaud in themselves. Decay of Chr. Piety, p. 83.

PHE'ASANT. n. s. [faisan, Fr. phasianus, from Phasis, the river of Colchos.] A kind of wild cock.

The hardest to draw are tame birds; as the cock, peacock, and pheasant. Peacham on Drawing.

Preach as I please, I doubt our curious men
Will chuse a pheasant still before a hen. Pope.

PHEER.† n. s. A companion. See FEAR, and FERE.

To PHEESE. v. a. [perhaps to feaze.] To comb; to fleece; to curry. See To FEAZE.

An he be proud with me, I'll pheese his pride. Shakspeare.

PHE'NICOPTER. n. s. [φοινικόπτερος; phenicopterus, Lat.] A kind of bird, which is thus described by Martial:

Dat mihi penna rubens nomen, sed lingua gulosis
Nostra sapit; quid si garrula lingua foret?

He blended together the livers of guiltheads, the brains of pheasants and peacocks, tongues of phenicopters, and the melts of lampreys. Hakewill on Providence.

Phe'nix.* n. s. [φοῖνιξ; phœnix, Latin.] The bird which is supposed to exist single, and to rise again from its own ashes.

There is one tree, the phenix throne; one phenix
At this hour reigning there. Shakspeare, Tempest.

To all the fowls he seems a phenix. Milton, P. L.

Having the idea of a phenix in my mind, the first enquiry is, whether such a thing does exist? Locke.

Pheno'menon. n. s. [φαινομενον; phenomene, Fr. it is therefore often written phænomenon; but being naturalised, it has changed the æ, which is not in the English language, to e. But if it has the original plural termination phænomena, it should, I think, be written with æ.]

1. Appearance; visible quality.

Short-sighted minds are unfit to make philosophers, whose business it is to describe, in comprehensive theories, the phænomena of the world and their causes. Burnet.

These are curiosities of little or no moment to the understanding the phænomenon of nature. Newton.

The most considerable phenomenon, belonging to terrestrial bodies, is gravitation, whereby all bodies in the vicinity of the earth press towards its centre. Bentley, Serm.

He proves his explications by experiments made with a phial of water, and with globes of glass filled with water. Newton.

To Phi'al. v. a. [from the noun.] To keep in a phial.

Heaven search my soul! and if through all its cells
Lurk the pernicious drop of poisonous guile,
Full on my fenceless head its phiall'd wrath
May fate exhaust! Shenstone, Love and Honour.

Philanthro'pical.* } Philanthro'pick. } adj. [from philanthropy.] Loving mankind; wishing to do good to mankind.

The effect of this philanthropic spirit is, that the vices which are still generally harboured, are sins of indulgence and refinement rather than of cruelty and barbarism. Bp. Horsley, Serm. (1792.)

Phila'nthropist.* n. s. [from philanthropy.] One who loves, and wishes to serve, mankind.

O, how Omnipotence
Is lost in love! Thou great philanthropist,
Father of angels, but the friend of man; —
How art thou pleas'd by bounty to distress!
Young, Night Th. 4.

PHILA'NTHROPY.† n. s. [φιλέω and ἄνθρωπος, Gr. Dr. Johnson. — This word is much older, in our language, than the time of Addison; from whom alone Dr. Johnson cites an example of the word. Mr. Malone is of opinion that Dryden, in his character of Polybius, printed in 1692, first introduced philanthropy, as an English word; but it had been in use long before that time. It is in the vocabulary of Cockeram; and another valuable author employed it before Dryden.] Love of mankind; good nature.

The greater wonder it is, that so many doctrines among the Heathens, and Christians too, should be received with a non obstante to this native and easy sense of the divine goodness and philanthropy lodged in their minds. Spencer on Prodigies, (1666,) p. 290.

Such a transient temporary good nature is not that philanthropy, that love of mankind, which deserves the title of a moral virtue. Addison.

Phi'libeg.* See Fillibeg.

A dress resembling the highland philibeg. Drummond, Trav. p. 66.

PHILI'PPICK.† n. s. [from the invectives of Demosthenes against Philip of Macedon]. Any invective declamation.

Before the author wrote this and the following scene, he had warmed his patriotism, as well as his imagination, with the philippicks of Cicero. Bp. Hurd on Addison's Cato, A. ii. S. 1.

To Phi'lippize. v. n. [from philippick.] To declaim against; to utter or write invectives.

I know they set him [Dr. Price] up as a sort of oracle; because, with the best intentions in the world, he naturally philippizes, and chaunts his prophetick song in exact unison with their designs. Burke on the Fr. Revolution.

Phillyre'a.* n. s. [Botan. Lat.] An evergreen plant.

The phillyrea, of which there are five or six sorts, and some variegated, are sufficiently hardy. Evelyn.

Philo'loger. n. s. [φιλόλογος.] One whose chief study is language; a grammarian; a critick.

Philologers and critical discoursers, who look beyond the shell and obvious exteriors of things, will not be angry with our narrower explorations. Brown.

You expect that I should discourse of this matter like a naturalist, not a philologer. Boyle.

The best philologers say, that the original word does not only signify domestick, as opposed to foreign, but also private, as opposed to common. Sprat, Serm.

Philolo'gical.† } Philolo'gick. } adj. [from philology.] Critical; grammatical.

Studies, called philological, are history, language, grammar, rhetorick, poesy, and criticism. Watts.

He who pretends to the learned professions, if he doth not arise to be a critick himself in philological matters, should frequently converse with dictionaries, paraphrasts, commentators, or other criticks, which may relieve any difficulties. Watts.

Menage, the greatest name in France for all kinds of philologick learning. Warburton, Pref. to Shakspeare.

Philo'logist.† n. s. See Philo'loger. A critick; a grammarian.

Why the rods and staffs of the princes were chosen for this decision, philologists will consider. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 31.

Of a later age, and a harsher style, was Martianus Capella, if he did not deserve the name rather of a philologist, than of a philosopher. Harris, Hermes, B. iii. ch. 5.

To Philo'logize. v. n. [from philology.] To offer criticisms.

Nor is it here that we design to enlarge, as those who have philologized on this occasion. Evelyn, B. iii. ch. 6. § 2.

PHILO'LOGY.† n. s. [φιλολογία; philologie, Fr.] Criticism; grammatical learning.

My lady maistres, dame Philology,
Gave me a gift, in my nest when I lay,
To learne al language. Skelton, Poems, p. 93.

To students in philology it is now grown familiar. Selden, Pref. to Drayton's Polyolbion.

Temper all discourses of philology with interspersions of morality. Walker.

Phi'lomath.* n. s. [φιλομαθης, Gr.] A lover of learning: generally used in slight contempt.

Modern enthusiasts and crazy philomaths. Biblioth. Bibl. i. 294.

PHI'LOMEL. } n. s. [from Philomela, changed into a
PHILOME'LA. } bird.] The nightingale.

Time drives the flocks from field to fold,
When rivers rage and rocks grow cold,
And philomel becometh dumb. Shakespeare.

Admires the jay the insect's gilded wings,
Or hears the hawk, when philomela sings? Pope.

PHI'LOMOT. adj. [corrupted from feuille morte, a dead leaf. Coloured like a dead leaf.

One of them was blue, another yellow, and another philomot, the fourth was of a pink colour, and the fifth of a pale green. Addison, Spect. No. 265.

To PHILO'SOPHATE. v. n. [philosophatus, Lat.] To moralize; to play the philosopher.

Few there be, that with Epictetus can philosophate in slavery, or, like Cleanthes, can draw water all the day, and study most of the night. Barrow, vol. i. S. 12.

PHILOSOPHA'TION.* n. s. [philosophatus, Lat.] Philosophical discussion.

The work being to be the basis of many future inferences and philosophations. Sir W. Petty, Adv. to Hartlib, p. 18.

PHILO'SOPHEME. n. s. [φιλοσόφημα.] Principle of reasoning; theorem. An unusual word.

You will learn how to address yourself to children for their benefit, and derive some useful philosophemes for your own entertainment. Watts.

PHILO'SOPHER. n. s. [philosophus, Lat. philosophe, Fr.] A man deep in knowledge, either moral or natural.

Many sound in belief have been also great philosophers. Hooker, Eccl. Pol.

The philosopher hath long ago told us, that according to the divers nature of things, so must the evidences for them be; and that 'tis an argument of an undisciplined wit not to acknowledge this. Wilkins.

They all our fam'd philosophers defie,
And would our faith by force of reason try. Dryden.

If the philosophers by fire had been so wary in their observations and sincere in their reports, as those, who call themselves philosophers ought to have been, our acquaintance with the bodies here about us had been yet much greater. Locke.

Adam, in the state of innocence, came into the world a philosopher, which sufficiently appeared by his writing the natures of things upon their names; he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South.

PHILO'SOPHER'S Stone. n. s. A stone dreamed of by alchymists, which, by its touch, converts base metals into gold.

That stone
Philosophers in vain so long have sought. Milton, P. L.

PHILOSO'PHICAL. } adj. [philosophique, Fr. from phi-
PHILOSO'PHICK. } losophy.]

1. Belonging to philosophy; suitable to a philosopher; formed by philosophy.

Others in virtue plac'd felicity:
The Stoick last in philosophick pride
By him call'd virtue; and his virtuous man,
Wise, perfect in himself, and all possessing. Milton, P. R.

How could our chymick friends go on
To find the philosophick stone. Prior.

When the safety of the publick is endangered, the appearance of a philosophical or affected indolence must arise either from stupidity or perfidiousness. Addison, Freeholder.

2. Skilled in philosophy.

We have our philosophical persons to make modern and familiar things supernatural and causeless. Shakspeare.

Acquaintance with God is not a speculative knowledge, built on abstracted reasonings about his nature and essence, such as philosophical minds often busy themselves in, without reaping from thence any advantage towards regulating their passions, but practical knowledge. Atterbury.

3. Frugal; abstemious.

This is what nature's wants may well suffice:
But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
I'll mingle something of our times to please. Dryden.

PHILOSO'PHICALLY. adv. [from philosophical.] In a philosophical manner; rationally; wisely.

The law of commonweales that cut off the right hand of malefactors, if philosophically executed, is impartial; otherwise the amputation not equally punisheth all. Brown.

No man has ever treated the passion of love with so much delicacy of thought and of expression, or searched into the nature of it more philosophically than Ovid. Dryden.

If natural laws were once settled, they are never to be reversed: to violate and infringe them, is the same as what we call miracle, and doth not sound very philosophically out of the mouth of an atheist. Bentley, Serm.

To PHILO'SOPHIZE. v. n. [from philosophy.] To play the philosopher; to reason like a philosopher; to moralize; to search into nature; to enquire into the causes of effects.

Qualities occult to Aristotle, must be so to us; and we must not philosophize beyond sympathy and antipathy. Glanville.

The ass philosophized upon the matter, and finding out at last that it was burning made the brick so hard, cast itself into the fire. L'Estrange.

Two doctors of the schools were philosophizing upon the advantages of mankind above all other creatures. L'Estrange.

Some of our philosophizing divines have too much exalted the faculties of our souls, when they have maintained, that by their force mankind has been able to find out God. Dryden.

PHILO'SOPHY n. s. [philosophie, Fr. philosophia, Latin.]

1. Knowledge natural or moral.

I had never read, heard, nor seen any thing, I had never any taste of philosophy nor inward feeling in myself, which for a while I did not call to my succour. Sidney.

Hang up philosophy;
Unless philosophy can make a Juliet,
Displant a town, reverse a prince's doom,
It helps not. Shakspeare.

The progress you have made in philosophy, hath enabled you to benefit yourself with what I have written. Digby.

2. Hypothesis or system upon which natural effects are explained.

We shall in vain interpret their words by the notions of our philosophy, and the doctrines in our schools. Locke.

3. Reasoning; argumentation.

Of good and evil much they argu'd then;
Vain wisdom all, and false philosophy! Milton, P. L.

His decisions are the judgement of his passions not of his reason, the philosophy of the sinner not of the man. Rogers.

4. The course of sciences read in the schools.

PHI'LTER. n. s. [φίλτρον; philtre, Fr.] Something to cause love.

The melting kiss that sips
The jellied philtre of her lips. Cleaveland.

This cup a cure for both our ills has brought,
You need not fear a philter in the draught. Dryden.

A philter that has neither drug nor enchantment in it, love if you would raise love. Addison.

To PHI'LTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To charm to love.

Let not those that have repudiated the more inviting sins, shew themselves philtred and bewitched by this. Gov. of the Tongue.

PHIZ. n. s. [This word is formed by a ridiculous contraction from physiognomy, and should therefore, if it be written at all, be written phyz.] The face, in a sense of contempt.

His air was too proud, and his features amiss,
As if being a traitor had alter'd his phiz. Stepney.

PHLEBO'TOMIST. n. s. [phlebotomiste, Fr. from φλέψ and τέμνω.] One that opens a vein; a bloodletter.

To PHLEBO'TOMIZE. v. a. [phlebotomiser, Fr. from phlebotomy.] To let blood.

The frail bodies of men must have an evacuation for their humours, and be phlebotomized. Howell, Engl. Tears.

PHLEBO'TOMY. n. s. [φλεβοτομια, φλέψ, φλεβὸς, vena, and τέμνω, Gr. phlebotomie, Fr.] Blood-letting; the act or practice of opening a vein for medical intentions.

Phlebotomy is not cure, but mischief; the blood so flowing as if the body were all vein. Holyday.

Although in indispositions of the liver or spleen, considerations are made in phlebotomy to their situation, yet, when the heart is affected, it is thought as effectual to bleed on the right as the left. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Pains for the spending of the spirits, come nearest to the copious and swift loss of spirits by phlebotomy. Harvey.

PHLEGM.† n. s. [φλέγμα; phlegme, Fr.]

1. The watery humour of the body, which, when it predominates, is supposed to produce sluggishness or dulness.

Make the proper use of each extreme,
And write with fury, but correct with phlegm. Roscommon.
He who supreme in judgement, as in wit,
Might boldly censure, as he boldly writ,
Yet judg'd with coolness, though he sung with fire;
His precepts teach, but what his works inspire.
Our criticks take a contrary extreme,
They judge with fury, but they write with phlegm. Pope.
Let melancholy rule supreme,
Choler preside, or blood or phlegm,
It makes no difference in the case
Nor is complexion honour's place. Swift.

2. Water among the chymists.

A linen cloth, dipped in common spirit of wine, is not burnt by the flame, because the phlegm of the liquor defends the cloth. Boyle.

3. Coolness; indifference.

I here affirm with great phlegm. Swift on the Barrier Treaty.

They can talk of the wretched state of it [religion] amongst their friends, and countrymen, with the same phlegm and indifference that they speak of the broken power of the States of Holland. Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 55.

PHLE'GMAGOGUES. n. s. [φλέγμα and ἄγω; phlegmagogue, Fr.] A purge of the milder sort, supposed to evacuate phlegm and leave the other humours.

The pituitous temper of the stomachick ferment must be corrected, and phlegmagogues must evacuate it. Floyer.

PHLE'GMATICK. adj. [φλεγματικὸς; phlegmatique, Fr. from phlegm.]

1. Abounding in phlegm.

The putrid vapours, though exciting a fever, do colliquate the phlegmatick humours of the body. Harvey.

Chewing and smoaking of tobacco is only proper for phlegmatick people. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Generating phlegm.

A neat's foot, I fear, is too phlegmatick a meat. Shakspeare.

Negroes, transplanted into cold and phlegmatick habitations, continue their hue in themselves and generations. Brown.

3. Watry.

Spirit of wine is inflammable by means of its oily parts, and being distilled often from salt of tartar, grows by every distillation more and more aqueous and phlegmatick. Newton.

4. Dull; cold; frigid.

As the inhabitants are of a heavy phlegmatick temper, if any leading member has more fire than comes to his share, it is quickly tempered by the coldness of the rest. Addison.

Who but a husband ever could persuade
His heart to leave the bosom of thy love,
For any phlegmatick design of state. Southern.

PHLE'GMATICKLY.* adv. [from phlegmatick.] With phlegm; coolly.

He introduces his story with a cool, philosophical lecture on the dignity of human nature: the interpretation of the haruspices is only taken notice of as it was evidence against Lentulus; and all the rest is phlegmatickly passed over. Warburton on Prodigies, p. 80.

PHLE'GMON. n. s. [φλεγμονή.] An inflammation; a burning tumour.

Phlegmon or inflammation is the first generation from good blood, and nearest of kin to it. Wiseman.

PHLE'GMONOUS. adj. [from phlegmon.] Inflammatory; burning.

It is generated secondarily out of the dregs and remainder of a phlegmonous or œdematick tumour. Harvey.

PHLEME. n. s. [from phlebotomus, Lat.] A fleam, so it is commonly written; an instrument which is placed on the vein and driven into it with a blow; particularly in bleeding of horses.

PHLOGI'STICK.* adj. [phlogistique, French; from phlogiston.] Partaking of phlogiston.

These bodies are called phlogistic bodies. Adams.

PHLOGI'STON.† n. s. [φλογιστὸς, from φλέγω.]

1. A chymical liquor extremely inflammable.

2. The inflammable part of any body.

The doctrine of phlogiston, as understood by modern chemists, implies, that a quantity of fire, or the matter of light and heat, is occasionally contained in bodies, as part of their composition. Adams.

PHO'NICKS. n. s. [from φωνή.] The doctrine of sounds.

PHONOCA'MPTICK. adj. [φωνή and κάμπτω.] Having the power to inflect or turn the sound, and by that to alter it.

PHO'SPHOR. } n. s. [phosphorus, Lat.]
PHO'SPHORUS. }

1. The morning star.

Why sit we sad when Phosphorus shines so clear. Pope.

2. A chymical substance which, exposed to the air, takes fire.

Phosphorus is obtained by distillation from urine putrified, by the force of a very vehement and long continued fire. Pemberton.

Of lambent flame you have whole sheets in a handful of phosphor. Addison.

Liquid and solid phosphorus show their flames more conspicuously, when exposed to the air. Cheyne.

PHO'SPHORATED.* adj. [from phosphorus.] Impregnated with phosphor.

Saline substances (gypsum and phosphorated calx excepted) seem to serve vegetables (as they do animals) rather as a condimentum or promoter of digestion, than as a pabulum. Kirwan on Manures, p. 50.

PHOTO'METER.* n. s. [φῶς, light, and μέτρον, measure, Gr.] An instrument which measures light.

Mr. Leslie tells us, that since he constructed this instrument, in 1797, he has been delighted with the nicety of its performance. It not only measures the direct rays of the sun, but the reflected light of the sky. It is sensible to every change of the atmosphere, and marks the progress and decline of the light of day, and of the brightness of the year. By it also the light of a candle, or other luminous body, may be estimated. The comparison of two photometers easily determines the relative properties of different coloured bodies, in reflecting, absorbing, and transmitting light. Dr. Garnett, Annals of Philosophy, &c. (1801.)

PHRASE. n. s. [φράσις.]

1. An idiom; a mode of speech peculiar to a language.

2. An expression; a mode of speech.

Now since the sin,
And mollify damnation with a phrase:
Say you consented not to Sancho's death,
But barely not forbad it. Dryden.

To fear the Lord, and depart from evil, are phrases which the Scripture useth to express the sum of religion. Tillotson.

3. Style; expression.

Thou speak'st
In better phrase and matter than thou didst. Shakespeare.

To PHRASE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To style; to call; to term.

These suns,
For so they phrase them, by their heralds challenged
The noble spirits to arms. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Xenophon phrases it pharsanga, and computes it thirty furlongs. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 117.

She will turn puritan, not moderate protestant, as she phraseth it. A. Cook, to Abp. Usher, Lett. p. 373.

To PHRASE.* v. n. To employ peculiar expressions.

We have not tied ourselves to an uniformity of phrasing, or to an identity of words. Translators of the Bible, Pref.

PHRASEOLO'GICAL.* adj. [from phraseology.] Peculiar to a language or phrase.

This verbal or phraseological answer may not seem sufficient. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 8.

PHRASEO'LOGY. n. s. [φράσις and λέγω.]

1. Style; diction.

The scholars of Ireland seem not to have the least conception of a stile, but run on in a flat phraseology, often mingled with barbarous terms. Swift, Miscell.

2. A phrase book. Ainsworth.

PHRENE'TICK.† } adj. [φρενητικὸς; phrenitique, Fr.]
PHRE'NTICK. } Mad; inflamed in the brain; frantick.

PHYLA'CTER.† } n. s. [φυλακτήριον; phylactere,
PHYLA'CTERY. } Fr.] A bandage on which was inscribed some memorable sentence.

The phylacteries on their wrists and foreheads were looked on as spells, which would yield them impunity for their disobedience. Hammond.

The Pharisees were — skilful expositors of the Mosaical law; wearing the precepts thereof in phylacters (narrow scrolls of parchment) bound about their brows, and above their left elbows. Sandys, Christ's Passion, p. 77.

Golden sayings,
On large phylacteries expressive writ,
Were to the foreheads of the Rabbins ty'd. Prior.

PHYLA'CTERED.* adj. [from phylacter.] Wearing phylacteries; dressed like the Pharisees.

Nor they so pure, and so precise,
Immaculate as their white of eyes;
Who for the spirit hug the spleen,
Phylacter'd throughout all their mien. Green's Poem of the Spleen, v. 335.

PHYLACTE'RICAL.* adj. [from phylactery.] Relating to phylacteries.

The Jewish church ordained that all their publick prayers should be concluded with Amen; I say publick prayers; for, in their private or phylacterical prayers, it was omitted. L. Addison, Christian Sacrifice, p. 128.

PHY'SICAL. adj. [physique, Fr. from physick.]

1. Relating to nature or to natural philosophy; not moral.

The physical notion of necessity, that without which the work cannot possibly be done; it cannot be affirmed of all the articles of the creed, that they are thus necessary. Hammond.

I call that physical certainty which doth depend upon the evidence of sense, which is the first and highest kind of evidence, of which human nature is capable. Wilkins.

To reflect on those innumerable secrets of nature and physical philosophy, which Homer wrought in his allegories, what a new scene of wonder may this afford us! Pope.

Charity in its origin is a physical and necessary consequence of the principle of re-union. Cheyne, Philos. Principles.

2. Pertaining to the science of healing: as, a physical treatise, physical herbs.

3. Medicinal; helpful to health.

Is Brutus sick? and is it physical
To walk unbraced, and suck up the humours
Of the dank morning? Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

The blood, I drop, is rather physical
Than dangerous to me. Shakspeare, Coriol.

4. Resembling physick: as, a physical taste.

PHY'SICALLY. adv. [from physical.]

1. According to nature; by natural operation; in the way or sense of natural philosophy; not morally.

Time measuring out their motion, informs us of the periods and terms of their duration, rather than effecteth or physically produceth the same. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The outward act of worship may be considered physically and abstractly from any law, and so it depends upon the nature of the intention, and morally, as good or evil: and so it receives its denomination from the law. Stillingfleet.

Though the act of the will commanding, and the act of any other faculty, executing that which is so commanded, be physically and in the precise nature of things distinct, yet morally as they proceed from one entire, free, moral agent, may pass for one and the same action. South, Serm.

I do not say, that the nature of light consists in small round globules, for I am not now treating physically of light or colours. Locke.

2. According to the science of medicine; according to the rules of medicine.

He that lives physically, must live miserably. Cheney.

PHYSI'CIAN. n. s. [phisicien, Fr. from physick.] One who professes the art of healing.

Trust not the physician,
His antidotes are poison, and he slays
More than you rob. Shakspeare, Timon.

Some physicians are so conformable to the humour of the patient, as they press not the true cure of the disease, and others are so regular, as they respect not sufficiently the condition of the patient. Bacon, Ess.

His gratulatory verse to king Henry, is not more witty than the epigram upon the name of Nicolaus an ignorant physician, who had been the death of thousands. Peacham of Poetry.

Taught by thy art divine, the sage physician
Eludes the urn; and chains, or exiles death. Prior.

PHY'SICK.† n. s. [φυσικη, which, originally signifying natural philosophy, has been transferred in many modern languages to medicine.]

1. The science of healing.

Were it my business to understand physick, would not the safer way be to consult nature herself in the history of diseases and their cures, than espouse the principles of the dogmatists, methodists, or chymists. Locke.

2. Medicines; remedies.

In itself we desire health, physick only for health's sake. Hooker.

Use physick or ever thou be sick. Ecclus. xviii. 19.

Nay, to keep friendship, they shall pickle you. Dryden.

2. To season or imbue highly with any thing bad: as, a pickled rogue, or one consummately villanous.

PICKLEHE'RRING. † n. s. [pickle and herring. "There is a set of merry drolls, whom the common people of all countries admire; — those circumforaneous wits, whom every nation calls by the name of that dish of meat which it loves best. In Holland they are termed pickled herrings; in France, Jean Potages; in Italy, maccaronies; and in Great Britain, jack-puddings." Addison, Spect. No. 47.] A jack-pudding; a merry-andrew; a zany; a buffoon.

A plague o' these pickle-herrings! Shakspeare, Twelfth Night.

The pickleherring found the way to shake him, for upon his whistling a country jig, this unlucky wag danced to it with such a variety of grimaces, that the countryman could not forbear smiling, and lost the prize. Addison, Spect.

PI'CKLOCK. † n. s. [pick and lock.]

1. An instrument by which locks are opened without the key.

We take him to be a thief too, Sir; for we have found upon him, Sir, a strange picklock. Shakspeare.

Scipio, having such a picklock, would spend so many years in battering the gates of Carthage. Brown.

It corrupts faith and justice, and is the very picklock that opens the way into all cabinets. L'Estrange.

Thou raisedst thy voice to describe the powerful Betty or the artful picklock, or Vulcan sweating at his forge, and stamping the queen's image on viler metals. Arbuthnot.

2. The person who picks locks.

Confession is made a minister of state, a pick-lock of secrets, a spy upon families, a searcher of inclinations. Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. 2. § 4.

These are some of those many artifices, whereby Satan, like a cunning picklock, slyly robs us of our grand treasure. Decay of Chr. Piety, p. 246.

PI'CKPOCKET. } n. s. [pick and pocket, or purse.] A
PI'CKPURSE. } thief who steals, by putting his hand privately into the pocket or purse.

I think he is not a pickpurse nor a horsestealer. Shakspeare.

It is reasonable, when Squire South is losing his money to sharpers and pickpockets, I should lay out the fruits of my honest industry in a law suit. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

Pickpockets and highwaymen observe strict justice among themselves. Bentley, Serm.

His fellow pickpurse, watching for a job,
Fancies his fingers in the cully's fob. Swift.

If a court or country's made a job,
Go drench a pickpocket, and join the mob. Pope.

PI'CKPOCKET.* adj. Privately stealing.

I do not mean the auricular pickpocket confession of the papists, but publick confession. South, Serm. xi. 29.

PI'CKTOOTH † n. s. [pick and tooth.] An instrument by which the teeth are cleaned. Ridiculed by Gascoigne, in 1572, as a foreign introduction.

If a gentleman leaves a picktooth case on the table after dinner, look upon it as part of your vails. Swift.

PI'CKTHANK. † n. s. [pick and thank.] An officious fellow, who does what he is not desired; a whispering parasite.

Every where had they their spyes, their Judasses, their false accusers, their sommoners, their bulyves, and their pikethankes. Bale on the Revelat. P. iii. (1550,) sign. F f. 1.

Many tales devis'd,
Oft the ear of greatness needs must hear,
By smiling pickthanks and base newsmongers. Shakspeare.

With pleasing tales his lord's vain ears he fed,
A flatterer, a pickthank, and a lyer. Fairfax.

The business of a pickthank is the basest of offices. L'Estrange.

If he be great and powerful, spies and pickthanks generally provoke him to persecute and tyrannize over the innocent and the just. South.

*PI'CO. n. s. [Spanish.] Peak; point.

Though every rock of the sea was as high as the pico of Teneriffe. Bentley, Serm. viii.

PICT. n. s. [pictus, Lat.] A painted person.

Your neighbours would not look on you as men,
But think the nations all turn'd Picts again. Lee.

PICTO'RIAL. adj. [from pictor, Lat.] Produced by a painter. A word not adopted by other writers, but elegant and useful.

Sea horses are but grotesco delineations, which fill up empty spaces in maps, as many pictorial inventions, not any physical shapes. Brown, Vulg. Err.

PI'CTURAL.* n. s. [from picture.] A representation. Not in use.

Whose wals
Were painted faire with memorable gestes
Of famous wisards; and with picturals
Of magistrates, of courts, of tribunals. Spenser, F. Q. ii. ix. 53.

PI'CTURE.† n. s. [pictura, Lat.]

1. A resemblance of persons or things in colours.

Madam, if that your heart be so obdurate,
Vouchsafe me yet your picture for my love,
The picture that is hanging in your chamber. Shakspeare.

Pictures and shapes are but secondary objects, and please or displease but in memory. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Devouring what he saw so well design'd,
He with an empty picture fed his mind. Dryden.

As soon as he begins to spell, as many pictures of animals should be got him as can be found with the printed names to them. Locke.

She often shews them her own picture, which was taken when their father fell in love with her. Law.

2. The science of painting.

Whosoever loves not picture, is injurious to truth, and all the wisdom of poetry. Picture is the invention of heaven, the most ancient, and most a-kin to nature. — Picture took her feigning from poetry; from geometry her rule, compass, lines, proportion, and the whole symmetry. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

3. The works of painters.

Quintilian, when he saw any well-expressed image of grief, either in picture or sculpture, would usually weep. Wotton.

If nothing will satisfy him, but having it under my hand, that I had no design to ruin the company of picture-drawers, I do hereby give it him. Stillingfleet.

4. Any resemblance or representation.

Vouchsafe this picture of thy soul to see;
'Tis so far good, as it resembles thee. Dryden.

It suffices to the unity of any idea, that it be considered as one representation or picture, though made up of ever so many particulars. Locke.

To PI'CTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To paint; to represent by painting.

I have not seen him so pictur'd. Shakspeare, Cymb.

He who caused the spring to be pictured, added this rhyme for an exposition. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

It is not allowable, what is observable of Raphael Urban; wherein Mary Magdalen is pictured before our Saviour washing his feet on her knees, which will not consist with the strict letter of the text. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Love is like the painter, who, being to draw the picture of a friend having a blemish in one eye, would picture only the other side of his face. South.

2. To represent.

All filled with these rueful spectacles of so many wretched carcasses starving, that even I, that do but hear it from you, and do picture it in my mind, do greatly pity it. Spenser.

Fond man,
See here thy pictur'd life. Thomson, Winter.

I (considering, how honour would become such a person; that it was no better than, picturelike, to hang by the wall, if renown made it not stir;) was pleased to let him seek danger where he was like to find fame. Shakspeare, Coriol.

PICTURE'SQUE.* adj. [pittoresco, Italian; pictoresque, Fr.] "No word corresponding to this, or of exactly similar meaning, is to be found in any of the languages of antiquity now extant; nor in any modern tongue, as far as I have been able to discover, except such as have borrowed it from the Italian; in which, the earliest authority, that I can find for it, is that of Redi, one of the original academicians of la Crusca, who flourished towards the end of the sixteenth century. — In our own language, it has lately been received into very general use: but, nevertheless, it has not been considered as perfectly naturalized among us; for Johnson has not admitted it into his dictionary, though he has received the word pictorial." Knight, Analyt. Inq. into the Principles of Taste, 2d ed. 1805, ch. 2. § 16. It has escaped this learned critick, that Johnson, in his dictionary, has used picturesque; which, however, is not the earliest employment of the word that I have found. Gray uses it several years before Johnson.] Expressing that peculiar kind of beauty which is agreeable in a picture, whether natural or artificial; striking the mind with great power or pleasure in representing objects of vision, and in painting to the imagination any circumstance or event as clearly as if delineated in a picture.

You cannot pass along a street but you have views of some palace, or church, or square, or fountain, the most picturesque and noble one can imagine. Gray, Lett. to his Mother, (1740.)

Anglesey, a tract of plain country, very fertile, but picturesque only from the view it has of Caernarvonshire. Gray, Lett. to Mason, (1756.)

In a picturesque manner; with good description or delineation. Johnson in V. Graphically, (Dict. 1755.)

View delineated; a picturesque representation of a landscape. Johnson in V. Prospect, (Dict. 1772.)

From these little fragments, the first of which is an example of the pathetic, and the second of the picturesque, the manner of Sappho might have been gathered. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

This is described by striking and picturesque personifications. Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 315.

Shenstone had no description of an whole, or of disposing his environs on any consistent plan, and giving it its present beautiful and picturesque appearance. Graves, Recollect. of Shenstone, p. 51.

PICTURE'SQUENESS.* n. s. [from picturesque.] State or quality of being picturesque.

Deformity is to ugliness what picturesqueness is to beauty. Price, Essay on the Picturesque, (1794.)

To PI'DDLE.† v. n. [This word is obscure in its etymology; Skinner derives it from picciolo, Italian; or petit, Fr. little; Mr. Lye thinks the diminutive of the Welsh breyta, to eat; perhaps it comes from peddle, for Skinner gives for its primitive signification, to deal in little things.]

1. To pick at table; to feed squeamishly, and without appetite.

From stomach sharp, and hearty feeding,
To piddle like a lady breeding. Swift, Miscell.

2. To trifle; to attend to small parts rather than to the main.

Too precise, too curious, in pidling thus about the imitation of others. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Take some little piddling revenge. Beaum. and Fl. Cupid's Revenge.

Now for those other piddling complaints,
Breath'd out in bitterness. Massinger, New Way to pay Old Debts.

PI'DDLER. n. s. [from piddle.]

1. One that eats squeamishly, and without appetite.
2. One who is busy about minute things.

PIE.† n. s. [This word is derived by Skinner from biezan, to build, that is to build of paste; by Junius derived by contraction from pasty; if pasties, doubled together without walls, were the first pies, the derivation is easy from pie, a foot; as in some provinces, an apple pasty is still called an apple foot.]

1. Any crust baked with something in it.

No man's pie is freed
From his ambitious finger. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Mincing of meat in pies saveth the grinding of the teeth, and more nourishing to them that have weak teeth. Bacon.

He is the very Withers of the city; they have bought more editions of his works, than would serve to lay under all their pies at a lord mayor's Christmas. Dryden.

Chuse your materials right;
From thence of course the figure will arise,
And elegance adorn the surface of your pies. King.
Eat beef or pie-crust, if you'd serious be. King.

2. [Pica, Lat.] A magpie; a party-coloured bird.

The pie will discharge thee for pulling the rest. Tusser.

The raven croak'd hoarse on the chimney's top,
And chattering pies in dismal discords sung. Shakspeare.

Who taught the parrot human notes to try,
Or with a voice endu'd the chattering pie?
'Twas witty want. Dryden.

3. The old popish service book, so called, as is supposed, from the different colour of the text and rubrick. The word pie, some suppose, derives its name from πίναξ, which the Greeks sometimes use for table or index; though others think these tables or indexes were called the pie, from the party-coloured letters of which they consisted: the initial and some other remarkable letters and words being done in red, and the rest all in black. And upon this account, when they translate it into Latin, they call it pica. Wheatly.

The number and hardness of the rules called the pie, and the manifold changings of the service, was the cause, that to turn this book only was so hard and intricate a matter, that many times there was more business to find out what should be read, than to read it when it was found out.
Comm. Prayer, Pref. concern. the Serv. of the Church.

4. Cock and pie was a slight expression in Shakspeare's time, of which I know not the meaning. Dr. Johnson. — It was an adjuration by the pie or service-book, and by the Sacred Name of the Deity corrupted.

Mr. Slender, come; we stay for you. —
— I'll eat nothing, I thank you, Sir. —
— By cock and pie, you shall not choose, Sir; come, come.
Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

PIE'BALD. adj. [from pie.] Of various colours; diversified in colour.

It was a particoloured dress,
Of patch'd and piebald languages. Hudibras.

They would think themselves miserable in a patched coat, and yet contentedly suffer their minds to appear abroad in a piebald livery of coarse patches and borrowed shreds. Locke.

They are pleased to hear of a piebald horse that is strayed out of a field near Islington, as of a whole troop that has been engaged in any foreign adventure. Spectator.

Peel'd, patch'd, and piebald, linsey-woolsey brothers,
Grave mummers! sleeveless some, and shirtless others. Pope.

PIECE. † n. s. [piece, Fr.]

1. A patch.

His coat of many colours, [in the margin pieces.]
Gen. xxxvii. 23.

No man putteth a piece of a new garment upon an old.
St. Luke, v. 36.

2. A part of a whole; a fragment.

Bring it out piece by piece. Ezek. xxiv. 26.

The chief captain, fearing lest Paul should have been pulled in pieces of them, commanded to take him by force.
Acts, xxiii. 10.

These lesser rocks or great bulky stones, that lie scattered in the sea or upon the land, are they not manifest fragments and pieces of these greater masses. Burnet.

A man that is in Rome can scarce see an object, that does not call to mind a piece of a Latin poet or historian. Addison.

3. A part.

It is accounted a piece of excellent knowledge, to know the laws of the land. Tillotson.

4. A picture.

If unnatural, the finest colours are but dawbing, and the piece is a beautiful monster at the best. Dryden.

Each heavenly piece unwearied we compare,
Match Raphael's grace with thy lov'd Guido's air. Pope.

5. A composition; performance.

He wrote several pieces, which he did not assume the honour of. Addison.

6. A single great gun.

A piece of ordnance 'gainst it I have plac'd. Shakspeare.

Many of the ships have brass pieces, whereas every piece at least requires four gunners to attend it. Ralegh, Ess.

Pyrrhus, with continual battery of great pieces, did batter the mount. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

7. A hand gun.

When he cometh to experience of service abroad, or is put to a piece or a pike, he maketh as worthy a soldier as any nation he meeteth with. Spenser.

The ball goes on in the direction of the stick, or of the body of the piece out of which it is shot. Cheyne.

8. A coin; a single piece of money.

When once the poet's honour ceases,
From reason far his transports rove;
And Boileau, for eight hundred pieces,
Makes Louis take the wall of Jove. Prior.

9. In ridicule and contempt: as, a piece of a lawyer, or smatterer. Dr. Johnson. — No example is given by Dr. Johnson here; but in a note on Titus Andronicus, he says that piece was then, as it is now, used personally as a word of contempt. He might have added, that it was also used without contempt.

Go, give that changing piece
To him that flourish'd for her with his sword. Titus Andronicus.

I had a wife, a passing princely peece,
Which far did passe that gallant girle of Greece.
Mir. for Mag. p. 208.

How doth he, though a better Pharisee, look awry, to see such a piece in his house! Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

10. Applied to time. [pieça, old Fr. piece, modern.] This is yet used in the north of England: stay a piece, i. e. a little while.

11. Castle; any building. Obsolete. [pieça, Span. a room.]

And evermore their wicked capytayn
Provoked them the breaches to assay,
Sometimes with threats, sometimes with hope of gayn,
Which by the ransack of that peece they should attayn.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. xi. 14.

All the peece he shaked from the floor.
Spenser, F. Q. v. ii. 21.

Of this town and peece, Conde de Fuentes had the command. Speed, Hist. of Gr. Brit. p. 1169.

12. A-PIECE. To each.

I demand, concerning all those creatures that have eyes and ears, whether they might not have had only one eye and one ear a-piece. More against Atheism.

13. Of a PIECE with. Like; of the same sort; united; the same with the rest.

Truth and fiction are so aptly mix'd,
That all seems uniform and of a piece. Roscommon.

When Jupiter granted petitions, a cockle made request, that his house and his body might be all of a piece. L'Estrange.

My own is of a piece with his, and were he living, they are such as he would have written. Dryden.

I appeal to my enemies, if I or any other man could have invented one which had been more of a piece, and more depending on the serious part of the design. Dryden.

Too justly ravish'd from an age like this;
Now she is gone, the world is of a piece. Dryden.

Nothing but madness can please madmen, and a poet must be of a piece with the spectators, to gain a reputation. Dryden.

To PIECE. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To patch.

Piers. O peerless poesy, where is then thy place?
If nor in prince's palace thou dost sit,
Ne brest of baser birth thee doth embrace,
Then make thee wings of thine aspiring wit,
And whence thou cam'st, flie back to heaven apace.
Cud. Ah, Percy, it is all-to weak and wan,
So high to soar, and make so large a flight;
Her peeced pyneons bene not so in plight.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Oct.

What use was there of those delegates for the piecing up of these domestick breaches betwixt husband and wife, if the imperious husband had power to right himself by turning the scold out of doors? Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. 4. C. 2.

2. To enlarge by the addition of a piece.

I speak too long, but 'tis to piece the time,
To draw it out in length. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

If aught within that little seeming substance,
Or all of it with our displeasure piec'd,
And nothing more may fitly like your grace,
She is yours. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Let him that was the cause of this have power
To take off so much grief from you as he
Will piece up in himself. Shakspeare.

Plant it with women as well as men, that it may spread into generations, and not be pieced from without. Bacon.

3. To join; to unite.

4. To PIECE out. To encrease by addition.

He pieces out his wife's inclination; he gives her folly motion and advantage. Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

Whether the piecing out of an old man's life is worth the pains, I cannot tell. Temple.

To PIECE. v. n. [from the noun.] To join; to coalesce; to be compacted.

The cunning priest chose Plantagenet to be the subject his pupil should personate; because he was more in the present speech of the people, and it pieced better and followed more close upon the bruit of Plantagenet's escape. Bacon.

PIE'CER.† n. s. [from piece.] One that pieces; a patcher. Sherwood.

PIE'CELESS. adj. [from piece.] Whole; compact; not made of separate pieces.

In those poor types of God, round circles; so
Religion's types, the pieceless centers flow,
And are in all the lines which always go. Donne.

PIE'CELY.* adv. [from piece.] In pieces. Not in use. Huloet.

PIE'CEMEAL. adv. [pice and mel; a word in Saxon of the same import.] In pieces; in fragments.

He strooke his helme, full where his plume did stand,
On which, it piece-meale brake, and fell from his unhappy hand.
Chapman.

Why did I not his carcass piecemeal tear,
And cast it in the sea. Denham.

I'll be torn piecemeal by a horse,
E'er I'll take you for better or worse. Hudibras.

Neither was the body then subject to distempers, to die by piecemeal, and languish under coughs or consumptions. South.

Piecemeal they win this acre first, then that;
Glean on, and gather up the whole estate. Pope.

PIE'CEMEAL. adj. Single; separate; divided.

Other blasphemies level; some at one attribute, some at another: but this by a more compendious impiety, shoots at his very being, and, as if it scorned these piecemeal guilts, sets up a single monster big enough to devour them all. Gov. of the Tongue.

Stage editors printed from the common piecemeal written parts in the playhouse. Pope.

PIE'CEMEAL.* n. s. A fragment; a scrap; a morsel.

My countrymen, in the revolution of 1000 years almost, afford but only Caradoc Llancarvan, and the continuance thereof, to register any thing to the purpose of the acts of the princes of Wales, that I could come by, or hear of; some few piecemeals excepted. R. Vaughan to Abp. Usher, Lett. p. 562.

PIE'CEMEALED.* adj. [from piecemeal.] Divided into small morsels or pieces. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

PIED. adj. [from pie.] Variegated; particoloured.

They desire to take such as have their feathers of pied, orient, and various colours. Abbot, Desc. of the World.

All the yeanlings which were streak'd and pied,
Should fall as Jacob's hire. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Pied cattle are spotted in their tongues. Bacon.

The seat, the soft wool of the bee,
The cover, gallantly to see,
The wing of a pied butterfly,
I trow 'twas simple trimming. Drayton.

Meadows trim with daisies pied,
Shallow brooks and rivers wide. Milton, L'All.

PIE'DNESS. n. s. [from pied.] Variegation; diversity of colour.

There is an art, which in their piedness shares
With great creating nature. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

PIE'LED.† adj. [peler, Fr. to pull the hair off.] Bald; bare: peeled: Cornish, pilez.

Piel'd priest, dost thou command me be shut out?—
I do. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Every head was made bald, and every shoulder was peeled.
Ezek. xxix. 18.

To PIEP.* v. n. To cry like a young bird. See To PEEP. Huloet.

PIEPO'WDER Court.† n. s. [Supposed by some to be from the Fr. pied, a foot, and pouldré, dusted, because justice was done to any injured person, before the dust of the fair was off his feet; by others from pied-pouldreux, a pedlar, because this court is to determine disputes between those who resort to fairs, and this kind of venders who generally attend them. See Brand's Pop. Antiq. ii. 322.—It should seem to be from the circumstance of fairs being in summer, and the suitors being persons with dusty feet. For though pie-poudreux, or pied-pouldreux, is found in old French for a travelling vender, as also for one of a wandering disposition; yet our pedlar, as Dr. Johnson has observed, may be rather from petty dealer, which will remove the application of pedlar to the court of piepowder. Our old writers evidently thus considered pedlar as petty dealer: "Light wanderers and pelting [i. e. petty] sellers, who carry about and sell pinnes, points, and other small trifles, whom they call pedlars." Booke of Certaine Canons, 1571, C. ii. b. "To tender a trade of so invaluable a commodity to these pelting petty chapmen!" Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4. Piepowder may be considered therefore as simply from the Fr. poudre des piez, dust of the feet, without particular reference to pedlars.] A court held in fairs for redress of all disorders committed therein.

The court of conscience, which in man
Should be supreme and sovereign,
Is't fit should be subordinate
To every petty court i'the state,
And have less power than the lesser,
To deal with perjury at pleasure?
Have its proceedings disallow'd, or
Allow'd, at fancy of pie-powder? Hudibras, ii. ii.

PIER.† n. s. [peꞃ, peꞃe, Sax. pila, moles; pierre, French.]

1. A column on which the arch of a bridge is raised.

Oak, cedar, and chesnut are the best builders; for piers, sometimes wet, sometimes dry, take elm. Bacon.

The English took the galley, and drew it to shore, and used the stones to reinforce the pier. Hayward.

The bridge, consisting of four arches, is of the length of six hundred and twenty-two English feet and an half: the dimensions of the arches are as follows, in English measure; the height of the first arch one hundred and nine feet, the distance between the piers seventy-two feet and an half; in the second arch, the distance of the piers is one hundred and thirty feet; in the third the distance is one hundred and nine feet; in the fourth the distance is one hundred and thirty-eight feet. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. A projecting mole erected in the sea, to break the force of the waves.

A peer [pier] is from petra, because of the congestion of great stones to the raising up of such a pile: 'tis a kind of small artificial creek or sinus, as the pier of Dover, the pier of of Portland, &c. Gregory, Posthum. (1640,) p. 328.

To PIERCE. v. a. [percer, Fr.]

1. To penetrate; to enter; to force a way into.

Steed threatens steed in high and boastful neighs,
Piercing the night's dull ear. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

The love of money is the root of all evil; which, while some coveted after, they have pierced themselves through with many sorrows. 1 Tim. vi. 10.

With this fatal sword, on which I dy'd,
I pierce her open'd back or tender side. Dryden.
The glorious temple shall arise,
And with new lustre pierce the neighbouring skies. Prior.

2. To touch the passions; to affect.

Did your letters pierce the queen?
She read them in my presence,
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down. Shakspeare.

To PIERCE. v. n.

1. To make way by force into or through any thing.

Her sighs will make a battery in his breast;
Her tears will pierce into a marble heart. Shakspeare.

Short arrows, called sprights, without any other heads, save wood sharpened, were discharged out of muskets, and would pierce through the sides of ships, where a bullet would not pierce. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. To strike; to move; to affect.

Say, she be mute, and will not speak a word;
Then I'll commend her volubility;
And say she uttereth piercing eloquence. Shakspeare.

3. To enter; to dive as into a secret.

She would not pierce further into his meaning, than himself should declare, so would she interpret all his doings to be accomplished in goodness. Sidney.

All men knew Nathaniel to be an Israelite; but our Saviour piercing deeper, giveth further testimony of him than men could have done. Hooker.

4. To affect severely.

They provide more piercing statutes daily to chain up the poor. Shakspeare.

PIE'RCEABLE.* adj. [from To pierce.] That may be penetrated.

A shadie grove—
Whose loftie trees yclad with sommer's pride,
Did spread so broad that heaven's light did hide,
Not perceable with power of any star. Spenser, F. Q. i. i. 7.

PIE'RCER. n. s. [from pierce.]

1. An instrument that bores or penetrates.

Cart, ladder, and wimble, with perser and pod. Tusser.

2. The part with which insects perforate bodies.

The hollow instrument, terebra, we may English piercer, wherewith many flies are provided, proceeding from the womb, with which they perforate the tegument of leaves, and through the hollow of it, inject their eggs into the holes they have made. Ray on the Creation.

3. One who perforates.

PIE'RCING.* n. s. [from pierce.] Penetration.

There is that speaketh like the piercings of a sword; but the tongue of the wise is health. Prov. xii. 18.

PIE'RCINGLY.† adv. [from pierce.] Sharply. Sherwood.

PIE'RCINGNESS. n. s. [from piercing.] Power of piercing.

We contemplate the vast reach and compass of our understanding, the prodigious quickness and piercingness of its thought. Derham, Phys. Theol.

PI'ET, or PI'OT.* n. s. [from pie.] A magpie: so called in some parts of England.

PI'ETISM.* n. s. [from piety.] A kind of extremely strict devotion. See PIETIST.

They have not stuck more than once openly to declare in their meetings, that they would not give over till they had driven pietism out of their community, root and branch. Frey, cited by Bp. Lavington, Morav. Comp. p. 47.

PI'ETIST.* n. s. [from piety.] One of a sect professing great strictness and purity of life, despising learning and ecclesiastical polity; a kind of mystick. The sect sprung up in the latter part of the seventeenth century.

The breach, that ran through the Lutheran churches, appeared at first openly at Hamburgh, where many were going into stricter methods of piety, who from thence were called Pietists. Burnet, Hist. of his Own Times, (under K. William.)

There is a new sect sprung up in Switzerland, which spreads very much in the Protestant cantons. The professors of it call themselves Pietists; and as enthusiasm carries men generally to the like extravagancies, they differ but little from several sectaries in other countries. They pretend in general to great refinements, as to what regards the practice of Christianity. Addison, Remarks on Italy.

What mention is there ever made of the refined transports of seraphick love, and all the other fanciful abstractions of monastick and recluse pietists? Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 1.

PI'ETY. n. s. [pietas, Lat. pieté, Fr.]

1. Discharge of duty to God.

What piety, pity, fortitude, did Æneas possess beyond his companions? Peacham on Poetry.

Till future infancy, baptiz'd by thee,
Grow ripe in years, and old in piety. Prior.
There be who faith
Prefer, and piety to God. Milton, P. L.

Praying for them would make them as glad to see their servants eminent in piety as themselves. Law.

2. Duty to parents or those in superiour relation.

Pope's filial piety excels,
Whatever Grecian story tells. Swift.

PIG.† n. s. [bigge, Teut. pic, Sax. pic-bpeð, glans.]

1. A young sow or boar.

Some men there are, love not a gaping pig,
Some that are mad, if they behold a cat. Shakspeare.
Alba, from the white sow nam'd,
That for her thirty sucking pigs was fam'd. Dryden.

The flesh-meats of an easy digestion, are pig, lamb, rabbit, and chicken. Floyer on the Humours.

2. An oblong mass of lead or unforged iron, or mass of metal melted from the oar is called, I know not why, sow-metal, and pieces of that metal are called pigs.

A nodding beam or pig of lead,
May hurt the very ablest head. Pope.

To PIG. v. n. [from the noun.] To farrow; to bring pigs.

PI'GEON. n. s. [pigeon, Fr.] A fowl bred in cots or a small house: in some places called dovecot.

This fellow picks up wit as pigeons peas. Shakspeare.

A turtle dove and a young pigeon. Gen. xv. 9.

Perceiving that the pigeon had lost a piece of her tail, through the next opening of the rocks rowing with all their might, they passed safe, only the end of their poop was bruised. Raleigh.

Fix'd in the mast, the feather'd weapon stands,
The fearful pigeon flutters in her bands. Dryden.

See the cupola of St. Paul's covered with both sexes, like the outside of a pigeon-house. Addison, Guardian.

This building was design'd a model,
Or of a pigeon-house or oven,
To bake one loaf, or keep one dove in. Swift.

PI'GEONFOOT. n. s. [geranium.] An herb. Ainsworth.

PI'GEONHEARTED.* adj. [pigeon and heart.] Timid; frightened.

I never saw such pigeon-hearted people: what drum? what danger? who's that that shakes behind there? Beaum. and Fl. Pilgrim.

PI'GEONHOLES.* n. s.

1. The title of an old English game; so called from the arches in the machine, through which balls were rolled, resembling the cavities made for pigeons in a dove-house. Steevens.

Threepence I lost at ninepins; but I got
Six tokens towards that at pigeon-holes. The Antipodes, (1638.)

2. Cavities, or divisions, in which letters and papers are deposited.

Abbé Sieyes has whole nests of pigeon-holes full of constitutions ready made, ticketed, sorted, and numbered. Burke.

PI'GEONLIVERED. adj. [pigeon and liver.] Mild; soft; gentle.

I am pigeonliver'd, and lack gall
To make oppression bitter. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

PI'GGIN.† n. s. In the northern provinces, a small wooden vessel. Dr. Johnson. — It is not confined to the north, and is an old word in our language, though Dr. Johnson has cited no authority for it. Is is also in Sherwood's dictionary.

Of drinking cups divers sorts we have: some of elm: — broad-mouthed dishes, noggins, whiskins, piggins.
Heywood, Drunkard Opened, &c. (1635,) p. 45.

PIGHE'ADED.* adj. [pig and head.] Having a large head: a word still vulgarly applied to a stupid person.

Come forward; you should be some dull tradesman by your pig-headed sconce now, that think there's nothing good any where, but what's to be sold. B. Jonson, Masques.

PIGHT. old preter. and part. pass. of pitch. Pitched; placed; fixed; determined. Not now in use.

The body big and mightily pight,
Thoroughly rooted and wondrous height,
Whilom had been the king of the field,
And mochel mast to the husband did yield. Spenser, Shep. Cal.
An hideous rock is pight,
Of mighty Magnes stone; whose craggy clift,
Depending from on high, dreadful to sight,
Over the waves his rugged arms doth lift. Spenser, F. Q.
Then brought she me into this desart vast,
And by my wretched lover's side me pight. Spenser, F. Q.
Stay yet, you vile abominable tents,
Thus proudly pight upon our Phyrgian plains.
Shakspeare, Tr. and Cres.
I dissuaded him from his intent,
And found him pight to do it. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

To PIGHT.* v. a. [perhaps from pigg, Su. Goth. stimulus; picka, Swed. to prick.] To pierce. Obsolete.

Thei schulen se into whom thei pighten thorough.
Wicliffe, St. John, xix. 37.

PI'GMY. n. s. [pigmée, Fr. pygmæus, Lat. πυγμαῖος.] One of a small nation, fabled to be devoured by the cranes; thence any thing mean or inconsiderable: it should be written with a y, pygmy.

Of so low a stature, that in relation to the other, they appear as pigmies. Heylin.

When cranes invade, his little sword and shield
The pigmy takes. Dryden, Juv.
The criticks of a more exalted taste, may discover such beauties in the antient poetry, as may escape the comprehension of us pigmies of a more limited genius. Garth.
But that it wanted room,
It might have been a pigmy's tomb. Swift.

PI'GMY.* adj. Small; little; short.

The sun is gone: but yet Castara stays,
And will add stature to thy pigmy days.
Habington's Castara, To Winter, p. 62.

PIGNORA'TION.† n. s. [pignoration, old Fr. from pignus, pignoris, Lat.] The act of pledging. Cockeram.

PI'GNORATIVE.* [pignoratif, Fr. From pignoration.] Pledging; pawning. Bullokar.

PI'GNUT. n. s. [pig and nut.] An earth nut.

I with my long nails will dig thee pignuts. Shakspeare.

PI'GSNEY.† n. s. [pɪʒa, Sax. a girl. Lye, and Dr. Johnson. — The Romans used oculus (the eye) as a term of endearment, and perhaps piggesnie, in vulgar language, only means ocellus, (little eye,) the eyes of a pig being remarkably small. Tyrwhitt. — There is good reason for this etymology, which escaped Mr. Tyrwhitt's notice, as it has since that of Mr. Douce, who differs from Mr. Tyrwhitt, saying "that nie cannot well be put for eye; that in this case the word would have been pigseye; and that it is rather formed from the Sax. pɪʒa, a girl:" there is good reason, I say, for agreeing with Mr. Tyrwhitt, if it can be shewn that the word has been written pigseye, and that this term of endearment was not confined to girls. And this a learned correspondent has enabled me to do, in the citation from the translated work of bishop Gardiner. Piggesny, now pigsney, is old in our language.]

1. A word of endearment.

She was a primerole, a piggesnie. Chaucer, Mill. Tale.
What prate ye, pretty pyggys ny. Skelton, Poems, p 259.
How pretely she could talke to him, Howe doth my swete heart, what sayth noume pigs eie?
Bp. Gardiner's De Obed. Tr. (Roane, 1553,) sign. k. ii.
Pretty diminutives, pleasant names, may be invented; bird, mouse, lamb, puss, pigeon, pigsney, kid, honey!
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 527.

2. It is used by Butler for the eye of a woman, I believe, improperly.

Shine upon me but benignly
With that one, and that other pigsney. Hudibras.

PI'GTAIL.* n. s. [pig and tail.]

1. A cue; the hair tied behind in a ribbon so as to resemble the tail of a pig. A low expression.

2. A kind of twisted tobacco, having a similar resemblance. A ludicrous term.

I bequeath to Mr. John Grattan, prebendary of Clonmethan, my silver box in which the freedom of the city of Corke was presented to me; in which I desire the said John to keep the tobacco he usually cheweth, called pigtail. Swift's Will.

PIGWI'DGEON. n. s. This word is used by Drayton as the name of a fairy, and is a kind of cant word for any thing petty or small.

Where is the Stoick can his wrath appease,
To see his country sick of Pym's disease;
By Scotch invasion to be made a prey
To such pigwidgeon myrmidons as they? Cleaveland.

PIKE.† n. s. [picque, Fr. his snout being sharp. Skinner and Junius.]

1. The luce or pike is the tyrant of the fresh waters: Sir Francis Bacon observes the pike to be the longest lived of any fresh water fish, and yet he computes it to be not usually above forty years; and others think it to be not above ten years: he is a solitary, melancholy and bold fish; he breeds but once a year, and his time of breeding or spawning is usually about the end of February, or somewhat later, in March, as the weather proves colder or warmer: and his manner of breeding is thus; a he and a she pike will usually go together out of a river into some ditch or creek, and there the spawner casts her eggs, and the melter hovers over her all the time she is casting her spawn, but touches her not. Walton, Angler.

In a pond into which were put several fish and two pikes upon drawing it some years afterwards there were left no fish, but the pikes grown to a prodigious size, having devoured the other fish and their numerous spawn. Hale.

The pike, the tyrant of the floods. Pope.

2. A long lance used by the foot soldiers, to keep off the horse, to which bayonets have succeeded. [picque, or pique, Fr. picken, Germ. picka, Icel. pungere.]

Beat you the drum that it speak mournfully,
Trail your steel pikes. Shakspeare, Coriol.

He wanted pikes to set before his archers. Shakspeare.

They closed, and locked shoulder to shoulder, their pikes they strained in both hands and therewith their buckler in the left, the one end of the pike against the right foot, the other breast high against the enemy. Hayward.

A lance he bore with iron pike;
Th' one half would thrust, the other strike. Hudibras.

3. A fork used in husbandry; a pitch-fork.

A rake for to rake up the fitches that lie,
A pike to pike them up handsome to drie. Tusser.

Let us revenge this with our pikes, ere we become rakes; for I speak this in hunger for bread, not for revenge. Shakspeare.

4. A peak; a point. [pic, old Fr. pico, Span.]

The whole compass of this mountain is esteemed to be about 160 miles. The high pique or peer thereof is properly called Athos. Ricaut, State of the Greek Church, p. 217.

It was ordained in the Parliament of Westminster anno 1463, Ap. 29. "that no man weare shoes or boots, having pikes passing two inches in length." Bryant, Observ. on Rowley's Poems.

5. Among turners, two iron sprigs between which any thing to be turned is fastened.

Hard wood, prepared for the lathe with rasping, they pitch between the pikes. Moxon.

PI'KED.† adj. [piqué, Fr.] Sharp; acuminated; ending in a point. In Shakspeare, it is used of a man with a pointed beard, Dr. Johnson says, citing the following passage; in which it is supposed by later commentators to mean merely picked, or spruce in dress. See PICKED.

Why then I suck my teeth, and catechise
My piked man of countries. Shakspeare, K. John.

Their shoes and pattens are snouted and piked more than a finger long. Camden, Rem.

PI'KELET.* } n. s. In the north of England, a light

Three great squadrons of pikemen were placed against the enemy. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

PI'KESTAFF. n. s. [pike and staff.] The wooden pole of a pike.

To me it is as plain as a pikestaff, from what mixture it is, that this daughter silently lours, t'other steals a kind look. Tatler.

PILA'STER. n. s. [pilastre, Fr. pilastro, Italian.] A square column sometimes insulated, but oftener set within a wall, and only shewing a fourth or a fifth part of its thickness. Dict.

Pilasters must not be too tall and slender, lest they resemble pillars; nor too dwarfish and gross, lest they imitate the piles or piers of bridges. Wotton.

Built like a temple, where pilasters round
Were set. Milton, P. L.

The curtain rises, and a new frontispiece is seen, joined to the great pilasters each side of the stage. Dryden.

Clap four slices of pilaster on't,
That laid with bits of rustick makes a front. Pope.

PILCH.* n. s. [pylca, pylece, Sax. from pellis, Lat.] A cloke or coat of skins; a furred gown. See PILCHER.

After grete hete comith colde,
No man caste his pilche away. Chaucer, Prov. ver. 4.

I'll beat five pounds out of his leather pilch.
Decker, Satiromastix, (1602.)

A grey furred coat, or pilch. Blount, Anc. Ten. p. 38.

PI'LCHARD.* n. s. The fish, called also pilcher. But pilchard is now the more usual term.

Fools are as like husbands, as pilchards are to herrings.
Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

PI'LCHER.† n. s. [Warburton says we should read pilch, which signifies a cloke or coat of skins, meaning the scabbard: this is confirmed by Junius, who renders pilly, a garment of skins; pylece, Sax. pellice, Fr. pelliccia, Italian; pellis, Lat.]

1. A furred gown or case; any thing lined with fur. Hanmer.

Will you pluck your sword out of his pilcher by the ears?
Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

2. A fish like a herring much caught in Cornwall.

The foundation of the church of Harlem is supported by wooden piles, as the houses in Amsterdam are. Locke.

2. A heap; an accumulation.

That is the way to lay the city flat,
And bury all which yet distinctly ranges
In heaps and piles of ruin. Shakspeare.

What piles of wealth hath he accumulated
To his own portion! what expence by the hour
Seems to flow from him! how i' the name of thrift,
Does he rake this together. Shakspeare.

By the water passing through the stone to its perpendicular intervals, was brought thither all the metallic matter now lodged therein, as well as that which lies only in an undigested and confused pile. Woodward.

3. Any thing heaped together to be burned.

I'll bear your logs the while; pray give me it,
I'll carry't to the pile. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Woe to the bloody city, I will even make the pile for fire great. Ezek. xxiv. 9.

In Alexander's time, the Indian philosophers, when weary of living, lay down upon their funeral pile without any visible concern. Collier on the Value of Life.

The wife, and counsellor or priest,
Prepare and light his fun'ral fire,
And cheerful on the pile expire. Prior.

4. An edifice; a building.

The ascending pile stood fix'd her stately highth. Milton, P. L.

Not to look back so far, to whom this isle
Owes the first glory of so brave a pile. Denham.
The pile o'erlook'd the town, and drew the sight. Dryden.
Fancy brings the vanish'd piles to view,
And builds imaginary Rome anew. Pope, Miscell.
No longer shall forsaken Thames
Lament his old Whitehall in flames;
A pile shall from its ashes rise,
Fit to invade or prop the skies. Swift, Miscell.

5. A hair. [pilus, Lat.]

Yonder's my lord, with a patch of velvet on's face; his left cheek is a cheek of two pile and a half, but his right cheek is worn bare. Shakspeare, All's Well.

7. [Pilum, Lat.] The head of an arrow.

Whom, on his haire-plum'd helmet's crest, the dart first smote, then ran
Into his forehead, and there stucke the steele pile, making way
Quite through his skull. Chapman.
His spear a bent,
The pile was of a horsefly's tongue,
Whose sharpness nought revers'd Drayton, Nymph.

8. [Pile, Fr. pila, Italian. Serenius derives this meaning from pil, (Lat. pilum,) an arrow, or the head of an arrow; the side of the coin having such a figure upon it: Henault, from pillars, as the stamp upon it: others from the Lat. pileus, a cap or hat; or from the old Fr. pile, a ship.] One side of a coin; the reverse of cross.

Other men have been, and are of the same opinion, a man may more justifiably throw up cross and pile for his opinions, than take them up so. Locke.

9. [In the plural piles.] The hæmorrhoids.

Wherever there is any uneasiness, solicit the humours towards that part, to procure the piles, which seldom miss to relieve the head. Arbuthnot.

To PILE. v. a.

1. To heap; to coacervate.

The fabrick of his folly, whose foundation
Is pil'd upon his faith, and will continue
The standing of his body. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.
Let them pull all about my ears,
Pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might downstretch
Below the beam of sight, yet will I still Be thus. Shakspeare.
Against beleaguer'd heaven the giants move;
Hills pil'd on hills, on mountains mountains lie
To make their mad approaches to the sky. Dryden.
Men pil'd on men, with active leaps arise,
And build the breathing fabrick to the skies. Addison.
In all that heap of quotations which he has piled up, nothing is aimed at. Atterbury.

The consul Mummius, after having beaten their army, took, pillaged, and burnt, their city. Arbuthnot on Coins.

PI'LLAGER.† n. s. [from pillage.] A plunderer; a spoiler.

Jove's seed, the pillager,
Stood close before, and slackt the force the arrow did confer. Chapman.

[He] left the pillagers, to rapine bred,
Without controul to strip and spoil the dead. Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

PI'LLAR. n. s. [pilier, Fr. pilar, Spanish; pilastro, Italian; piler, Welsh and Armorick.]

1. A column.

Pillars or columns, I could distinguish into simple and compounded. Wotton on Architecture.

The palace built by Picus vast and proud,
Supported by a hundred pillars stood. Dryden.

2. A supporter; a maintainer.

Give them leave to fly, that will not stay;
And call them pillars that will stand to us. Shakspeare.

Note, and you shall see in him
The triple pillar of the world transform'd
Into a strumpet's stool. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

I charge you by the law,
Whereof you are a well-deserving pillar,
Proceed to judgement. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

PI'LLARED. adj. [from pillar.]

1. Supported by columns.

If this fail,
The pillar'd firmament is rottenness,
And earth's base built on stubble. Milton, Comus.

A pillar'd shade
High overarch'd, and echoing walks between. Milton, P. L.

2. Having the form of a column.

Th' infuriate hill shoots forth the pillar'd flame. Thomson.

PI'LLED-GARLICK.† n. s.

An opera, like a pillory, may be said
To nail our ears down, but expose our head. Young.

To PI'LLORY. v. a. [pillorier, Fr. from the noun.] To punish with the pillory.

To be burnt in the hand or pilloried, is a more lasting reproach than to be scourged or confin'd. Gov. of the Tongue.

PI'LLOW. n. s. [pyle, Saxon; pulewe, Dutch.] A bag of down or feathers laid under the head to sleep on.

Pluck stout men's pillows from below their heads. Shakspeare.

One turf shall serve as pillow for us both,
One heart, one bed, two bosoms, and one troth. Shakspeare.

A merchant died that was very far in debt, his goods and household stuff were set forth to sale; a stranger would needs buy a pillow there, saying, this pillow sure is good to sleep on, since he could sleep on it that owed so many debts. Bacon.

Thy maiden bud,
Corrupted by thy lover's gold,
His letter at thy pillow laid. Donne.

Their feathers serve to stuff our beds and pillows, yielding us soft and warm lodging. Ray on the Creation.

To PI'LLOW. v. a. To rest any thing on a pillow.

When the sun in bed,
Curtain'd with cloudy red,
Pillows his chin upon an orient wave,
The flocking shadows pale
Troop to th' infernal jail. Milton, Ode Nat.

PI'LLOWBEAR.† } n. s. The cover of a pillow.
PI'LLOWCASE. }

In his male he had a pilwbere. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

When you put a clean pillowcase on your lady's pillow, fasten it well with pins. Swift.

PILO'SITY. n. s. [from pilosus, Lat.] Hairiness.

At the years of puberty, all effects of heat do then come on, as pilosity, more roughness in the skin. Bacon.

PI'LOT.† n. s. [pilote, Fr. piloot, Dutch; from pile, old Fr. a ship.] He whose office is to steer the ship.

When her keel ploughs hell,
And deck knocks heaven; then to manage her,
Becomes the name and office of a pilot. B. Jonson.

To death I with such joy resort,
As seamen from a tempest to their port;
Yet to that port ourselves we must not force,
Before our pilot, Nature, steers our course. Denham.

What port can such a pilot find,
Who in the night of fate must blindly steer? Dryden.

The Roman fleet, although built by shipwrights, and conducted by pilots without experience, defeated that of the Carthaginians. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To PI'LOT.† v. a. [from the noun.] To steer; to direct in the course.

Where the people are well educated, the art of piloting a state is best learned from the writings of Plato. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 332.

PI'LOTAGE. n. s. [pilotage, Fr. from pilot.]

1. Pilot's skill; knowledge of coasts.

We must for ever abandon the Indies, and lose all our knowledge and pilotage of that part of the world. Raleigh.

2. A pilot's hire. Ainsworth.

PI'LOTISM.* n. s. [from pilot.] Pilotage; skill of a pilot. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

PI'LOTRY.* n. s. [from pilot.] Skill of a pilot.

As a ship is the end of shipbuilding, or navigating the end of pilotry. Harris, Three Treat. Notes, § 15.

PI'LOUS. adj. [pilosus, Lat.] Hairy; full of hairs.

That hair is not poison, though taken in a great quantity, is proved by the excrements of voracious dogs, which is seen to be very pilous. Dr. Robinson, Endoxa, &c. (1658,) p. 124.

PI'LSER. n. s. The moth or fly that runs into a flame. Ainsworth.

He sent her piment, methe, and spiced ale. Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

PIME'NTA.† } n. s. [piment, Fr.] A kind of spice.
PIME'NTO. }

Pimenta, from its round figure, and the place whence it is brought, has been called Jamaica pepper, and from its mixt flavour of the several aromaticks, it has obtained the name of all-spice: it is a fruit gathered before it is ripe, and resembles cloves more than any other spice. Hill, Mat. Med.

The pimento trees grow spontaneously, and in great abundance, in many parts of Jamaica, but more particularly on hilly situations near the sea, on the northern side of the island; where they form the most delicious groves that can possibly be imagined, filling the air with fragrance. Edwards, Hist. of the West Indies.

PIMP. n. s. [pinge, Fr. Skinner.] One who provides gratifications for the lust of others; a procurer; a pander.

I'm courted by all
As principal pimp to the mighty king Harry. Addison.

Lords keep a pimp to bring a wench;
So men of wit are but a kind
Of panders to a vicious mind;
Who proper objects must provide
To gratify their lust of pride. Swift.

To PIMP. v. n. [from the noun.] To provide gratifications for the lust of others; to pander; to procure.

But he's possest with a thousand imps,
To work whose ends his madness pimps. Swift.

PI'MPERNELL. n. s. [pimpernella, Latin; pimprenelle, Fr.] A plant. Miller.

PIMPINE'LLA.* n. s. A plant. See BURNET.

PI'MPING. adj. [pimple mensch, a weak man, Dutch.] Little; petty: as, a pimping thing. Skinner.

PI'MPLE.† n. s. [pimpel, Sax.] A small red pustule.

If Rosalinda is unfortunate in her mole, Nigranilla is as unhappy in a pimple. Addison, Spect.

If e'er thy gnome could spoil a grace,
Or raise a pimple on a beauteous face. Pope.

The rising of a pimple in her face, the sting of a gnat, will make her keep her room two or three days. Law.

PI'MPLED. adj. [from pimple.] Having red pustules; full of pimples: as, his face is pimpled.

PIN. n. s. [espingle, Fr. spina, spinula, Lat. spilla, Italian; rather from pennum, low Lat. Isidore.]

1. A short wire with a sharp point and round head, used by women to fasten their clothes.

I'll make thee eat iron like an ostridge, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part. Shakspeare.

Whatever spirit, careless of his charge,
His post neglects, or leaves the fair at large,
Shall feel sharp vengeance soon o'ertake his sins,
Be stopt in vials, or transfixt with pins. Pope.

2. Any thing inconsiderable or of little value.

Soon after comes the cruel Saracen,
In woven mail all armed warily,
And sternly looks at him, who not a pin
Does care for look of living creature's eye. Spenser.

His fetch is to flatter to get what he can;
His purpose once gotten, a pin for thee than. Tusser.

Tut, a pin: this shall be answer'd. Shakspeare.

'Tis foolish to appeal to witnesses for proof, when 'tis not a pin matter whether the fact be true or false. L'Estrange.

The skilful artisan had taken it [a watch] in hand, and curiously pinned the joints. Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 9.

If a word or two more are added upon the chief offenders, 'tis only a paper pinn'd upon the breast. Pope.

Not Cynthia when her manteau's pinn'd awry,
E'er felt such rage. Pope.

2. To fasten; to make fast.

Our gates,
Which yet seem shut, we have but pinn'd with rushes;
They'll open of themselves. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. To join; to fix: to fasten.

She lifted the princess from the earth, and so locks her in embracing, as if she would pin her to her heart. Shakspeare.

If removing my consideration from the impression of the cubes to the cubes themselves, I shall pin this one notion upon every one of them, and accordingly conceive it to be really in them; it will fall out that I allow existence to other entities, which never had any. Digby of Bodies.

I've learn'd how far I'm to believe
Your pinning oaths upon your sleeve. Hudibras.

They help to cozen themselves, by chusing to pin their faith on such expositors as explain the sacred Scripture, in favour of those opinions that they beforehand have voted orthodox. Locke.

It cannot be imagined, that so able a man should take so much pains to pin so closely on his friend a story which, if he himself thought incredible, he could not but also think ridiculous. Locke.

. [pynban, Sax.] To shut up; to inclose; to confine: as, in pinfold. This is written also pen.

If all this be willingly granted by us, which are accused to pin the word of God in so narrow room, let the cause of the accused be referred to the accuser's conscience. Hooker.

PINA'STER.* n. s. [Latin.] The wild pine.

PI'NCHBECK.* n. s. [from the name of the inventor.] Mixed gold-coloured metal.

PI'NCHFIST.† } PI'NCHPENNY. } n. s. [pinch, fist, and penny.] A miser. Huloet, and Ainsworth.

PI'NCUSHION. n. s. [pin and cushion.] A small bag stuffed with bran or wool, on which pins are stuck.

She would ruin me in silks, were not the quantity, that goes to a large pincushion, sufficient to make her a gown and petticoat. Addison, Guardian.

Thou art a retailer of phrases, and dost deal in remnants of remnants, like a maker of pincushions. Congreve.

PINDA'RICK.* n. s. An irregular ode; so named from a pretended imitation of the odes of the Grecian poet Pindar.

Can any thing be more ridiculous than for men of a sober and moderate fancy, to imitate this poet's way of writing in those monstrous compositions which go among us under the name of Pindaricks? Addison, Spect. No. 160.

PINDA'RICK.* adj. After the style or manner of Pindar.

You will find, by the account which I have already given you, that my compositions in gardening are altogether after the Pindarick manner, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without affecting the nicer elegancies of art. Addison, Spect. No. 477.

If the Pindarick style be, what Cowley thinks it, the highest and noblest kind of writing in verse, it can be adapted only to high and noble spirits. Johnson, Life of Cowley.

PI'NDUST. n. s. [pin and dust.] Small particles of metal made by pointing pins.

The little parts of pindust, when mingled with sand, cannot, by their mingling, make it lighter. Digby.

PINE.† n. s. [pinus, Lat. pin, French; pinn, Sax.] The pine-tree hath amentaceous flowers or katkins, which are produced at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree; the seeds are produced in squamous cones: to which should be added that the leaves are longer than those of a fir-tree, and are produced by pairs out of each sheath. Miller.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heaven. Shakspeare.
Thus droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprayes;
Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her younger days. Shakspeare.

To PINE. v. n. [pinan, Sax. pijnen, Dutch.]

1. To languish; to wear away with any kind of misery.

My hungry eyes through greedy covetise,
With no contentment can themselves suffice;
But having, pine, and having not, complain. Spenser.
I burn, I pine, I perish,
If I atchieve not this young modest girl. Shakspeare.

Since my young lady's going into France, the fool hath much pined away. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

See, see the pining malady of France,
Behold the most unnatural wounds,
Which thou thyself hast given her woful breast. Shakspeare.

Ye shall not mourn, but pine away for your iniquities. Ezek. xxiv. 23.

The wicked with anxiety of mind
Shall pine away; in sighs consume their breath. Sandys.
To me, who with eternal famine pine,
Alike is hell, or paradise, or heaven. Milton, P. L.
Farewell the year, which threaten'd so
The fairest light the world can show;
Welcome the new, whose every day,
Restoring what was snatch'd away
By pining sickness from the fair,
That matchless beauty does repair. Waller.
This night shall see the gaudy wreath decline,
The roses wither, and the lilies pine. Tickell.

2. To languish with desire.

We may again
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives,
Do faithful homage, and receive free honours:
All which we pine for. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

We stood amaz'd to see your mistress mourn,
Unknowing that she pin'd for your return. Dryden.
Your new commander need not pine for action. Philips.

To PINE.† v. a.

1. To wear out; to make to languish.

Part us; I towards the north,
Where shivering cold and sickness pines the clime. Shakspeare.

One is pined in prison; another tortur'd on the rack; a third languisheth under the loss of a dear son, wife, or husband. Bp. Hall, Breath. of the Devout Soul, § 27.

Look rather on my pale cheek pin'd;
There view your beauties, there you'll find
A fair face, but a cruel mind. Carew.
Beroe, pin'd with pain,
Her age and anguish from these rites detain. Dryden.

2. To grieve for; to bemoan in silence.

Abash'd the devil stood,
And felt how awful goodness is, and saw
Virtue in her shape how lovely; saw, and pin'd
His loss. Milton, P. L.

PINE.* n. s. [pin, Saxon; pyne, Teut.] Woe; want; suffering of any kind.

My sheepe —
All were they lustie as thou diddest see,
Bene all starved with pyne and penury. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.
His raw-bone cheeks, through penurie and pine,
Were shronke into his jawes. Spenser, F. Q.
Women, mony, and wine,
Have their good and their pine. Proverbs in Wodroephe's Fr. Gramm. (1623,) p. 484.
On all their weary ways wait care and pain
And pine and penury a meagre train. Pope, Odyss.

PI'NEAPPLE. n. s. The Anana named for its resemblance to the cone of pines.

The pineapple hath a flower consisting of one leaf, divided into three parts, and is funnel-shaped: the embryos are produced in the tubercles: these become a fleshy fruit full of juice: the seeds, which are lodged in the tubercles, are very small and almost kidney-shaped. Miller.

Try if any words can give the taste of a pineapple, and make one have the true idea of its relish. Locke.

If a child were kept where he never saw but black and white, he would have no more ideas of scarlet, than he that never tasted a pineapple, has of that particular relish. Locke.

PI'NEAL. adj. [pineale, Fr.] Resembling a pineapple. An epithet given by Des Cartes from the form, to the gland which he imagined the seat of the soul.

Courtiers and spaniels exactly resemble one another in the pineal gland. Arbuthnot and Pope.

PI'NHOLE. n. s. [pin and hole.] A small hole, such as is made by the perforation of a pin.

The breast at first broke in a small pinhole. Wiseman.

PI'NION. n. s. [pignon, Fr.]

1. The joint of the wing remotest from the body.
2. Shakspeare seems to use it for a feather or quill of the wing.

He is pluckt, when hither
He sends so poor a pinion of his wing. Shakspeare.

3. Wing.

How oft do they with golden pinions cleave
The flitting skies, like flying pursuivant. Spenser.
The God, who mounts the winged winds,
Fast to his feet the golden pinions binds,
That high through fields of air his flight sustain. Pope.
Though fear should lend him pinions like the wind,
Yet swifter fate will seize him from behind. Swift.

4. The tooth of a smaller wheel, answering to that of a larger.
5. Fetters or bonds for the arms. Ainsworth.

To PI'NION. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind the wings.

Whereas they have sacrificed to themselves, they become sacrifices to the inconstancy of fortune, whose wings they thought by their self-wisdom to have pinioned. Bacon.

2. To confine by binding the wings; to maim by cutting off the first joint of the wing.
3. To bind the arm to the body.

A second spear sent with equal force,
His right arm pierc'd, and holding on, bereft
His use of both, and pinion'd down his left. Dryden.

4. To confine by binding the elbows to the sides.

Swarming at his back the country cry'd,
And seiz'd and pinion'd brought to court the knight. Dryden.

5. To shackle; to bind.

Know, that I will not wait pinion'd at your master's court: rather make my country's high pyramids my gibbet, and hang me up in chains. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

You are not to go loose any longer, you must be pinion'd. Shakspeare.

O loose this frame, this knot of man untie!
That my free soul may use her wing,
Which now is pinion'd with mortality,
As an entangled, hamper'd thing. Herbert.
In vain from chains and fetters free,
The great man boasts of liberty;
He's pinion'd up by formal rules of state. Norris.

6. To bind to. This is not proper.

So by each bard an Alderman shall sit,
A heavy load shall hang at every wit;
And while on fame's triumphant car they ride,
Some slave of mine be pinion'd to their side. Pope.

PI'NIONED.* adj. [from pinion.] Furnished with wings.

The wings of swans, and stronger-pinion'd rhyme. Dryden, Virg. Ecl.

PI'NIONIST.* n. s. [from pinion.] Any bird that flies.

He sung the outrage of the lazy drone
Upon the labouring bee, in strains so rare,
That all the flitting pinionists of air
Attentive sat. Browne, Brit. Past. i. 4.

PINK.† n. s. [pince, Fr. from pink, Dutch, an eye; whence the French word oeillet, i. e. eyelet; caryophillum, Lat.]

1. A small fragrant flower of the gilliflower kind.

In May and June come pinks of all sorts; especially the blush pink. Bacon, Ess.

2. An eye; commonly a small eye: as pink-eyed.

Come, thou monarch of the vine,
Plumpy Bacchus, with pink-eyne,
In thy vats our cares be drown'd. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

3. Any thing supremely excellent. I know not whether from the flower or the eye, or a corruption of pinacle.

I am the very pink of courtesy. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.
Tom Courtly is the pink of courtesy. Tatler, No. 204.
Then let Crispino, who was ne'er refus'd
The justice yet of being well abus'd,
With patience wait; and be content to reign
The pink of puppies in some future strain. Young.

4. A colour used by painters.

Pink is very susceptible of the other colours by the mixture; if you mix brown-red with it, you will make it a very earthy colour. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

5. [Pincke, Danish; pinque, Fr.] A kind of heavy narrow-sterned ship: hence the sea term pink-sterned.

This pink is one of Cupid's carriers;
Give fire, she is my prize. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

6. A fish. The minnow. Ainsworth.

To PINK.† v. a. [from pink, Dutch, an eye.]

1. To work in eyelet holes; to pierce in small holes.

A haberdasher's wife of small wit rail'd upon me, till her pink'd porringer fell off her head. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

The sea-hedgehog is enclosed in a round shell, handsomely wrought and pink'd. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Happy the climate, where the beau
Wears the same suit for use and show;
And at a small expence your wife,
If once well pink'd, is cloth'd for life. Prior.

2. To pierce with a sword; to stab; a cant expression.

They grew such desperate rivals for her, that one of them pink'd the other in a duel. Addison, Drummer.

To PINK. v. n. [pincken, Dutch; from the noun.] To wink with the eyes.

A hungry fox lay winking and pinking, as if he had sore eyes. L'Estrange.

PINKEY'ED.* adj. [pink and eye.] Having little eyes.

Them that were pink eyed and had verie small eies, they termed "ocellæ." Holland, Tr. of Pliny's Nat. Hist. B. xi.

PINKNEE'DLE.* n. s. [pink and needle.] A shepherd's bodkin. Sherwood.

PINKSTE'RNED.* adj. [pink and stern.] Having a narrow stern: applied to ships.

PI'NMAKER. n. s. [pin and maker.] He who makes pins.

PI'NMONEY.† n. s. [pin and money. "There is a very antient tax, in France, for providing the queen with pins, from whence the term of pin-money has been applied by us to that provision for married women, with which the husband is not to interfere." Barrington on the Statutes.] An annual sum settled on a wife to defray her own charges.

The woman must find out something else to mortgage, when her pinmoney is gone. Addison, Guardian.

It was stipulated, that she should have 400l. a year for pinmoney. Addison, Spect. No. 295.

Should a man, unacquainted with our customs, be told the sums which are allowed in Great Britain, under the title of pin-money, what a prodigious consumption of pins he would think there was in this island! Addison, Spect. No. 295.

The lawyers furnished the writings, in which, by the way, there was no pin-money; and they were married. Tatler, No. 231.

The beauties of Europe at last appeared; grace in their steps, and sensibility smiling in every eye.—They opened their pretensions with the utmost modesty; but unfortunately, as their orator proceeded, she happened to let fall the words, "house in town, settlement, and pin-money." These seemingly harmless terms had instantly a surprising effect: the genius of love, with ungovernable rage, burst from amidst the circle! Goldsmith, Ess. 23.

Pi'nnace. n. s. [pinasse, Fr. pinnacia, Italian; pinaça, Span.] A boat belonging to a ship of war. It seems formerly to have signified rather a small sloop or bark attending a larger ship.

Whilst our pinnace anchors in the Downs,
Here shall they make their ransom on the sand. Shakspeare.

For fear of the Turks' great fleet, he came by night in a small pinnace to the Rhodes. Knolles, Hist.

He cut down wood, and made a pinnace, and entered the South-sea. Heylyn.

I sent a pinnace or post of advice, to make a discovery of the coast, before I adventured my greater ship. Spelman.

Thus to ballast love,
I saw I had love's pinnace overfraught. Donne.

I discharged a bark, taken by one of my pinnaces, coming from cape Blanch. Ralegh, Apology.

A pinnace anchors in a craggy bay. Milton.

Swift as a swallow sweeps the liquid way,
The winged pinnace shot along the sea. Pope.

PI'NNACLE. n. s. [pinnacle, Fr. pinna, Lat.]

1. A turret or elevation above the rest of the building.

My letting some men go up to the pinnacle of the temple, was a temptation to them to cast me down headlong. King Charles.

He who desires only heaven, laughs at that enchantment, which engages men to climb a tottering pinnacle, where the standing is uneasy, and the fall deadly. Decay of Chr. Piety.

He took up ship-money where Noy left it, and, being a judge, carried it up to that pinnacle, from whence he almost broke his neck. Clarendon.

Some metropolis
With glistering spires and pinnacles adorn'd. Milton, P. R.

2. A high spiring point.

The slipp'ry tops of human state,
The gilded pinnacles of fate. Cowley.

To Pi'nnacle. v. a. [from pinnacle.] To build with pinnacles.

The pediment of the southern transept is pinnacled, not inelegantly, with a flourished cross. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 8.

Or some old fane, whose steeple Gothic pride,
Or pinnacled, or spir'd, would boldly rise. Mason.

Pi'nnage.* n. s. [from To pin.] Poundage of cattle. Huloet.

Pi'nnated.* adj. [pinnatus, Lat.] Formed like a wing. Applied by botanists to leaves.

Pi'nner.† n. s. [from pinna, Lat. or pinion.]

1. The lappet of a head-dress which flies loose. Dr. Jamieson objects to the derivation given by Dr. Johnson from pinna, or pinion: and says that it is more probably a French word; observing that, in the celebrated history of Prince Erastus, the term pignoirs occurs in such connexion as to indicate that some kind of night-dress for the head is meant, such as might anciently be used even by males: "Outre cela elle y mit plusieurs autres besonges de nuict, comme coiffes, couurchefs, pignoirs, oreilliers, &c." Hist. du Prince Erast. 1564. Dr. Jamieson adds, that he had not met with this word in any French dictionary. It has escaped this learned etymologist, that Cotgrave has the word pignoüer, a comb-case, (from the old Fr. pigner, to comb,) which is probably the convenience intended in the old history.

Her goodly countenance I've seen,
Set off with kerchief starch'd, and pinners clean. Gay.

An antiquary will scorn to mention a pinner or a night-rail, but will talk on the vitta. Addison on Anc. Medals.

2. A pinmaker. Huloet.

3. A pounder of cattle; a keeper of the pound. Huloet. A pinner is a shepherd in some parts of England, one who pins the fold. Warton.

Pi'nnock. n. s. [curruca.] The tom-tit. Ainsworth.

Pint. n. s. [pynt, Sax. pinte, Fr. pinta, low Lat.] Half a quart; in medicine, twelve ounces; a liquid measure.

Well, you'll not believe me generous, till I crack half a pint with you at my own charges. Dryden.

Pi'nules. n. s. In astronomy, the sights of an astrolabe. Dict.

Pi'ny.* adj. [from pine.] Abounding with pine-trees.

Their shout not that can pass,
Which the loud blast of Thracian Boreas
On piny Ossa makes, and bows amain
The rattling wood, or lets it rise again.
May, Luc. (1627,) B. 1.

Atlas, whose piny head, to storms expos'd,
Is bound about with clouds continually.
Fanshaw, Virg. Æn. B. 4.

Atlas, whose head, with piny forests crown'd,
Is beaten by the winds. Dryden, Virg. Æn. B. 4.

Pione'er.† n. s. [pionier, from pion, obsolete, Fr. pion, according to Scaliger, comes from peo for pedito, a foot soldier, who was formerly employed in digging for the army. A pioneer is in Dutch, spadenier, from spade, a spade; whence Junius imagines that the French borrowed padenier, which was afterwards called pioneer. Dr. Johnson.—Pion, the old French word for a foot-soldier, may be from the Indian term peon. See Pawn, and Peon. Our word was also pioner, and was rather a contemptuous expression. "Such a one is to be dismissed with punishment, or to be made some abject pioner." Davies, Art of War, 1619. "They shall remain in qualitie of pioners or scavengers." Laws and Ordn. of War, 1640.] One whose business is to level the road, throw up works, or sink mines in military operations.

Three try new experiments, such as themselves think good; these we call pioneers or miners. Bacon.

Well said, old mole, can'st work i' th' ground so fast?
A worthy pioneer. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

His pioneers
Even the paths, and make the highways plain. Fairfax.

Of labouring pioneers
A multitude with spades and axes arm'd,
To lay hills plain, fell woods, or vallies fill. Milton, P. R.

The Romans, after the death of Tiberius, sent thither an army of pioneers to demolish the buildings, and deface the beauties of the island. Addison on Italy.

Pi'oning.† n. s. Work of pioneers.

With painefull pyonings
From sea to sea he heap'd a mighty mound.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. x. 63.

Pi'ony.† n. s. [pionie, Sax. pæonia, Lat.] A large flower. See Peony.

PI'OUS. adj. [pius, Lat. pieux, Fr.]

1. Careful of the duties owed by created beings to God; godly; religious; such as is due to sacred things.

Pious awe that fear'd to have offended. Milton, P. L.

Learn
True patience, and to temper joy with fear
And pious sorrow. Milton, P. L.

2. Careful of the duties of near relation.

As he is not called a just father, that educates his children well, but pious; so that prince, who defends and well rules his people, is religious. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

Where was the martial brother's pious care?
Condemn'd perhaps some foreign shore to tread. Pope.

3. Practised under the appearance of religion.

I shall never gratify spightfulness with any sinister thoughts of all whom pious frauds have seduced. King Charles.

PI'OUSLY. adv. [from pious.] In a pious manner; religiously; with such regard as is due to sacred things.

The prime act and evidence of the christian hope is, to set industriously and piously to the performance of that condition, on which the promise is made. Hammond.

This martial present piously design'd,
The loyal city give their best lov'd king. Dryden.

Let freedom never perish in your hands!
But piously transmit it to your children. Addison, Cato.

See lion-hearted Richard, with his force
Drawn from the North, to Jury's hallow'd plain;
Piously valiant. Phillips.

PIP. † n. s. [pippe, Dutch; pepie, Fr. deduced by Skinner from pituita; but probably coming from pipio or pipilo, on account of the complaining cry.]

1. A defluxion with which fowls are troubled; a horny pellicle that grows on the tip of their tongues.

When murrain reigns in hogs or sheep,
And chickens languish of the pip. Hudibras.

A spiteful vexatious gipsy died of the pip. L'Estrange.

2. A spot on the cards. I know not from what original, unless from pict, painting: in the country, the pictured or court cards are called picts.

When our women fill their imaginations with pips and counters, I cannot wonder at a new-born child, that was marked with the five of clubs. Addison, Guardian.

3. A kernel in an apple. So children call kernels. Mortimer says the pippin is so called from the small spots or pips on the side of it. See PIPPIN.

To PIP. v. a. [pipio, Lat.] To chirp or cry as a bird.

It is no unfrequent thing to hear the chick pip and cry in the egg, before the shell be broken. Boyle.

PIPE. n. s. [pib, Welsh; pipe, Saxon.]

1. Any long hollow body; a tube.

The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold, and then
We powt upon the morning, are unapt
To give or to forgive; but when we've stuff'd
These pipes, and these conveyances of blood
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls. Shakspeare.

The part of the pipe, which was lowermost, will become higher; so that water ascends by descending. Wilkins.

It has many springs breaking out of the sides of the hills, and vast quantities of wood to make pipes of. Addison.

An animal, the nearer it is to its original, the more pipes it hath, and as it advanceth in age, still fewer. Arbuthnot.

2. A tube of clay through which the fume of tobacco is drawn into the mouth.

Try the taking of fumes by pipes, as in tobacco and other things, to dry and comfort. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

His ancient pipe in sable dy'd,
And half unsmok'd lay by his side. Swift.

My husband's a sot,
With his pipe and his pot. Swift.

3. An instrument of wind musick.

I have known, when there was no musick with him but the drum and the fife, and now had he rather hear the taber and the pipe. Shakspeare.

The solemn pipe and dulcimer. Milton, P. L.

Then the shrill sound of a small rural pipe,
Was entertainment for the infant stage. Roscommon.

There is no reason, why the sound of a pipe should leave traces in their brains. Locke.

4. The organs of voice and respiration; as, the wind-pipe.

The exercise of singing openeth the breast and pipes. Peacham.

5. The key or sound of the voice.

My throat of war be turn'd
Which quired with my drum, into a pipe
Small as an eunuch. Shakspeare, Coriol.

6. An office of the exchequer.

That office of her majesty's exchequer, we, by a metaphor, call the pipe, because the whole receipt is finally conveyed into it by the means of divers small pipes or quills, as water into a cistern. Bacon.

7. [Peep, Dutch; pipe, Fr.] A liquid measure containing two hogsheads.

I think I shall drink in pipe wine first with him, [Falstaff;] I'll make him dance. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

To PIPE. † v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To play on the pipe.

Merry Michael the Cornish poet piped thus upon his oaten pipe for merry England. Camden, Rem.

We have piped unto you, and you have not danced. St. Matt. xi. 17.

In singing, as in piping, you excel. Dryden.

Gaming goats, and fleecy flocks,
And lowing herds, and piping swains,
Come dancing to me. Swift.

2. To emit a shrill sound; to whistle.

His big manly voice,
Turning again toward childish treble, pipes
And whistles in his sound. Shakspeare, As you like it.

The winds, piping to us in vain Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

Rocking winds are piping loud. Milton, Il Pens.

To PIPE. † v. a. To play upon a pipe.

Pipe, or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped? 1 Cor. xiv. 7.

The raven hovers o'er my bier,
The bittern on a reed I hear
Pipe my elegy. Cartwright, Poem on Sadness, p. 221.

PI'PER. † n. s. [pipere. Sax. from pipe.]

1. One who plays on the pipe.

Pipers and trumpeters shall be heard no more in thee. Rev. xviii. 22.

2. A fish, so called in some parts of England, somewhat resembling a gurnet.

PI'PETREE. n. s. The lilac tree.

PI'PING. † adj. [from pipe. This word is only used in low language.]

1. Weak; feeble; sickly: from the weak voice of the sick.

I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun. Shakspeare.

2. Hot; boiling: from the sound of any thing that boils. Dr. Johnson. — It is also used metaphorically, with hot.

The threadbare scoff at devotion piping-hot seemeth to deny any use of musick. Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 484.

The honour thou hast got
Is spick and span new, piping-hot. Hudibras, i. iii.

What do you think of a nice pretty bit of ox-cheek, piping hot, and dressed with a little of my own sauce? Goldsmith, Ess. xi.

PI'PKIN. n. s. [diminutive of pipe, a large vessel.] A small earthen boiler.

A pipkin there like Homer's tripod walks. Pope.
Some officer might give consent
To a large cover'd pipkin in his tent. King.

PI'PPIN. n. s. [puppynghe, Dutch. Skinner.] A sharp apple.

Pippins take their name from the small spots or pips that usually appear on the sides of them: some are called stone pippins from their obdurateness; some Kentish pippins, because they agree well with that soil; others French pippins, having their original from France, which is the best bearer of any of these pippins; the Holland pippin and the russet pippin, from its russet hue; but such as are distinguished by the names of grey and white pippins are of equal goodness: they are generally a very pleasant fruit and of good juice, but slender bearers. Mortimer.

You shall see mine orchard, where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own graffing. Shakspeare.
Entertain yourself with a pippin roasted. Harvey.
The pippin-woman, I look upon as fabulous. Addison.
His foaming tusks let some large pippin grace,
Or midst those thund'ring spears an orange place. King.
This pippin shall another trial make;
See from the core two kernels brown I take. Gay.

PI'QUANCY.† n. s. [from piquant.]

1. Sharpness; tartness.

Generally we see the best and vigorous juices to salute our palates with a more agreeable piquancy and tartness.
Evelyn, Pomona, ch. 4.

2. Severity.

Commonly satirical taunts do owe their seeming piquancy, not to the speaker or his words, but to the subject and the hearers. Barrow, Serm. i. 186.

PI'QUANT. adj. [piquant, French.]

1. Pricking; piercing; stimulating to the taste.

There are vast mountains of a transparent rock extremely solid, and as piquant to the tongue as salt. Addison on Italy.

2. Sharp; tart; pungent; severe.

Some think their wits asleep, except they dart out somewhat that is piquant, and to the quick: that is a vein that would be bridled; and men ought to find the difference between saltness and bitterness. Bacon, Ess.
Men make their railleries as piquant as they can to wound the deeper. Gov. of the Tongue.

PI'QUANTLY. adv. [from piquant.] Sharply; tartly.

A small mistake may leave upon the mind the lasting memory of having been piquantly, though wittily, taunted. Locke.

PIQUE.† n. s. [pique, French.]

1. An ill will; an offence taken; petty malevolence.

He had never any the least pique, difference or jealousy with the king his father. Bacon, Hen. VII.
Men take up piques and displeasures at others, and then every opinion of the disliked person must partake of his fate.
Decay of Chr. Piety.
Out of a personal pique to those in service, he stands as a looker-on, when the government is attacked. Addison.

2. A depraved appetite. See PICA.

And though it have the pique, and long,
'Tis still for something in the wrong;
A women long, when they're with child,
For things extravagant and wild. Hudibras, iii. ii.

3. Point; nicety; punctilio.

Add long prescription of establish'd laws,
And pique of honour to maintain a cause,
And shame of change. Dryden.

4. A term at the game of piquet.

To PIQUE. v. a. [piquer, Fr.]

1. To touch with envy or virulency; to put into fret; to kindle to emulation.

Piqu'd by Protogenes's fame,
From Co to Rhodes Apelles came
To see a rival and a friend,
Prepar'd to censure or commend. Prior.

2. To offend; to irritate.

Why pique all mortals that affect a name?
A fool to pleasure, yet a slave to fame! Pope.
The lady was piqued by her indifference, and began to mention going away. Female Quixote.

3. [With the reciprocal pronoun.] To value; to fix reputation as on a point. [se piquer, Fr.]

Children, having made it easy to part with what they have, may pique themselves in being kind. Locke.
Men apply themselves to two or three foreign, dead, and which are called the learned, languages; and pique themselves upon their skill in them. Locke on Education.

To PIQUE.* v. n. To cause irritation.

This is a little nosegay of conceits, a very lump of salt: every verse hath something in it that piques. Tatler, No. 163.

To PIQUEE'R. v. a. See PICKEER.

PIQUEE'RER. n. s. A robber; a plunderer. Rather pickeerer.

When the guardian professed to engage in faction, the word was given, that the guardian would soon be seconded by some other piqueerers from the same camp. Swift.

PIQUE'T. n. s. [picquet, Fr.] A game at cards.

She commonly went up at ten,
Unless piquet was in the way. Prior.
Instead of entertaining themselves at ombre or piquet, they would wrestle and pitch the bar. Spectator.

PI'RACY.† n. s. [πειρατεία, Gr. piratica, Lat. piraterie, Fr. from pirate.]

1. The act or practice of robbing on the sea.

Our gallants, in their fresh gale of fortune, began to skum the seas with their piracies. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.
Now shall the ocean, as thy Thames, be free,
From both those fates of storms and piracy. Waller.
Fame swifter than your winged navy flies,
Sounding your name, and telling dreadful news
To all that piracy and rapine use. Waller.
His pretence for making war upon his neighbours was their piracies, though he practised the same trade. Arbuthnot.

2. Any robbery; particularly literary theft. See the second sense of PIRATE.

Whatever effect this piracy may have upon us, it contributed very much to the advantage of Mr. Philips.
Johnson, Life of J. Philips.

PI'RATE.† n. s. [πειρατὴς, Gr. pirata, Lat. pirate, French.]

1. A sea-robber.

Pirates all nations are to prosecute, not so much in the right of their own fears, as upon the band of human society. Bacon.
Relate, if business or the thirst of gain
Engage your journey o'er the pathless main,
Where savage pirates seek through seas unknown
The lives of others, vent'rous of their own. Pope.

2. Any robber; particularly a bookseller who seizes the copies of other men.

This poem [the Splendid Shilling] was written for his own diversion, without any design of publication. It was communicated but to me; but soon spread, and fell into the hands of pirates. It was put out, vilely mangled, by Ben Bragge; and impudently said to be corrected by the author!
Johnson, Life of J. Philips.

To PI'RATE. v. n. [from the noun.] To rob by sea.

When they were a little got out of their former condition, they robbed at land and pirated by sea. Arbuthnot.

To PI'RATE. v. a. [pirater, Fr.] To take by robbery.

They advertised, they would pirate his edition. Pope.

PIRA'TICAL. adj. [piraticus, Lat. piratique, Fr. from pirate.]

1. Predatory; robbing; consisting in robbery.

Having gotten together ships and barks, [they] fell to a kind of piratical trade, robbing, spoiling and taking prisoners the ships of all nations. Bacon, Hen. VII.

2. Practising robbery.

The errours of the press were multiplied by piratical printers: to not one of whom I ever gave any other encouragement, than that of not prosecuting them. Pope.

PIRA'TICALLY.* adv. [from piratical.] By piracy.

Those to whom I allude were of earlier date, and such as had been piratically taken and sold. Bryant on Troy.

PI'RRY.* n. s. The Scotch have pirr for a gentle breeze, which Dr. Jamieson refers to the Icel. byr, bir, a favourable wind. With us, pirry seems to have signified a rough gale or storm.

Not to be afraid of pirries, or great storms. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 55.

A pirrie came, and set my ship on sands. Mir. for Mag. p. 502.

PI'SCARY. n. s. A privilege of fishing. Dict.

PISCA'TION. n. s. [piscatio, Lat.] The act or practice of fishing.

There are four books of cynegeticks, or venation; five of halieuticks, or piscation, commented by Ritterhusius. Brown, Vulg. Err.

PI'SCATORY. adj. [piscatorius, Lat.] Relating to fishes.

On this monument is represented, in bas-relief, Neptune among the satyrs, to shew that the poet was the inventor of piscatory eclogues. Addison on Italy.

*PISCES. n. s. [Latin.] The twelfth sign in the zodiack; the fishes.

PISCI'VOROUS. adj. [piscis and voro.] Fisheating; living on fish.

In birds that are not carnivorous, the meat is swallowed into the crop or into a kind of antestomach, observed in piscivorous birds, where it is moistened and mollified by some proper juice. Ray on the Creation.

PISH.† interj. A contemptuous exclamation. This is sometimes spoken and written pshaw. I know not their etymology, and imagine them formed by chance. Dr. Johnson. — Pish and pshaw are the Sax. pæc, pæca, (from pæcan, to deceive,) pronounced pesh, pesha, (a broad; and are equivalent to the ejaculation trumpery! i. e. tromperie, Fr. from tromper, to deceive. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 370.

There was never yet philosopher
That could endure the toothach patiently;
However they have writ the stile of Gods,
And made a pish at chance or sufferance. Shakspeare.

She frowned and cried pish, when I said a thing that I stole. Spectator.

To PISH.† v. n. [from the interjection.] To express contempt.

Our very smiles are subject to construction; nay, sir, we cannot pish, but it is a favour for some fool or other! Beaum. and Fl. Wit without Money.

Artists and plans reliev'd my solemn hours;
I founded palaces, and planted bow'rs. Prior.

To Plan. v. a. [from the noun.] To scheme; to form in design.

Vouchsafe the means of vengeance to debate,
And plan with all thy arts the scene of fate. Pope.

Pla'nary. adj. Pertaining to a plane. Dict.

To PLANCH. v. a. [plancher, French.] To plank; to cover with boards; to patch.

Planche on a piece as broad as thy cap.
Com. of Gamm. Gurton's Needle, (1551.)

The planched floor, the barres, and chains.
Sir A. Gorges, Transl. of Lucan, (1614.)

Pla'nched. adj. [from planch.] Made of boards.

He hath a garden circummur'd with brick,
Whose western side is with a vineyard backt,
And to that vineyard is a planched gate,
That makes his opening with this bigger key. Shakspeare.

Pla'ncher.† n. s. [plancher, French.] A floor of wood. Not used, Dr. Johnson says. Grose describes it as the common term for the chamber floor in Norfolk.

The good wife had found out a privie place between two seelings of a plauncher. Tarleton, Newes out of Purgatorie.

Oak, cedar, and chesnut are the best builders; some are best for planchers, as deal; some for tables, cupboards, and desks, as walnuts. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The springs of the rest of the baths rise under them, and let in through holes of the planchers; for all the baths are wainscotted, the seats, sides, and bottom being made of fir.
Brown. Trav. p. 73.

Pla'nching.† n. s. In carpentry, the laying the floors in a building. Dict. and Dr. Johnson. In Devonshire, a wooden flooring. Grose.

The park is dispaiked, the timber rooted up, the conduit-pipes taken away, the roof made sale of, the planchings rotten, the walls fallen down. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

PLANE. n. s. [planus, Latin. Plain is commonly used in popular language, and plane in geometry.]

1. A level surface.

Comets, as often as they are visible to us, move in planes inclined to the plane of the ecliptick in all kinds of angles.
Bentley.

Projectils would ever move on in the same right line, did not the air, their own gravity, or the ruggedness of the plane on which they move, stop their motion. Cheyne.

2. [Plane, Fr.] An instrument by which the surface of boards is smoothed.

The iron is set to make an angle of forty-five degrees with the sole of the plane. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

To Plane. v. a. [planer, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To level; to smooth; to free from inequalities.

The foundation of the Roman causeway was made of rough stone, joined with a most firm cement; upon this was laid another layer of small stones and cement, to plane the inequalities of rough stone, in which the stones of the upper pavement were fixt. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. To smooth with a plane.

These hard woods are more properly scraped than planed.
Moxon, Mech. Ex.

Pla'ner.* n. s. [from plane; Fr. applaneur.] One who smooths with a plane. Sherwood.

Plane-tree. n. s. [platanus, Lat. plane, platane, French.]

The plane-tree hath an amentaceous flower, consisting of several slender stamina, which are all collected into spherical little balls, and are barren; but the embryos of the fruit, which are produced on separate parts of the same trees, are turgid, and afterwards become large spherical balls, containing many oblong seeds intermixed with down: it is generally supposed that the introduction of this tree into England is owing to the great lord chancellor Bacon. Miller.

The beech, the swimming alder, and the plane. Dryden.

PLA'NET. n. s. [planeta, Lat. from πλανάω, Gr. planete, Fr.]

Planets are the erratick or wandering stars, and which are not like the fixt ones always in the same position to one another: we now number the earth among the primary planets, because we know it moves round the sun, as Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus, and Mercury do, and that in a path or circle between Mars and Venus: and the moon is accounted among the secondary planets or satellites of the primary, since she moves round the earth: all the planets have, besides their motion round the sun, which makes their year, also a motion round their own axes, which makes their day; as the earth revolving so makes our day and night: it is more than probable that the diameters of all the planets are longer than their axes: we know 'tis so in our earth; and Flamsteed and Cassini found it to be so in Jupiter: Sir Isaac Newton asserts our earth's equatorial diameter to exceed the other about thirty-four miles; and indeed else the motion of the earth would make the sea rise so high at the equator, as as to drown all the parts thereabouts. Harris.

Barbarous villains! hath this lovely face
Rul'd like a wandering planet over me,
And could it not inforce them to relent. Shakspeare.

And planets, planet-struck, real eclipse
Then suffer'd. Milton, P. L.

There are seven planets, or errant stars in the lower orbs of heaven. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The Chaldeans were much devoted to astrological devices, and had an opinion that every hour of the day was governed by a particular planet, reckoning them according to their usual order, Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus, Mercury, Luna. Wilkins.

PLA'NETED.* adj. [from planet.] Belonging to planets.

Tell me, ye stars, ye planets; tell me, all
Ye starr'd and planeted inhabitants, what is it,
What are these sons of wonder! Young, Night Th. 9.

PLA'NETARY. adj. [planetaire, Fr. from planet.]

1. Pertaining to the planets.

Their planetary motions and aspects. Milton, P. L.

To marble and to brass such features give,
Describe the stars and planetary way,
And trace the footsteps of eternal day. Granville.

2. Under the domination of any particular planet.

Darkling they mourn'd their fate, whom Circe's power
That watch'd the moon and planetary hour,
With words and wicked herbs, from human kind
Had alter'd. Dryden.

I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and, I think, I have a piece of that leaden planet in me; I am no way facetious. Addison, Spect.

3. Produced by the planets.

Here's gold, go on;
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-vic'd city hang his poison
In the sick air. Shakspeare, Timon

We make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon and stars, as if we were villains by an enforced obedience of planetary influence. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

4. Having the nature of a planet; erratick.

We behold bright planetary Jove,
Sublime in air through his wide province move;
Four second planets his dominion own,
And round him turn, as round the earth the moon. Blackmore.

PLANE'TICAL.† adj. [from planet.] Pertaining to planets.

Add the two Egyptian days in every month, the interlunary and plenilunary exemptions, the eclipses of sun and moon, conjunctions and oppositions planetical. Brown.

Some planetical exhalation, or a descending star. Spencer on Prod. p. 39.

PLA'NETSTRUCK. adj. [planet and strike.] Blasted: sidere afflatus.

Wonder not much if thus amaz'd I look,
Since I saw you, I have been planetstruck;
A beauty, and so rare, I did descry. Suckling.

PLANIFO'LIOUS. adj. [planus and folium, Latin.] Flowers are so called, when made up of plain leaves, set together in circular rows round the centre, whose face is usually uneven, rough and jagged. Dict.

PLANIME'TRICAL. adj. [from planimetry.] Pertaining to the mensuration of plane surfaces.

PLANI'METRY. n. s. [planus, Lat. and μετρέω; planimetrie, Fr.] The mensuration of plane surfaces.

PLANIPE'TALOUS. adj. [planus, Lat. and πέταλον.] Flat-leaved, as when the small flowers are hollow only at the bottom, but flat upwards, as in dandelion and succory. Dict.

To PLA'NISH. v. a. [from plane.] To polish; to smooth. A word used by manufacturers.

PLA'NISPHERE.† n. s. [planus, Lat. and sphere.] A sphere projected on a plane; a map of one or both hemispheres.

There be two manners of this description [of the globe] according to art; the first by parallelogram, the other by planisphere. Gregory, Posthum. (1640,) p. 302.

PLANK.† n. s. [plancke, old French; planche, more modern.] A thick strong board.

They gazed on their ships, seeing them so great, and consisting of divers planks. Abbot, Descr. of the World.

The doors of plank were; their close exquisite,
Kept with a double key. Chapman, Odyss.

The smoothed plank new rubb'd with balm. Milton, P. L.

Some Turkish bows are of that strength, as to pierce a plank of six inches. Wilkins.

Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.

Be warn'd to shun the watry way,
For late I saw adrift disjointed planks,
And empty tombs erected on the banks. Dryden.

To PLANK. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover or lay with planks.

If you do but plank the ground over, it will breed saltpetre. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A steed of monstrous height appear'd;
The sides were plank'd with pine. Dryden.

PLA'NNER.* n. s. [from plan.] One who forms any plan or design.

PLANOCO'NICAL. adj. [planus and conus.] Level on one side and conical on others.

Some few are planoconical, whose superficies is in part level between both ends. Grew, Mus.

PLA'NOCONVEX. n. s. [planus and convexus.] Flat on the one side and convex on the other.

It took two object-glasses, the one a planoconvex for a fourteen feet telescope, and the other a large double convex for one of about fifty feet. Newton, Opt.

PLANT.† n. s. [planr, Saxon; plant, Fr. planta, Latin.]

1. Any thing produced from seed: any vegetable production.

What comes under this denomination, Ray has distributed under twenty-seven genders or kinds: 1. The imperfect plants, which do either totally want both flower and seed, or else seem to do so. 2. Plants producing either no flower at all, or an imperfect one, whose seed is so small as not to be discernible by the naked eye. 3. Those whose seeds are not so small, as singly to be invisible, but yet have an imperfect or staminous flower; i. e. such a one, as is without the petala, having only the stamina and the perianthium. 4. Such as have a compound flower, and emit a kind of white juice or milk when their stalks are cut off or their branches broken off. 5. Such as have a compound flower of a discous figure, the seed pappous, or winged with downe, but emit no milk. 6. The herbæ capitatæ, or such whose flower is composed of many small, long, fistulous or hollow flowers gathered round together in a round button or head, which is usually covered with a squamous or scaly coat. 7. Such as have their leaves entire and undivided into jags. 8. The corymbiferous plants, which have a compound discous flower, but the seeds have no downe adhering to them. 9. Plants with a perfect flower, and having only one single seed belonging to each single flower. 10. Such as have rough, hairy or bristly seeds. 11. The umbelliferous plants, which have a pentapetalous flower, and belonging to each single flower are two seeds, lying naked and joining together; they are called umbelliferous, because the plant, with its branches and flowers, hath an head like a lady's umbrella: [1.] Such as have a broad flat seed almost of the figure of a leaf, which are encompassed round about with something like leaves. [2.] Such as have a longish seed, swelling out in the middle, and larger than the former. [3.] Such as have a shorter seed. [4.] Such as have a tuberose root. [5.] Such as have a wrinkled, channelated or striated seed. 12. The stellate plants, which are so called, because their leaves grow on their stalks at certain intervals or distances in the form of a radiant star: their flowers are really monopetalous, divided into four segments, which look like so many petala; and each flower is succeeded by two seeds at the bottom of it. 13. The asperifolia, or rough leaved plants: they have their leaves placed alternately, or in no certain order on their stalks; they have a monopetalous flower cut or divided into five partitions, and after every flower there succeed usually four seeds. 14. The suffrutices, or verticilate plants: their leaves grow by pairs on their stalks, one leaf right against another; their leaf is monopetalous, and usually in form of an helmet. 15. Such as have naked seeds, more than four, succeeding their flowers, which therefore they call polyspermæ plantæ semine nudo; by naked seeds, they mean such as are not included in any seed pod. 16. Bacciferous plants, or such as bear berries. 17. Multisiliquous, or corniculate plants, or such as have, after each flower, many distinct, long, slender, and many times crooked cases or siliquæ, in which their seed is contained, and which, when they are ripe, open themselves and let the seeds drop out. 18. Such as have a monopetalous flower, either uniform or difform, and after each flower a peculiar seed-case containing the seed, and this often divided into many distinct cells. 19. Such as have an uniform tetrapetalous flower, but bear these seeds in oblong siliquous cases. 20. Vasculiferous plants, with a tetrapetalous flower, but often anomalous. 21. Leguminous plants, or such as bear pulse, with a papilionaceous flower. 22. Vasculiferous plants, with a pentapetalous flower; these have, besides the common calix, a peculiar case containing their seed, and their flower consisting of five leaves. 23. Plants with a true bulbous root, which consists but of one round ball or head, out of whose lower part go many fibres to keep it firm in the earth: the plants of this kind come up but with one leaf; they have no foot stalk, and are long and slender: the seed vessels are divided into three partitions: their flower is sexapetalous. 24. Such as have their fruits approaching to a bulbous form: these emit, at first coming up, but one leaf, and in leaves, flowers and roots resemble the true bulbous plant. 25. Culmiferous plants, with a grassy leaf, are such as have a smooth hollow-jointed stalk, with one sharp-pointed leaf at each joint, encompassing the stalk, and set out without any foot stalk: their seed is contained within a chaffy husk. 26. Plants with a grassy leaf, but not culmiferous, with an imperfect or staminous flower. 27. Plants whose place of growth is uncertain and various, chiefly water plants.

Butchers and villains,
How sweet a plant have you untimely cropt. Shakspeare.

Between the vegetable and sensitive province there are plant-animals and some kind of insects arising from vegetables, that seem to participate of both. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

The next species of life above the vegetable, is that of sense; wherewith some of those productions, which we call plant-animals are endowed. Grew, Cosmol.

It continues to be the same plant, as long as it partakes of the same life, though that life be communicated to new particles of matter, vitally united to the living plant, in a like continued organization, conformable to that sort of plants. Locke.

Once I was skill'd in every herb that grew,
And every plant that drinks the morning dew. Pope.
Some plants the sun-shine ask, and some the shade. Harte.

2. A sapling.

A man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Take a plant of stubborn oak,
And labour him with many a stubborn stroke. Dryden.

3. [Planta, Lat.] The sole of the foot.

To the low plants of his feet, his forme was altered. Chapman, Il. xvi.

Knotty legs, and plants of clay,
Seek for ease, or love delay. B. Jonson, Masque of Oberon.

To Plant. † v. a. [planto, Lat. planter, Fr. plantian, Saxon.]

1. To put into the ground in order to grow; to set; to cultivate.

Plant not thee a grove of any trees near unto the altar of the Lord. Deut. xvi. 21.

2. To procreate; to generate.

The honour'd gods the chairs of justice
Supply with worthy men, plant love amongst you. Shakspeare.

It engenders choler, planteth anger;
And better 'twere, that both of us did fast,
Than feed it with such overroasted flesh. Shakspeare.

3. To place; to fix.

The fool hath planted in his memory
An army of good words. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

In this hour,
I will advise you where to plant yourselves. Shakspeare.

The mind through all her powers
Irradiate, there plant eyes. Milton, P. L.

When Turnus had assembled all his powers,
His standard planted on Laurentum's towers;
Trembling with rage, the Latian youth prepare
To join the allies. Dryden, Æn.

4. To settle; to establish: as, to plant a colony.

Create, and therein plant a generation. Milton, P. L.

To the planting of it in a nation, the soil may be mellowed with the blood of the inhabitants; nay, the old extirpated, and the new colonies planted. Decay of Chr. Piety.

5. To fill or adorn with something planted: as, he planted the garden or the country.

Whether to plant a walk in undulating curves, and to place a bench at every turn where there is an object to catch the view; to make water run where it will be heard, and to stagnate where it will be seen; to leave intervals where the eye will be pleased, and to thicken the plantation where there is something to be hidden; demands any great powers of mind, I will not enquire. Johnson, Life of Shenstone.

6. To direct properly: as, to plant a cannon.

To PLANT. v. n. To perform the act of planting.

If you plant where savages are, do not only entertain them with trifles and jingles, but use them justly. Bacon.

To build, to plant, whatever you intend,
In all let nature never be forgot. Pope.

PLA'NTAGE. n. s. [plantago, Lat.] An herb, or herbs in general.

Truth tir'd with iteration,—
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon.
Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

PLA'NTAIN. n. s. [plantain, Fr. plantago, Lat.]

1. An herb.

The toad, being overcharged with the poison of the spider, as is believed, has recourse to the plantain leaf. More.

PLANTA'TION. n. s. [plantatio, from planto, Latin.]

1. The act or practice of planting.

2. The place planted.

As swine are to gardens and orderly plantations, so are tumults to parliaments. King Charles.

Some peasants
Of the same soil their nursery prepare,
With that of their plantation; lest the tree
Translated should not with the soil agree. Dryden.

Whose rising forests, not for pride or show,
But future buildings, future navies grow:
Let his plantations stretch from down to down,
First shade a country, and then raise a town. Pope.

Virgil, with great modesty in his looks, was seated by Calliope in the midst of a plantation of laurel. Addison.

3. A colony.

Planting of countries is like planting of woods; the principal thing, that hath been the destruction of most plantations, hath been the base and hasty drawing of profit in the first years; speedy profit is not to be neglected, as far as may stand with the good of the plantation. Bacon, Essays.

Towns here are few, either of the old or new plantations. Heylin.

4. Introduction; establishment.

Episcopacy must be cast out of this church, after possession here, from the first plantation of christianity in this island. King Charles.

PLA'NTED. participle. [from plant.] This word seems in Shakspeare to signify, settled; well grounded.

Our court is haunted
With a refined traveller of Spain;
A man in all the world's new fashion planted,
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain. Shakspeare.

PLA'NTER. n. s. [planteur, Fr. from plant.]

1. One who sows, sets, or cultivates; cultivator.

There stood Sabinus, planter of the vines,
nd studiously surveys his gen'rous wines. Dryden.

What do thy vines avail,
Or olives, when the cruel battle mows
The planters, with their harvest immature? Philips.

That product only which our passions bear,
Eludes the planter's miserable care. Prior.

2. One who cultivates ground in the West Indian colonies.

A planter in the West Indies might muster up and lead all his family out against the Indians, without the absolute dominion of a monarch, descending to him from Adam. Locke.

He to Jamaica seems transported,
Alone, and by no planter courted. Swift, Miscell.

3. One who disseminates or introduces.

The Holy Apostles, the first planters of christianity, followed the moral equity of the fourth commandment. Nelson.

Had these writings differed from the sermons of the first planters of Christianity in history or doctrine, they would have been rejected by those churches which they had formed. Addison.

PLA'NTING.* n. s. [plantung, Sax.] Plantation.

That they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord. Isaiah, lxi. 3.

They who take in the entire platform, and see the chain, which runs through the whole, and can bear in mind the observations and proofs, will discern how these propositions flow from them. Woodward.

PLA'TICK aspect. In astrology, is a ray cast from one planet to another, not exactly, but within the orbit of its own light. Bailey.

PLA'TINA.* n. s. [probably from the Span. plata, silver.] A metal but recently known; and which has been defined a metallick substance, analogous to the perfect metals. It is now considered as a perfect metal itself; and is of the colour of silver, but less bright; heavier than gold; nearly as fixed as gold when exposed to the fire, and not inferiour to it in ductility; experiencing no alteration in the air or water; next to iron the hardest of metals; and is very difficult to work. It is found in South America.

PLATO'NICAL.* } adj. Relating to the philosophy,
PLATO'NICK. } opinions, or school of Plato.

Away with those dotages of Platonical or anabaptistical communities! Let proprieties be, as they ought, constantly fixed where the laws and civil right have placed them. Bp. Hall, Christ Mystical, § 23.

Except the Platonick year, turning the wheel of all actions round about, bring the spoke of this holy war back again. Fuller, Holy War, p. 278.

Platonick love is nothing else,
But merely melancholy. Cleaveland, Poems, p. 59.

Another point in the Platonick philosophy, Virgil has made the groundwork of the greatest part in the piece we are now examining; having with wonderful art and beauty materialized (if I may so call it) a scheme of abstracted notions, and clothed the most nice refined conceptions of philosophy in sensible images, and poetical representations. Addison, Tatler, No. 154.

PLATO'NICALLY.* adv. [from Platonical.] After the manner of the philosopher Plato.

He resolved to make him a master-piece, and to mould him, as it were, Platonically, to his own idea. Wotton, Life of the D. of Buckingham.

PLA'TONISM.* n. s. The philosophy of Plato.

This Eternal Life I sing of, even in the midst of Platonism; for I cannot conceal from whence I am, viz. of Christ; but yet acknowledge, that God hath not left the heathen, Plato especially, without witness of himself. More, Song of the Soul, (1647,) Pref.

PLA'TONIST.* } n. s. One who follows the opinions
PLA'TONIZER. } and manner of Plato.

The Platonists and the Papists have been a little more rational in ordering their fancies, placing their imaginary purgatory in their way to heaven, not at the journey's end. Hammond, Works, iv. 448.

It was an opinion of the Platonists, that the souls of men having contracted in the body great stains and pollutions of vice and ignorance, there were several purgations and cleansings necessary to be passed through both here and hereafter, in order to refine and purify them. Addison, Tatler, No. 154.

Philo the Jew, who was a great Platonizer, calls the stars divine images, and incorruptible and immortal souls. Young on Idolatrous Corrupt. i. 109.

To PLA'TONIZE.* v. n. To adopt the opinions or assertions of Plato.

Hitherto Philo; wherein, after his usual wont, he platonizes; the same being in effect to be found in Plato's Timæus. Hakewill on Providence, p. 113.

PLATO'ON. n. s. [a corruption of peloton, Fr.] A small square body of musketeers, drawn out of a battalion of foot, when they form the hollow square, to strengthen the angles: the grenadiers are generally thus posted; yet a party from any other division is called a platoon, when intending too far from the main body. Military Dict.

In comely wounds shall bleeding worthies stand,
Webb's firm platoon, and Lumly's faithful band. Tickell.

They tow'rds the throne supreme,
Accountable, made haste, to make appear
With righteous plea, their utmost vigilance. Milton.

4. An apology; an excuse.

The fiend, with necessity,
The tyrant's plea, excus'd his devilish deeds. Milton.

Thou determin'st weakness for no plea. Milton.

When such occasions are,
No plea must serve; 'tis cruelty to spare. Denham.

Whoever argues in defence of absolute power in a single person, though he offers the old plausible plea, that, it is his opinion, which he cannot help, unless he be convinced, ought to be treated as the common enemy of mankind. Swift.

To PLEACH.† v. a. [plesser, Fr. πλέκω, Gr. See To PLAIT.] To bend; to interweave. A word not in use, Dr. Johnson says. But to pleach a hedge, is a common northern term for bind a hedge, and perhaps in other parts; meaning to bend down the branches so as to interweave them, and thus thicken the fence.

Would'st thou be window'd in great Rome, and see
Thy master thus, with pleach'd arms, bending down
His corrigible neck? Shakspeare.

Steal into the pleached bower,
Where honey-suckles ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter. Shakspeare.

To PLEAD.† v. n. [plédier, pléder, old Fr. plaider, modern. Spenser uses the pret. pled, instead of pleaded.]

1. To argue before a court of justice.

With him — came
Many grave persons that against her pled.
Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 43.

To his accusations
He pleaded still not guilty; and alleg'd
Many sharp reasons. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

O that one might plead for a man with God, as a man pleadeth for his neighbour! Job, xvi. 21.

Of beauty sing;
Let others govern or defend the state,
Plead at the bar, or manage a debate. Granville.

Lawyers and divines write down short notes, in order to preach or plead. Watts on the Mind.

2. To speak in an argumentative or persuasive way for or against; to reason with another.

I am
To plead for that, which I would not obtain. Shakspeare.

Who is he that will plead with me? for now if I hold my tongue, I shall give up the ghost. Job, xiii. 19.

If nature plead not in a parent's heart,
Pity my tears, and pity her desert. Dryden.

It must be no ordinary way of reasoning, in a man that is pleading for the natural power of kings, and against all compact, to bring for proof an example, where his own account founds all the right upon compact. Locke.

3. To be offered as a plea.

Since you can love, and yet your error see,
The same resistless power may plead for me,
With no less ardour I my claim pursue;
I love, and cannot yield her even to you. Dryden.

To PLEAD. v. a.

1. To defend: to discuss.

Will you, we shew our title to the crown?
If not, our swords shall plead it in the field. Shakspeare.

2. To allege in pleading or argument.

Don Sebastian came forth to intreat, that they might part with their arms like soldiers; it was told him, that they could not justly plead law of nations, for that they were not lawful enemies. Spenser on Ireland.

If they will plead against me my reproach, know that God hath overthrown me. Job, xix. 5.

3. To offer as an excuse.

I will neither plead my age nor sickness, in excuse of faults. Dryden.

PLEA'DABLE.† adj. [from plead. Fr. plaidoyable.] Capable to be alleged in plea.

A forest hath her court of attachments, swainmote court, where matters are as pleadable and determinable as at Westminster-hall. Howell, Lett. iv. 15.

There is something at least pleadable on this account. South, Serm. vii. 178.

I ought to be discharged from this information, because this privilege is pleadable at law. Dryden.

PLEA'DER.† n. s. [pléader, plédéour, ancient French; plaideur, modern.]

1. One who argues in a court of justice.

The pledour and the pley shall faile. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

What a thing to laugh at, to see a judge or serjeant at the law in a short coate garded and pounced after the galiarde fashion, or an apprentise of the law or pleader come to the barre with a Millayne or French bonnet on his head set full of aglets! Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 91.

The brief with weighty crimes was charg'd,
On which the pleader much enlarg'd. Swift, Miscell.

2. One who speaks for or against.

If you
Would be your country's pleader, your good tongue
Might stop our countryman. Shakspeare, Coriol.

The pleaders of scandal, like soldiers of fortune, are engaged in every quarrel, where they stake nothing against the peace, order, and decency of others, but only their private fancy, opinion, and dislike. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 138.

So fair a pleader any cause may gain. Dryden.

PLEA'DING. n. s. [from plead.] Act or form of pleading.

If the heavenly folk should know
These pleadings in the court below. Swift, Miscell.

PLEA'SANCE. n. s. [plaisance, Fr.] Gaiety: pleasantry; merriment. Obsolete.

The lovely pleasance and the lofty pride
Cannot expressed be by any art. Spenser.

Her words she drowned with laughing vain,
And wanting grace in uttering of the same,
That turned all her pleasance to a scoffing game. Spenser.

Oh that men should put an enemy into their mouths to steal away their brains! that we should with joy, pleasance, revel, and applause, transform ourselves into beasts. Shakspeare.

PLEA'SANT.† adj. [plaisant, French.]

1. Delightful; giving delight.

The gods are just, and of our pleasant vices
Make instruments to scourge us. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

What most he should dislike, seems pleasant to him;
What like, offensive. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

How good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell in unity! Psalms.

Verdure clad
Her universal face with pleasant green. Milton, P. L.

2. Grateful to the senses.

I ate no pleasant bread, neither came flesh nor wine in my mouth. Dan. x. 3.

Sweeter thy discourse is to my ear,
Than fruits of palm-tree pleasantest to thirst. Milton, P. L.

3. Good humoured; cheerful.

In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow,
Thou'rt such a touchy, testy, pleasant fellow. Addison.

When this quality [pleasantry] is conspicuous in a man who has, to accompany it, manly and virtuous sentiments, there cannot be any thing which can give so pleasing gratification, as the gaiety of such a person; but when it is alone, and serves only to gild a crowd of ill qualities, there is no man so much to be avoided as your pleasant fellow. Spectator, No. 462.

4. Gay; lively; merry.

Let neither the power nor quality of the great, nor the wit of the pleasant, prevail with us to flatter the vices, or applaud the prophaneness of wicked men. Rogers.

5. Trifling; adapted rather to mirth than use.

They, who would prove their idea of infinite to be positive, seem to do it by a pleasant argument, taken from the negation of an end, which being negative, the negation of it is positive. Locke.

PLEA'SANTLY.† adv. from pleasant.]

1. In such a manner as to give delight.

In sundry of his songes, he [lord Vaux] sheweth the counterfait action very lively and pleasantly. Puttenham, Art of Eng. Poesie, p. 51.

2. Gaily; merrily; in good humour.

King James was wont pleasantly to say, that the duke of Buckingham had given him a secretary who could neither write nor read. Clarendon.

3. Lightly; ludicrously;

Eustathius is of opinion that Ulysses speaks pleasantly to Elpenor. Broome.

PLEA'SANTNESS. n. s. [from pleasant.]

1. Delightfulness; state of being pleasant.

Doth not the pleasantness of this place carry in itself sufficient reward? Sidney.

2. Gaiety; cheerfulness; merriment.

It was refreshing, but composed, like the pleasantness of youth tempered with the gravity of age. South.

He would fain put on some pleasantness, but was not able to conceal his vexation. Tillotson.

PLEA'SANTRY. n. s. [plaisanterie, Fr.]

1. Gaiety; merriment.

The harshness of reasoning is not a little softened and smoothed by the infusions of mirth and pleasantry. Addison.

Such kinds of pleasantry are disingenuous in criticism, the greatest masters appear serious and instructive. Addison

2. Sprightly saying; lively talk.

The grave abound in pleasantries, the dull in repartees and points of wit. Addison, Spect.

To PLEASE. v. a. [placeo, Lat. plaire, Fr.]

Having extinguished all the distinctions betwixt nobility and plebeiance. Learned Summary on Du Bartas, (1621,) Pref.

PLEDGE.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson offers the Fr. pleige, and Ital. piaggia, as the original of our word; and as the old Fr. word is plage, or plege, some of the French etymologists pretend that it comes from the Lat plagæ, nets; because a surety, or pledged person, is entangled. Lacombe asserts that we borrow our word from the French. But Serenius derives pledge from the Sax. verb plihtan, spondere, oppignorare: pflegen, Germ. fidem dare. And thus also Mr. Tooke deduces pledge as the past participle, i. e. pleght, from plihtan. Mr. Brand inclines to the French etymology.]

1. Any thing put to pawn.

2. A gage; any thing given by way of warrant or security; a pawn.

These men at the first were only pitied; the great humility, zeal, and devotion, which appeared to be in them, was in all men's opinion a pledge of their harmless meaning. Hooker.

If none appear to prove upon thy person
Thy heinous, manifest and many treasons;
There is my pledge, I'll prove it on thy heart. Shakspeare.

That voice — their liveliest pledge
Of hope in fears and dangers. Milton, P. L.

Money is necessary both for counters and for pledges, and carrying with it even reckoning and security. Locke.

PLENIPOTE'NTIARY.* adj. Having the powers of a plenipotentiary.

Now blessings on you all, ye peaceful stars,
Which meet at last so kindly, and dispense
Your universal gentle influence,
To calm the stormy wind, and still the rage of wars:
Nor, whilst around the continent
Plenipotentiary beams ye sent,
Did your pacifick lights disdain
In their large treaty to contain
The world apart, o'er which do reign
Your seven fair brethren of great Charles his wain.
Cowley, Ode on the Rest. of K. Ch. II.

To PLE'NISH. v. a. [plenir, old French.] To replenish; to fill.

If thou beest for dainties, how art thou then for spread tables and plenished flagons?
Reeve, God's Plea for Nineveh, (1657.)

PLE'NIST. n. s. [from plenus, Lat.] One that holds all space to be full of matter.

He that is plentiful in expences, will hardly be preserved from decay. Bacon, Ess.

If it be a long winter, it is commonly a more plentiful year.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

When they had a plentiful harvest, the farmer had hardly any corn. L'Estrange.

Alcibiades was a young man of noble birth, excellent education, and a plentiful fortune. Swift.

PLE'NTIFULLY. adv. [from plentiful.] Copiously; abundantly.

They were not multiplied before, but they were at that time plentifully encreased. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Bern is plentifully furnished with water, there being a great multitude of fountains. Addison on Italy.

PLE'NTIFULNESS.† n. s. [from plentiful.] The state of being plentiful; abundance; fertility.

The right natural definition of a wise habit, is nothing else but a plentifulness and promptness, in the storehouse of the mind, of clear imaginations well fixed.
Wotton, Survey of Education.

PLE'NTY.† n. s. [plenté, old French; from plenus, Lat. "The plentee of faith." Wicliffe, Heb. x. from plenus, Lat. full.]

1. Abundance; such a quantity as is more than enough.

Peace,
Dear nurse of arts, plenties and joyful birth. Shakspeare.

What makes land, as well as other things, dear, is plenty of buyers, and but few sellers; and so plenty of sellers and few buyers makes land cheap. Locke.

2. Fruitfulness; exuberance.

The teeming clouds
Descend in gladsome plenty o'er the world. Thomson.

3. It is used, I think barbarously, for plentiful.

To grass with thy calves,
Where water is plenty. Tusser, Husbandry.

If reasons were as plenty as black berries, I would give no man a reason on compulsion. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

4. A state in which enough is had and enjoyed.

Ye shall eat in plenty and be satisfied, and praise the Lord.
Joel, ii. 26

Whose grievance is satiety of ease,
Freedom their pain, and plenty their disease. Harte.

PLE'ONASM.† n. s. [pleonasme, Fr. pleonasmus, Lat.] A figure of rhetorick, by which more words are used than are necessary.

The pleonasm, as used by these noble authors, is so far from obscuring or flattering the discourse, that it makes the sense intelligible and clear, and heightens the emphasis of the expression. Blackwall, Sacr. Class. i. 73.

Such poetry must abound so much in pleonasms and repetitions, that it is impossible to make them appear either forcibly or gracefully in English verse. Mason on Church Musick, p. 180.

Pleona'stical.* adj. [from pleonasm.] Belonging to the pleonasm; redundant.

The particle ὅτι is pleonastical in Acts, xi. 17. And we may believe for that reason is not found in several manuscripts and versions; but being in the major part, it ought to be retained in the text, especially since it is pleonastical in the most authentick and noble writers. Blackwall, Sacr. Class. i. 144.

Pleona'stically.* adv. [from pleonastical.] Redundantly.

The noblest classicks use this particle pleonastically. Blackwall, Sacr. Class. i. 142.

Plero'phory.* n. s. [πληροφορία, Gr.] Firm persuasion.

A plerophory of Antichrist's false doctrine. Shelford, Learned Discourses, (1635,) p. 317.

How have we known presumptuous spirits that have thought themselves carried with a plerophory of faith, when their sails have been swelled only with the wind of their own self-love. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 279.

We find, in Scripture, false prophets as much pretending plerophories, and strength of persuasion, as the true. Spencer on Vulg. Proph. p. 79.

Abraham had a plerophory, that, what was promised, God was able to perform. Barrow, vol. ii. S. 4.

Plesh. n. s. [A word used by Spenser instead of plash, for the convenience of rhyme.] A puddle; a boggy marsh.

Out of the wound the red blood flowed fresh,
That underneath his feet soon made a purple plesh. Spenser.

PLE'THORA. n. s. [from πλήθωρα, Gr.] The state in which the vessels are fuller of humours than is agreeable to a natural state of health; arises either from a diminution of some natural evacuations, or from debauch and feeding higher or more in quantity than the ordinary powers of the viscera can digest: evacuations and exercise are its remedies.

The diseases of the fluids are a plethora, or too great abundance of laudable juices. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Plethore'tick.† } Pletho'rick. } adj. [from plethora, Fr. plethorique. Dr. Johnson places the accent on the second syllable of plethorick, as Goldsmith also does. But it is now usually placed on the first.] Having a full habit.

The fluids, as they consist of spirit, water, salts, oil, and terrestrial parts, differ according to the redundance of the whole or of any of these; and therefore the plethorick are phlegmatick, oily, saline, earthy or dry. Arbuthnot.

At last the nation found, with fruitless skill,
Its former strength was but plethorick ill. Goldsmith, Traveller.

Ple'thory.† n. s. [plethore, Fr. from πληθώρα.] Fulness of habit.

The appetite falls down, like a horseleech, when it is ready to burst with putrefaction and an unwholsome plethory. Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1651,) p. 59.

In too great repletion, the elastick force of the tube throws the fluid with too great a force, and subjects the animal to the diseases depending on a plethory. Arbuthnot.

Ple'vin.† n. s. [plevin, old Fr. plevina, low Lat.] In law, a warrant or assurance. See Replevin. Dict.

PLEU'RISY. n. s. [πλευρῖτις, Gr. pleuresie, Fr. pleuritis, Lat.]

Pleurisy is an inflammation of the pleura, though it is hardly distinguishable from an inflammation of any other part of the breast, which are all from the same cause, a stagnated blood; and are to be remedied by evacuation, suppuration, or expectoration, or all together. Quincy.

Pleuri'tical.† } Pleu'ritick. } adj. [from pleurisy. Fr. pleuritique.]

1. Diseased with a pleurisy.

One is sick of the pleuritical stitches of envy; one of the contracting cramp of covetousness; another of the atrophy of unproficiency. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

The viscous matter, which lies like leather upon the extravasated blood of pleuritick people, may be dissolved by a due degree of heat. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Denoting a pleurisy.

His blood was pleuritical, it had neither colour nor consistence. Wiseman, Surgery.

Pliabi'lity.* n. s. [from pliable.] Flexibility; pliableness.

PLI'ABLE.† adj. [pliable, from plier, Fr. to bend.]

1. Easy to be bent; flexible.

Though an act be never so sinful, they will strip it of its guilt, and make the very law so pliable and bending, that it shall be impossible to be broke. South.

Whether the different motions of the animal spirits may have any effect on the mould of the face, when the lineaments are pliable and tender, I shall leave to the curious. Addison.

2. Flexible of disposition; easy to be persuaded.

Pliable she promised to be. More, Life of the Soul, iii. 47.

Pli'ableness. n. s. [from pliable.]

1. Flexibility; easiness to be bent.
2. Flexibility of mind.

God's preventing graces, which have thus fitted the soil for the kindly seeds-time, planted pliableness, humility in the heart. Hammond.

Compare — the ingenuous pliableness to virtuous counsels in youth, as it comes fresh and untainted out of the hands of nature, with the confirmed obstinacy in most sorts of sin, that is to be found in an aged sinner. South, Serm.

Pli'ancy. n. s. [from pliant.] Easiness to be bent.

Had not exercise been necessary, nature would not have given such an activity to the limbs, and such a pliancy to every part, as produces those compressions and extensions necessary for the preservation of such a system. Addison, Spect.

PLI'ANT. adj. [pliant, Fr.]

1. Bending; tough; flexile; flexible; lithe; limber.

An anatomist promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether the fibres may not be made up of a finer and more pliant thread. Addison, Spect.

2. Easy to take a form.

Particles of heav'nly fire,
Or earth but new divided from the sky,
And pliant still retain'd th' etherial energy. Dryden.

As the wax melts that to the flame I hold,
Pliant and warm may still her heart remain,
Soft to the print, but ne'er turn hard again. Granville.

3. Easily complying.

In languages the tongue is more pliant to all sounds, the joints more supple to all feats of activity, in youth than afterwards. Bacon, Essays.

Those, who bore bulwarks on their backs,
Now practise ev'ry pliant gesture,
Op'ning their trunk for ev'ry tester. Swift, Miscel.

4. Easily persuaded.

The will was then ductile and pliant to right reason, it met the dictates of a clarified understanding halfway. South.

Pli'antness. n. s. [from pliant.] Flexibility; toughness.

Greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, pliantness or softness. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

PLI'CA.* n. s. [Lat. plique, old Fr.] A disease of the hair, said to be almost peculiar to Poland; and called plica Polonica. "It begun first, not many years ago in Poland." – Bolton's Last Worke, 1633. p. 40.

Many diseases — altogether unknown to Galen and Hippocrates: as, small-pox, plica, sweating sickness, &c.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 6.

PLICA'TION.† } n. s. [plicatura, Lat. from plico, to PLI'CATURE. } fold. Dr. Johnson says, that plication is used somewhere in Richardson's Clarissa. It may be added, that it is an old French word. Of plicature Dr. Johnson has merely noticed the existence, without example.] Fold; double.

No man can unfold
The many plicatures so closely press'd.
More, Song of the Soul, i. i. 18.

PLI'ERS. n. s. [from ply.] An instrument by which any thing is laid hold on to bend it.

Pliers are of two sorts, flat-nosed and round-nosed; their office is to hold and fasten upon a small work, and to fit it in its place: the round-nosed pliers are used for turning or boring wire or small plate into a circular form. Moxon.

I made a detention by a small pair of pliers. Wiseman.

To PLIGHT.† v. a. [plihtan, Sax. See PLEDGE.]

1. To pledge; to give as surety.

He plighted his right hand
Unto another love, and to another land. Spenser.

Saint Withold ——
Met the night mare, and her ninefold,
Bid her alight,
And her troth plight. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

I again in Henry's royal name,
Give thee her hand for sign of plighted faith. Shakspeare.

Here my inviolable faith I plight,
Lo, thou be my defence, I, thy delight. Dryden.

New loves you seek,
New vows to plight, and plighted vows to break. Dryden.

I'll never mix my plighted hands with thine,
While such a cloud of mischiefs hangs about us. Addison.

2. To braid; to weave. [from plico, Lat. whence to ply or bend, and plight, pleight, or plait, a fold or flexure. Dr. Johnson. — But see To PLAIT.]

With a trewlove, plited many a folde,
She smote me through the very heart. Chaucer, Court of Love.

Her head she fondly would aguize
With gaudy girlonds, or flesh flowrets dight
About her neck, or rings of rushes plight. Spenser, F. Q.

I took it for a fairy vision
Of some gay creatures of the element,
That in the colours of the rainbow live,
And play i' the plighted clouds. Milton, Comus.

She [Boadicea] wore a plighted garment of divers colours.
Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 2.

PLIGHT.† n. s. [This word Skinner imagines to be derived from the Teut. plicht, office or employment; but Junius observes, that pliht, Saxon, signifies distress or pressing danger; whence, I suppose, plight was derived, it being generally used in a bad sense.]

1. Condition; state.

When as the careful dwarf had told,
And made ensample of their mournful sight
Unto his master, he no longer would
There dwell in peril of like painful plight. Spenser.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are.
Shakspeare.

Beseech your highness,
My women may be with me; for, you see,
My plight requires it. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

They in lowliest plight repentant stood
Praying. Milton, P. L.

Thou must not here
Lie in this miserable loathsome plight. Milton, S. A.

Most perfect hero tried in heaviest plight
Of labours huge and hard. Milton, Ode.

2. Good case.

Who abuseth his cattle and starves them for meat,
By carting or plowing, his gaine is not great;
Where he that with labour can use them aright,
Hath gaine to his comfort, and cattel in plight. Tusser.

When a traveller and his horse are in heart and plight, when his purse is full, and the day before him, he takes the road only where it is clean or convenient. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § xi.

3. Pledge; gage. [from To plight, to pledge.]

That lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry
Half my love with him, half my care and duty. Shakspeare.

4. A fold; a pucker; a double; a purfle; a plait. [from To plight, to braid.]

Yclad, for fear of scorching air,
All in a silken camus, lilly white,
Purfled upon with many a folded plight. Spenser.

5. A garment of some kind. Obsolete. Dr. Johnson. — Probably a mantle or plaid. See PLAID.

Because my wrack
Chanc't on his father's shore, he let not lack
My plight, or coate, or cloake, or any thing
Might cherish heat in me. Chapman.

PLI'GHTER.* n. s. [from plight.] A pledger; that which plights.

To let a fellow that will take rewards,
And say, God quit you, be familiar with
My playfellow, your hand; this kingly seal,
And plighter of high hearts! Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To PLIM.* v. n. To swell; to encrease in bulk. Grose cites this expression as peculiar to the Exmore dialect: but it is used in other parts of England, and is apparently a corruption of plump. So Cotgrave in V. Potelé, "plump, full, fleshy, plumme:" And hence plim: Thus, the bacon will plim in the pot.

PLINTH.† n. s. [πλίνθος, Gr. plinthe, Fr.] In architecture, is that square member which serves as a foundation to the base of a pillar; Vitruvius calls the upper part or abacus of the Tuscan pillar, a plinth, because it resembles a square tile: moreover, the same denomination is sometimes given to a thick wall, wherein there are two or three bricks advanced in form of a plat-band. Harris.

These edifices between every ninth or tenth row of plinths have a layer of straw, and sometimes the smaller branches of palms. Bryant, Analys. Anc. Myth. iii. 46.

To PLOD. v. n. [ploeghen, Dutch. Skinner.]

1. To toil; to moil; to drudge; to travel.

A plodding diligence brings us sooner to our journey's end, than a fluttering way of advancing by starts. L'Estrange.

He knows better than any man, what is not to be written; and never hazards himself so far as to fall, but plods on deliberately, and, as a grave man ought, puts his staff before him. Dryden, St. of Innocence.

The unletter'd christian, who believes in gross,
Plods on to heav'n, and ne'er is at a loss. Dryden.

Some stupid, plodding, money-loving wight,
Who wins their hearts by knowing black from white. Young.

2. To travel laboriously.

Rogues, plod away o'the hoof, seek shelter, pack.
Shakspeare.

If one of mean affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I
Glide thither in a day. Shakspeare.

Hast thou not held my stirrup?
Bare-headed, plodded by my foot-cloth mule,
And thought thee happy when I shook my head? Shakspeare.

Ambitious love hath so in me offended,
That barefoot plod I the cold ground upon,
With sainted vow my faults to have amended. Shakspeare.

3. To study closely and dully.

He plods to turn his am'rous suit
T' a plea in law, and prosecute. Hudibras.

She reason'd without plodding long,
Nor ever gave her judgement wrong. Swift, Miscell.

PLO'DDER. n. s. [from plod.] A dull, heavy laborious man.

Study is like the heaven's glorious sun,
That will not be deep search'd with saucy looks;
What have continual plodders ever won,
Save base authority from other's books? Shakspeare.

PLO'DDING.* n. s. [from To plod.] The act of studying closely and dully.

Universal plodding prisons up
The nimble spirits in the arteries;
As motion and long-during action tires
The sinewy vigour of the traveller. Shakspeare.

We can print here old John Buridane's ploddings upon the ethicks; but matters that entrench nearer upon true divinity, must be more strictly overseen. Dr. Prideaux to Abp. Usher, Lett. p. 399.

PLOT.† n. s. [In the first and second senses from plat. See PLAT.]

1. A small extent of ground.

It was a chosen plot of fertile land,
Amongst wide waves set like a little nest,
As if it had by nature's cunning hand
Been choicely picked out from all the rest. Spenser.

Plant ye with alders or willowes a plot,
Where yearly as needeth mo poles may be got. Tusser.

This liketh moory plots, delights in sedgy bowers. Drayton.

Many unfrequented plots there are,
Fitted by kind for rape and villainy. Shakspeare.

Were there but this single plot to lose,
This mould of Marcius, they to dust should grind it,
And throw it against the wind. Shakspeare.

When we mean to build,
We first survey the plot, then draw the model,
And when we see the figure of the house,
Then we must rate the cost of the erection. Shakspeare.

Weeds grow not in the wild, uncultivated waste, but in garden plots, under the negligent hand of a gardener. Locke.

2. A plantation laid out.

Some goddess inhabiteth this region, who is the soul of this soil; for neither is any less than a goddess, worthy to be shrined in such a heap of pleasures, nor any less than a goddess could have made it so perfect a plot. Sidney.

3. A form; a scheme; a plan. [plat, Teut. exemplar.]

The law of England never was properly applied unto the Irish nation, as by a purposed plot of government, but as they could insinuate and steal themselves under the same by their humble carriage. Spenser on Ireland.

4. [Imagined by Skinner to be derived from platform, but evidently contracted from complot, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — Plot is plighted as, a plighted agreement; any agreement, to the performance of which the parties have plighted their faith to each other. Mr. H. Tooke, Div. of Purl. ii. 129.] A conspiracy; a secret design formed against another.

I have o'erheard a plot of death upon him. Shakspeare.

Easy seems the thing to every one,
That nought could cross their plot, or them suppress. Daniel.

O think what anxious moments pass between,
The birth of plots, and their last fatal periods!
O 'tis a dreadful interval of time,
Made up of horrour all, and big with death. Addison.

5. An intrigue; an affair complicated, involved, and embarrassed; the story of a play, comprising an artful involution of affairs, unravelled at last by some unexpected means.

Nothing must be sung between the acts,
But what some way conduces to the plot. Roscommon.

Our author
Produc'd his play, and begg'd the night's advice,
Made him observe the subject and the plot,
The manners, passions, unities, what not? Pope.

If the plot or intrigue must be natural, and such as springs from the subject, then the winding up of the plot must be a probable consequence of all that went before. Pope.

They deny the plot to be tragical, because its catastrophe is a wedding, which hath ever been accounted comical. Gay.

6. Stratagem; secret combination to any ill end.

Wise to frustrate all our plots and wiles.

7. Contrivance; deep reach of thought.

Who says he was not
A man of much plot,
May repent that false accusation:
Having plotted and penn'd
Six plays to attend
The farce of his negociation. Denham.

To PLOT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To form schemes of mischief against another, commonly against those in authority.

The subtle traitor
This day had plotted in the council house
To murther me. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

The wicked plotteth against the just. Psalm xxxvii. 12.

He who envies now thy state,
Who now is plotting how he may seduce
Thee from obedience. Milton, P. L.

The wolf that round th' inclosure prowl'd
To leap the fence, now plots not on the fold. Dryden.

2. To contrive; to scheme.

The count tells the marquis of a flying noise, that the prince did plot to be secretly gone; to which the marquis answered, that though love had made his highness steal out of his own country, yet fear would never make him run out of Spain. Wotton.

To PLOT. v. a.

1. To plan; to contrive.

With shame and sorrow fill'd:
Shame for his folly; sorrow out of time
For plotting an unprofitable crime. Dryden.

2. To describe according to ichnography.

This treatise plotteth down Cornwall as it now standeth, for the particulars. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

PLO'TTER. n. s. [from plot.]

1. Conspirator.

Colonel, we shall try who's the greater plotter of us two; I against the state, or you against the petticoat. Dryden.

2. Contriver.

An irreligious moor,
Chief architect and plotter of these woes. Shakspeare.

PLO'VER. n. s. [pluvier, Fr. pluvialis, Lat.] A lapwing. A bird.

Of wild birds, Cornwall hath quail, rail, partridge, pheasant, and plover. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Scarce
The bittern knows his time: or from the shore,
The plovers when to scatter o'er the heath,
And sing. Thomson, Spring.

PLOUGH.† n. s. [ploᵹe, ploᵹ, plou, Sax. plog, Su. Goth. and Dan. ploegh, Teut. pleugh, Yorkshire dialect; pleuch, Scottish. Some derive this term, Dr. Jamieson says, from the Syr. pelak, aravit. Mr. H. Tooke pretends that it is the past participle of the Saxon pleᵹan, incumbere.]

1. The instrument with which the furrows are cut in the ground to receive the seed.

Till th' outlaw'd Cyclops land we fetcht; a race
Of proud-liv'd loiterers, that never sow,
Nor put a plant in earth, nor use a plow. Chapman.

Look how the purple flower, which the plow
Hath shorn in sunder, languishing, doth die. Peacham.

Some ploughs differ in the length and shape of their beams; some in the share, others in the coulter and handles. Mortimer.

In ancient times, the sacred plough employ'd
The kings and awful fathers. Thomson.

2. Tillage; culture of land.

3. A kind of plane. Ainsworth.

To PLOUGH. v. n. To practise aration; to turn up the ground in order to sow seed.

Rebellion, insolence, sedition
We ourselves have plough'd for, sow'd, and scatter'd,
By mingling them with us. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Doth the ploughman plough all day to sow? Is. xxviii. 24.

To PLOUGH. v. a.

1. To turn up with the plough.

Let the Volcians
Plough Rome and harrow Italy. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Should any slave, so lewd, belong to you;
No doubt you'd send the rogue, in fetters bound,
To work in Bridewell, or to plough your ground. Dryden.

A man may plough, in stiff grounds the first time fallow'd, an acre a day. Mortimer.

You find it ploughed into ridges and furrows. Mortimer.

2. To bring to view by the plough: with up.

Another of a dusky colour, near black; there are of these frequently ploughed up in the fields of Weldon. Woodward.

3. To furrow; to divide.

When the prince her funeral rites had paid,
He plough'd the Tyrrhene seas with sails display'd. Addison.

With speed we plough the watery way,
My power shall guard thee. Pope, Odyssey.

4. To tear; to furrow.

Let
Patient Octavia plough thy visage up
With her prepared nails. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

PLOUGH-ALMS.✻ n. s. [plou-almes, Sax.] Anciently every ploughland paid a penny to the church, called plough-alms. Cowel.

PLO'UGHBOY. n. s. [plough and boy.] A boy that follows the plough; a coarse ignorant boy.

A ploughboy that has never seen any thing but thatched houses and his parish church, imagines that thatch belongs to the very nature of a house. Watts, Logick.

PLOU'GHER.† n. s. [from plough.] One who ploughs or cultivates ground.

When the country shall be replenished with corn, as it will, if well followed; for the country people themselves are great ploughers and small spenders of corn: then there should be good store of magazines erected. Spenser.

The ploughers ploughed upon my back, they made long their furrows. Ps. cxxix. 3.

PLOU'GHING.✻ n. s. [from plough.] Operation by the plough.

They only give the land one ploughing, and sow white oats, and harrow them as they do black. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Feasts — celebrated by servants alone, when their plowing was over. Sheridan, Tr. of Persius, p. 67.

PLOUGHLA'ND.† n. s. [plough and land.]

1. A carucate. See CARUCATE.

In this book are entered the names of the manors or inhabited townships, the number of ploughlands that each contains, and the number of the inhabitants. Hale.

For the compiling this great roll of the kingdom, six shillings was raised upon every plowland. Temple, Intr. Hist. of Eng. p. 257.

2. A farm for corn.

Who hath a ploughland casts all his seed corn there,
And yet allows his ground more corn should bear. Donne.

PLOU'GHMAN. n. s. [plough and man.]

1. One that attends or uses the plough; a cultivator of corn.

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks,
The cuckow then on every tree. Shakspeare.

God provides the good things of the world, to serve the needs of nature by the labours of the ploughman. Bp. Taylor.

The careful plowman doubting stands. Milton, P. L.

Your reign no less assures the ploughman's peace,
Than the warm sun advances his increase. Waller.

The merchant gains by peace, and the soldier by war, the shepherd by wet seasons, and the ploughmen by dry. Temple.

Who can cease to admire
The ploughman consul in his coarse attire. Dryden.

One
My ploughman's is, t'other my shepherd's son. Dryden.

2. A gross ignorant rustick.

Her hand! to whose soft seizure
The cignet's down is harsh, and, spite of sense,
Hard as the palm of ploughman. Shakspeare.

3. A strong laborious man.

A weak stomach will turn rye bread into vinegar, and a ploughman will digest it. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

PLOUGHMO'NDAY. n. s. The monday after twelfth-day.

Ploughmonday next after that the twelfthtide is past,
Bids out with the plough, the worst husband is last. Tusser.

PLOU'GHSHARE. n. s. [plough and share.] The part of the plough that is perpendicular to the coulter.

As the earth was turned up, the ploughshare lighted upon a great stone; we pulled that up, and so found some pretty things. Sidney.

The pretty innocent walks blindfold among burning ploughshares without being scorched. Addison, Spect.

To PLUCK. v. a. [pluccian, Sax. plucken, Teut.]

1. To pull with nimbleness or force; to snatch; to pull; to draw; to force on or off; to force up or down; to act upon with violence. It is very generally and licentiously used, particularly by Shakspeare. It has often some particle after it, as down, off, on; away; up, into.

It seemed better unto that noble king to plant a peaceable government among them, than by violent means to pluck them under. Spenser on Ireland.

You were crown'd before,
And that high royalty was ne'er pluck'd off. Shakspeare.

Pluck down my officers, break my decrees,
For now a time is come to mock at form. Shakspeare.

Can'st thou not
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

When yet he was but tender bodied, when youth with comeliness plucked all gaze his way. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

I gave my love a ring;
He would not pluck it from his finger, for the wealth
That the world masters. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

If you do wrongfully seize Hereford's right,
You pluck a thousand dangers on your head. Shakspeare.

PLU'MMET.† n. s. [plomet, old French; plumbata, Latin.]

1. A weight of lead hung at a string, by which depths are sounded, and perpendicularity is discerned.

Deeper than did ever plummet sound,
I'll drown my book Shakspeare, Tempest.
Fly, envious Time! —
Call on the lazy leaden-stepping hours,
Whose speed is but the heavy plummet's pace. Milton, Ode.

2. Any weight.

God sees the body of flesh which you bear about you, and the plummets which it hangs upon your soul, and therefore, when you cannot rise high enough to him, he comes down to you. Duppa, Rules for Devotion.
The heaviness of these bodies, being always in the ascending side of the wheel, must be counterpoised by a plummet fastened about the pulley on the axis: this plummet will descend according as the sand doth make the several parts of the wheel lighter or heavier. Wilkins.

PLUMO'SITY. n. s. [from plumous.] The state of having feathers.

PLU'MOUS. adj. [plumeux, Fr. plumosus, Lat.] Feathery; resembling feathers.

This has a like plumous body in the middle, but finer. Woodward on Fossils.

PLUMP.† adj. [Of this word the etymology is not known. Skinner derives it from pomelé, Fr. full like a ripe apple; it might be more easily deduced from plum, which yet seems very harsh. Junius omits it. Dr. Johnson.— Some derive it from the Gr. πλέος, Lat. plenus, full. Serenius, from the Su. Goth. and Germ. plump, crassus, agrestis, heavy, coarse; which Wachter deduces from the Lat. plumbeus, leaden; and which therefore will not suit our plump. Dr. Johnson derives the old substantive plump, a cluster, from the adjective before us. Perhaps the adjective, however, is from the substantive; and the substantive a corruption of klompe, or klump, Teut. and Germ. globus terræ, massa, a clump, whence klompigh, solidus, et globosus, solid, and round. The corruption of c, or k into p is no violent one. Of the adjective Dr. Johnson's earliest example is from L'Estrange: but it was in use certainly before L'Estrange gave it. Cotgrave more than once uses it in translating French words which denote full, fat, fleshy, swollen, or round.] Somewhat fat; not lean; sleek; full, and smooth. Dr. Johnson has applied it only to the animal world: but it is not confined to that application; as the following example shews.

The ploughman now
Securely goes after the lazy plough;
Sows his plump seed, and from earth's pregnant womb
Expects the wish'd fruits, when the season's come.
Fanshaw, Pastor Fido, A. 4. S. 6.

The heifer, that valued itself upon a smooth coat and a plump habit of body, was taken up for a sacrifice; but the ox, that was despised for his raw bones, went on with his work still. L'Estrange.

Plump gentleman,
Get out as fast as e'er you can:
Or cease to push, or to exclaim.
You make the very croud you blame. Prior.

The famish'd cow
Grows plump and round, and full of mettle. Swift.

Plump.† n. s. A knot; a tuft; a cluster; a number joined in one mass. I believe it is now corrupted to clump. Dr. Johnson. — Perhaps itself is merely a corruption of clump. See what I have said in the etymology of the adjective.

England, Scotland, Ireland lie all in a plump together, not accessible but by sea. Bacon.

Warwick having espied certain plumps of Scottish horsemen ranging the field, returned towards the arriere to prevent danger. Hayward.

We rested under a plump of trees. Sandys.

Spread upon a lake, with upward eye
A plump of fowl behold their foe on high;
They close their trembling troop, and all attend
On whom the sowsing eagle will descend. Dryden.

To Plump. v. a. [from the adjective.] To fatten; to swell; to make large.

The particles of air expanding themselves, plump out the sides of the bladder, and keep them turgid. Boyle.

Plumpy Bacchus, with pink eyne,
In thy vats our cares be drown'd. Shakspeare.

Plu'my. adj. [from plume.] Feathered; covered with feathers.

A fiery globe
Of angels on full sail of wing flew nigh,
Who on their plumy vans receiv'd him soft
From his uneasy station, and upbore
As on a floating couch through the blithe air. Milton, P. R.

Appear'd his plumy crest, besmear'd with blood. Addison.

Sometimes they are like a quill, with the plumy part only upon one side. Grew, Cosmol.

To PLU'NDER.† v. a. [plundern, German; plonderen, Teut. Fuller considers our word as introduced into the language about 1642.]

1. To pillage; to rob in an hostile way.

Nebuchadnezzar plunders the temple of God, and we find the fatal doom that afterwards befel him. South, Serm.

2. To take by pillage.

Being driven away, and his books plundered, one of his neighbours bought them in his behalf, and preserved them for him till the end of the war. Fell.

Ships the fruits of their exaction brought,
Which made in peace a treasure richer far,
Than what is plunder'd in the rage of war. Dryden.

3. To rob as a thief.

Their country's wealth our mightier misers drain,
Or cross, to plunder provinces, the main. Pope.

Plu'nder. n. s. [from the verb.] Pillage; spoils gotten in war.

A poet is a maker, as the word signifies; and he who cannot make, that is invent, hath his name for nothing. Dryden.

The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling,
Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven;
And, as imagination bodies forth
The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen
Turns them to shapes, and gives to airy nothing
A local habitation and a name. Shakspeare.

Our poet's ape, who would be thought the chief,
His works become the frippery of wit,
From brocage he is grown so bold a thief,
While we the robb'd despise, and pity it. B. Jonson.

'Tis not vain or fabulous
What the sage poets, taught by the heavenly muse,
Story'd of old, in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimeras and enchanted isles. Milton, Comus.

Ah! wretched we, poets of earth, but thou
Wert living the same poet that thou'rt now,
While angels sing to thee their airs divine,
And joy in an applause so great as thine. Cowley.

Get thee glass eyes,
And, like a scurvy politician, seem
To see things thou dost not. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

And 't be any way, it must be with valour; for policy I hate: I had as lief be a Brownist as a politician. Shakspeare.

Although I may seem less a politician to men, yet I need not secret distinctions nor evasions before God. King Charles.

While emp'rick politicians use deceit,
Hide what they give, and cure but by a cheat,
You boldly show that skill, which they pretend,
And work by means as noble as your end. Dryden.

Coffee, which makes the politician wise,
And see through all things with his half-shut eyes,
Sent up in vapours to the baron's brain
New stratagems, the radiant lock to gain. Pope

2. A man of artifice; one of deep contrivance.

If a man succeeds in any attempt, though undertook with never so much rashness, his success shall vouch him a politician, and good luck shall pass for deep contrivance; for give any one fortune, and he shall be thought a wise man. South.

POLITI'CIAN.* adj. Cunning; playing the part of a man of artifice.
Your ill-meaning politician lords,
Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,
Appointed to await me thirty spies. Milton, S. A.

POLITICK. adj. [πολιτικός.]
1. Political; civil. In this sense political is almost always used, except in the phrase body politick.
Virtuously and wisely acknowledging, that he with his people made all but one politick body, whereof himself was the head; even so cared for them as he would for his own limbs. Sidney.
No civil or politick constitutions have been more celebrated than his by the best authors. Temple.
2. Prudent; versed in affairs.
This land was famously enrich'd
With politick grave counsel; then the king
Had virtuous uncles. Shakspeare, Rich. III.
3. Artful; cunning. In this sense political is not used.
I have trod a measure; I have flattered a lady; I have been politick with my friend, smooth with mine enemy. Shakspeare.
Authority followeth old men, and favour youth; but for the moral part, perhaps youth will have the preeminence, as age hath for the politick. Bacon.
No less alike the politick and wise,
All sly slow things, with circumspective eyes;
Men in their loose unguarded hours they take,
Not that themselves are wise, but others weak. Pope.

PO'LITICK.* n. s. A politician.
It is the weaker sort of politicks, that are the great dissemblers. Bacon, Ess. 6.
That which politicks and time-servers do for earthly advantages, we will do for spiritual. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

PO'LITICKLY. adv. [from politick.] Artfully; cunningly.
Thus have I politickly begun my reign,
And 'tis my hope to end successfully. Shakspeare.
'Tis politickly done,
To send me packing with an host of men. Shakspeare.
The dutchess hath been most politickly employed in sharpening those arms with which she subdued you. Pope.

PO'LITICKS. n. s. [politique, Fr. πολιτική.] The science of government; the art or practice of administring publick affairs.
Be pleas'd your politicks to spare,
I'm old enough, and can myself take care. Dryden.
It would be an everlasting reproach to politicks, should such men overturn an establishment formed by the wisest laws, and supported by the ablest heads. Addison.
Of crooked counsels and dark politicks. Pope.

To PO'LITIZE.* v. n. [from polity.] To play the politician. Not in use.
Let us not, for fear of a scarecrow, or else through hatred to be reformed, stand hankering and politizing, when God with spread hands testifies to us, and points us out the way to our peace. Milton, Of Ref. in Eng B. 2.

PO'LITURE.† n. s. [politure, Fr.] The gloss given by the act of polishing.
The table was a work of admirable politure.
Donne, Hist of the Septuagint, (1633,) p 45
Fair politure walk'd all her body over,
And symmetry flew thorough every part.
Beaumont, Psyche, p. 90.
The perfection of these hard materials consists much in their receiving the most exquisite politure. Evelyn, B. iii. ch. 3. § 15.

PO'LITY.† n. s. [πολιτεία.]
1. A form of government; civil constitution.
Because the subject, which this position concerneth, is a form of church government or church polity, it behoveth us to consider the nature of the church, as is requisite for men's clear and plain understanding, in what respect laws of polity or government are necessary thereunto. Hooker.
The polity of some of our neighbours hath not thought it beneath the publick care, to promote and reward the improvement of their own language. Locke on Education.
2. Policy; art; management.
It holds for good polity ever, to have that outwardly in vile estimation, that inwardly is most dear to us.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

POLL.† n. s. [polle, pol, Dutch, the top. From the Su. Goth. bollur, sphæra. Serenius.]
1. The head.
Look if the withered elder hath not his poll clawed like a parrot. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
2. A catalogue or list of persons; a register of heads.
Have you a catalogue
Of all the voices that we have procur'd,
Set down by the poll? Shakspeare, Coriol.
The muster file, rotten and sound, amounts not to fifteen thousand poll. Shakspeare.
To be taxed by the poll, to be sconced our headmoney.
Milton, Of Ref. in Eng. B. 2.
3. A fish called generally a chub; a cheven.

To POLL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To lop the top of trees.
The oft cutting and polling of hedges conduces much to their lasting. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
May thy woods oft poll'd, yet ever wear
A green, and, when she list, a golden hair. Donne.
2. In this sense is used polled sheep.
Polled sheep, that is sheep without horns, are reckoned the best breeders, because the ewes yean the polled lamb with the least danger. Mortimer, Husb.
3. To cut off hair from the head; to clip short; to shear.
Neither shall they shave, only poll their heads.
Ezek. xliv. 20.
4. To mow; to crop.
He'll go and sowle the porter of Rome gates by the ears: he will mow all down before him, and leave his passage polled. Shakspeare, Coriol.
5. To plunder; to strip; to pill.
They will poll and spoil so outrageously, as the very enemy cannot do much worse. Spenser on Ireland.
Take and exact upon them the wild exactions coignie, livery, and sorehon, by which they poll and utterly undo the poor tenants. Spenser on Ireland.
He told the people, that subsidies were not to be granted nor levied for wars in Scotland, for that the law had provided another course by service of escuage, much less when war was made but a pretence to poll and pill the people. Bacon.
Neither can justice yield her fruit with sweetness, amongst the briars and brambles of catching and polling clerks and ministers. Bacon.
6. To take a list or register of persons.
7. To enter one's name in a list or register.
Who ever brought to his rich daughter's bed,
The man that polled but twelve pence for his head? Dryden.
8. To insert into a number as a voter.
In solemn conclave sit, devoid of thought,
And poll for points of faith his trusty vote. Tickell.

PO'LLARD.† n. s. [from poll.]
1. A tree lopped.
Nothing procureth the lasting of trees so much as often cutting; and we see all overgrown trees are pollards or dottards, and not trees at their full height. Bacon.
2. A clipped coin.
The same king called in certain counterfeit pieces coined by the French, called pollards, crocars, and rosaries. Camden.
3. The chub fish. Ainsworth.
4. A stag that has cast his horns. Cockeram.
He had no horns, sir, had he?
— No, he's a pollard. Beaum. and Fl. Philaster.
5. A mixture of bran and meal. Ainsworth.

To PO'LLARD.* v. a. [from the noun.] To lop the top of trees; to poll.

Elm, and oak, frequently pollarded and cut, increases the bulk and circumference. Evelyn, B. iii. ch. 2. § 6.

We next traversed the rich vale of Garena, where the olive-trees grow to a great size, their luxuriant branches not being so closely pollarded as in France. Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, Let. 11.

Po'llen. n. s. A fine powder, commonly understood by the word farina; as also a sort of fine bran. Bailey.

Po'llenger. n. s. Brushwood. This seems to be the meaning of this obsolete word.

Lop for the fewel old pollenger grown,
That hinder the corne or the grasse to be mown. Tusser.

Po'ller.† n. s. [from poll.]

1. A barber; one who shears, clips, or shaves. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

2. A pillager; a robber; a plunderer.

The pillers, the pollers, and usurers. Confut. of N. Sharton, (1546,) sign. B. vi.

What is a whore but a poller of youth, ruin of men, a destruction, a devourer of patrimonies, a downfall of honour! Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 561.

3. One who votes or polls.

Po'llevil. n. s. [poll and evil.]

Pollevil is a large swelling, inflammation, or imposthume in the horse's poll or nape of the neck, just between the ears towards the mane. Farrier's Dict.

Polli'nctor.* n. s. [Latin; polincteur, old Fr.] One who prepares materials for embalming the dead; a kind of undertaker. Phillips.

The Egyptians had these several persons belonging to and employed in embalming, each performing a distinct and separate office, viz. a designer or painter, a dissector or anatomist, a pollinctor or apothecary, an embalmer or surgeon, and a physician or priest. Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 177.

Po'llock. n. s. [asellus niger.] A kind of fish.

The coast is plentifully stored with shellfish, sea-hedgehogs, scallops, pilchard, herring, and pollock. Carew.

To POLLU'TE.† v. a. [polluo, Lat. polluer, Fr.]

1. To make unclean, in a religious sense; to defile.

Hot and peevish vows—
They are polluted offerings, more abhorr'd
Than spotted livers in the sacrifice. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

Neither shall ye pollute the holy things of the children of Israel. Num. xviii. 32.

The land was polluted with blood. Ps cvi. 38.

2. To taint with guilt; to corrupt.

Wickedness hath exceedingly polluted the whole earth. 2 Esdr. xv. 6.

Thus will this latter, as the former world,
Still tend from bad to worse; till God at last,
Wearied with their iniquities, withdraw
His presence from among them, and avert
His holy eyes; resolving from thenceforth
To leave them to their own polluted ways. Milton, P. L.

3. To corrupt by mixtures of ill, either moral or physical.

Envy you my praise, and would destroy
With grief my pleasures, and pollute my joy? Dryden.

4. Milton uses this word in an uncommon construction, Dr. Johnson observes, but without specifying the meaning: it is, to pervert by pollution.

Unable to transfer
The guilt on him, who made him instrument
Of mischief, and polluted from the end
Of his creation. Milton, P. L.

Pollu'te.* part. adj. Polluted.

Unchaste and pollute. Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554,) T. 2. b.

She wooes the gentle air
To hide her guilty front with innocent snow;
And on her naked shame,
Pollute with sinful blame,
The saintly veil of maiden white to throw. Milton, Ode Nati

Pollu'tedness. n. s. [from pollute.] Defilement; the state of being polluted.

Pollu'ter. n. s. [from pollute.] Defiler; corrupter.

Ev'n he, the king of men,
Fell at his threshold, and the spoil of Troy
The foul polluters of his bed enjoy. Dryden, Æ

Pollu'tion. n. s. [pollution, Fr. pollutio, Lat.]

1. The act of defiling.

The contrary to consecration is pollution, which happens in churches by homicide, and burying an excommunicated person in the church. Ayliffe, Parergo

2. The state of being defiled; defilement.

Their strife pollution brings
Upon the temple. Milton P. L.

Polonai'se.* n. s. A kind of robe or dress, adopted from the fashion of the Poles, which has been worn by English women.

The habit of the women comes very near to that of the men a simple polonaise, or long robe edged with fur. Guthrie, of Polan

Polt-foot.* n. s. A crooked foot; a foot in any respect distorted.

The women are modest; shewing nothing but their polt-feet which from their infancy are straitened; so as to make them a la mode, many of them voluntarily become lame and crippled. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 376.

You come a little too tardy; but we remit that to your polt foot, we know you are lame. B. Jonson, Underwoods

Polt-foot.* } adj. Having distorted feet; club-
Polt-foo'ted. } footed.

What's become of Venus, and the polt-foot stinkard her husband? B. Jonson, Poetaster

I will stand close up, any where, to escape this polt-footed philosopher, old Smug here of Lemnos. B. Jonson, Mercury Vindicated

POLTRO'N.† n. s. [pollice truncato, from the thumb cut off; it being once a practice of cowards to cut off their thumbs, that they might not be compelled to serve in war. Saumaise. Menage derives it from the Italian poltro, a bed; as cowards feign themselves sick a bed: others, from poletro or poltro, a young unbroken horse. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. H. Tooke considers the pollice truncato as the origin of the word, and renders this derivation subservient to his political notions. He joins paltry with it; but without any further observation. See Div. of Purley, ii. 26. — It may perhaps have the same origin as paltry, viz. the Su. Goth paltor, rags, Teut. palt, a scrap; whence the application of paltry, or pelting, to what is mean, vile, contemptible. See Paltry, and Pelting. As to pollice truncato, it is far-fetched indeed. The Ital. poltro is rendered an idle fellow, as well as a coward; and poltronaccio, a lazy villain, a lout; as poltroneria also is idleness as well as cowardice. See Florio's World of Words, 1598. So the Fr. poltron is a base idle fellow, a knave, and a coward. See Cotgrave. Though the Ital. poltro, as a bed, might thus countenance the derivation, as it respects laziness or idleness; the northern words, paltor and palt, seem no improbable origin of this term of highest contempt.] A

Patience is for poltrons. Shakspeare.
They that are bruis'd with wood or fists,
And think one beating may for once
Suffice, are cowards and poltrons. Hudibras.
For who but a poltron possess'd with fear,
Such haughty insolence can tamely bear. Dryden.

Poltro'n.* adj. Base; vile; contemptible.
Hellish oaths and imprecations, that poltroon sin, that second part of Egyptian plague of frogs, and lice, and locusts, the basest that ever had the honour to blast a royal army. Hammond, Works, iv. 521.
He is like to be mistaken, who makes choice of a covetous man for a friend, or relieth upon the reed of narrow and poltron friendship. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 5.

Poltro'nery.* } n. s. [poltroneria, Ital. from poltron.] Cowardice; baseness.
Po'ltronry. }
There's no cowardice,
No poltrounery like urging why, wherefore,
But carry a challenge, die, and do the thing.
B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.
On such grounds as these, what false theology could not perfect, real poltronry would supply.
Warburton, Def. of Sermon xv.

Po'ly. n. s. [polium, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

Po'ly. [πολυ.] A prefix often found in the composition of words derived from the Greek, and intimating multitude: as polygon, a figure of many angles; polypus, an animal with many feet.

Polye'drical. } adj. [from πολυεδρος, polyèdre, Fr.]
Polye'drous. } Having many sides.
The protuberant particles may be spherical, elliptical, cylindrical, polyedrical, and some very irregular; and according to the nature of these, and the situation of the lucid body, the light must be variously effected. Boyle.
A tubercle of a pale brown spar, had the exterior surface covered with small polyedrous crystals, pellucid, with a cast of yellow. Woodward.

Polye'dron.* n. s. See Polyedrical. A multiplying-glass.
We have instances, wherein the same object may appear double, triple, or quadruple, to one eye, without the help of a polyhedron or multiplying-glass. Reid, Inq.

Poly'gamist.* n. s. [from polygamy.] One that holds the lawfulness of more wives than one at a time.
David — so great a polygamist. Hammond, Works, i. 592.

POLY'GAMY. n. s. [polygamie, Fr. πολυγαμια.] Plurality of wives.
Polygamy is the having more wives than one at once. Locke.
They allow no polygamy: they have ordained, that none do intermarry or contract, until a month be past from their first interview. Bacon.
He lived to his death in the sin of polygamy, without any particular repentance. Perkins.
Christian religion, prohibiting polygamy, is more agreeable to the law of nature, that is, the law of God, than mahometism, that allows it; for one man, his having many wives by law signifies nothing, unless there were many women to one man in nature also. Graunt.

Po'lyglot.* adj. [πολυγλωττος; polyglotte, Fr.] Having many languages.

It was prudently forborne in our new polyglot Bibles from the emendation of it, lest the Romanists should from thence have taken occasion to cavil with our edition for corrupting their copy. Knatchbull, Annot. on the N. Test. p. 180.

Po'lyglot.* n. s.
1. One who understands many languages.
The polyglot or linguist is a learned man. Howell.

Pomiferous. adj. [pomifer, Lat.] A term applied to plants which have the largest fruit, and are covered with thick hard rind, by which they are distinguished from the bacciferous, which have only a thin skin over the fruit.

All pomiferous herbs, pumpions, melons, gourds and cucumbers, unable to support themselves, are either endued with a faculty of twining about others, or with claspers and tendrils, whereby they catch hold of them. Ray on the Creation.

Other fruits contain a great deal of cooling viscid juice, combined with a nitrous salt, such are many of the low pomiferous kind, as cucumbers and pompions. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

PO'MMEL. † n. s. [pomellus, low Lat. globulous; pomeau, Fr. pomo, Ital. from pomum, Lat. an apple.]

1. A round ball or knob.

Like pommels round of marble clear,
Where azur'd veins well mixt appear. Sidney.

Huram finished the two pillars and the pommels, and the chapiters which were on the top of the two pillars. 2 Chron. iv. 12.

2. The knob that balances the blade of the sword. [Teut. appel vanden sweerde. Kilian.]

His chief enemy offered to deliver the pommel of his sword in token of yielding. Sidney.

3. The protuberant part of the saddle before.

The starting steed was seiz'd with sudden fright,
And bounding, o'er the pommel cast the knight. Dryden.
